Mr. BANKHEAD. That is entirely in line with what I am saying. Now, what does this amendment do? Here is an appropriation of nearly $1,000,000,000, and this amendment provides that the money shall not be used for the purposes named in this bill unless the Executive does so and so. If the Chair will get from the library the citations referred to on page 368 of the manual, he will find that those precedents justify a restriction upon the exercise of executive discretion and require the executive officers, before appropriations can be made available for certain purposes, to do certain things. Now, that is all that is involved in this proposition here.

Let me call the attention of the Chair to another recent decision. A few days ago when we had up the Army appropriation bill the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] offered an amendment providing that no part of the appropriation should be used for any purpose until all soldiers who had been drafted or volunteered for the military service should be restored to their former positions under the War Department, if found to be fit for this service. We had an elaborate argument here upon that proposition.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. LEVER. That was on a regular appropriation bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What is the difference?

Mr. LEVER. All the difference in the world. The Chair so held yesterday.

Mr. BANKHEAD. These restrictions upon regular appropriation bills are only put into effect by virtue of a rule of the House for that purpose, and they do not settle the general parliamentary question at all.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. RANDALL. In the case of the so-called food-production bill, that amendment was not a general appropriation bill, it was an amendment designed to encourage the production of food, and this is an amendment upon a bill designed to encourage the production of food.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Exactly.

Mr. RANDALL. That amendment which was added to the food-production bill required affirmative action by the President before the funds would be available.

Mr. BANKHEAD. And that amendment was held in order.

Mr. RANDALL. And that amendment was held in order.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman will permit me to answer the suggestion of the gentleman from California, it was held in order not because it was a limitation on the food-control act but because it was germane to that act, and this amendment is not germane to this bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But as far as that is concerned, we are dealing with the question of an embargo. That is the reason why this amendment was offered to this particular section. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that it refers to title 7 of the espionage bill. It also relates to the question of an embargo and the proclamation of the President to that effect. Now, I want to ask the Chair this question: If that was sound parliamentary law and sound precedent, how can the Chair differentiate in principle the decision on the Randall amendment to the bill that he referred to and this one here, which is a limitation, and is a direction to executive discretion before the money can be used for any purpose?

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman yield there for a suggestion?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Randall amendment was germane to the section and germane to the bill, because it was a food-production bill——

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I submit that the Chair is entitled to hear what the gentleman from Alabama is saying, and the interruption of the gentleman from Kentucky, and not have to have his time taken up in conversation with the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. Perhaps the Chair might get some valuable information from the Clerk; but the Chair, however, will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I am basing my contention that the point of order against this amendment is not well taken, because of the precedents I have cited and as a matter of logic. Here is an appropriation bill, and that can not be disputed. Has not this committee the right to put affirmative restrictions on the use of the money carried by that appropriation? What does this amendment do? It says that it shall not be used for the purposes named unless the Executive removes this embargo that he has had placed on the exportation of cotton under the authority of section 7 of the espionage act. It seems to me that it is a clear limitation on the Executive in the expenditure of the money which is placed in his hands to spend, and Congress says, "We will give you the money, but you shall not expend it unless you do another thing under the law which the same power gives to remove."

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, this bill before the House proposes to give the President certain powers by which the embargo may be laid on wheat. It is an appropriation bill carrying an appropriation which provides for the regulation and handling of this wheat. Why is it not germane when the special power is given the President of the United States to lay an embargo on wheat, in the same bill to lay an embargo on cotton? Why is not the same power that vests the power in the President of the United States on one agricultural product in the same bill that certain restrictions shall be laid on the President in the regulation of the embargo in agricultural products? That is what this amendment proposes to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman a question. If you can do this on a legislative bill, for this is not a regular appropriation bill, you could offer an amendment, stating that no part of this money should be used until peace should be proclaimed.

Mr. RAGSDALE. While it is true that might be done there is this distinction: This particular bill carries a particular power to regulate embargoes, and if the power is conveyed in the bill to the President of the United States to regulate the embargo of one particular agricultural commodity why is it not germane on the same bill to control and regulate the power that is delegated to the President to lay an embargo on another? In other words, the power that is delegated under this bill is the power to regulate embargoes. If you can give him the power of laying the embargo here, on one agricultural product, why is it not in order on another agricultural product? If it is germane to the bill in here to give him the power to control wheat exportation, if he is going to handle the subject matter of exportation of wheat in this bill, why is it not germane to say that he shall not restrict the importation of cotton? Why is it not on all fours with the delegation of power to regulate embargoes? It seems to me it is absolutely germane under these conditions.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the rule in reference to this matter is rather simple. Although the amendment is offered in the form of a limitation it derives no special value from its form because this is a legislative bill, and whatever you can do by limitation you can do directly. A limitation is frequently offered under a regular appropriation bill to accomplish something which you can not accomplish directly, by putting a limitation upon the expenditure of money appropriated, because the rule forbids positive legislation on such a bill. But the rule does not prohibit legislation on this bill. Any legislative proposition is in order on this bill which is germane to the bill. And even a limitation on an appropriation bill, while it is in the form of a limitation, must still be germane, if it is offered as an amendment, because the general rule of germaneness applies to all amendments.

Now, this bill carries in section 6 a provision in reference to the embargo, and if it stopped there and made a general provision for embargo, it would be quite in order to offer a specific amendment. But this section only applies to an embargo on wheat and wheat flour. It does not cover anything else, and in order to be germane an amendment must be in some way connected with the proposition of putting an embargo on wheat or wheat flour.

I shall not discuss that proposition with the Chair. The Chair has already held that a positive provision in reference to cotton is not germane to a bill regulating the price of wheat and wheat flour.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, if the present occupant of the Chair was in the House the other day when this matter was under consideration on the other side, he would know that the argument made by the very distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] at that time would answer the one he made just a moment ago. This is not legislation; it is merely a limitation. This does not require the doing of anything by the Congress, but simply says that the Executive shall do a certain act. It is certainly in line with what the Chair held in order when the gentleman from Virginia, Judge SAUNDERS, was in the chair when the so-called Randall prohibition amendment was under consideration, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] is entirely mistaken in stating that Judge SAUNDERS's ruling rested upon the germaneness of the proposed limitation. He simply held that if the Congress saw fit to impose certain restrictions upon the Executive before appropriations then being made should be available, it was within the power of Congress to do it. It was provided in that particular instance that he should issue a certain proclamation, and in this instance it is provided that he shall lift an embargo by proclamation. It was put on there by proclamation and he can take it off by proclamation, and to say that it was in order to put that limitation on the bill when the so-called Randall prohibition amendment was being considered and that it is not now, it strikes me would be an absurdity. This is a case, then, within the ruling of the gentleman who occupied the chair yesterday. It is as much germane to this particular bill as was the amendment to terminate the control of the railroads which was held in order yesterday to the bill then under consideration, when the Chair sustained the argument of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that it was germane and could be offered to the pending bill. That bill was, like this, merely to make good the guarantee of the Government against loss by certain instrumentalities that the Government had interfered with by previous legislation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Would the gentleman think it would have been in order yesterday to offer an amendment providing that the $750,000,000 could not be available until the President had turned back the telephone and telegraph systems of the United States?

Mr. CARAWAY. I have no doubt about it at all.

Mr. LEVER. Would it have been in order yesterday to provide that the appropriation should not be available until the embargo under consideration in this bill had been lifted?

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not have to answer that question before the Chair passes upon this; but if Judge SAUNDERS was correct in his ruling that limitations upon expenditures were always in order, it would have been in order to do that. It certainly ought not to be the desire of anyone to prevent the House from going on record as to whether or not it favors this limitation. We ought not to reverse all precedents.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair had no notice of this proposition coming up, and has, therefore, not had the time to give to its consideration which the importance of the question deserves, and he may have a very erroneous idea as to how this question ought to be decided. The Chair, however, thinks that there is a very great difference between a legislative bill like this and a general appropriation bill, in so far as many questions that come up in the shape of amendments are concerned. The ruling that has been referred to so often in this argument, by Judge SAUNDERS, who is a most excellent parliamentarian, and for whose judgment and opinion the Chair has the profoundest respect, was a ruling upon a general appropriation bill. The Chair may add also that while he does not know what was in the mind of the then occupant of the chair, it seems to me that there could be some reason why the Randall amendment might have been considered germane as an original proposition to that bill, because that was a food-conservation proposition, and it is contended by some that if you prohibit the manufacture of liquor you will conserve food.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair permit me to interrupt right there. I would like to make this suggestion to the Chair. This is not restricted to lint cotton, but it is to cotton, and that is just as much an article of food as anything produced in America.

The CHAIRMAN. This bill is a legislative bill, and has to do with wheat and wheat flour exclusively. The Chair does not think that any gentleman who has been contending that this amendment is in order would contend that it is germane to this bill. It seems to the Chair that contention could not be sustained for a moment, but if in order it must be upon some other ground.

Now, this amendment, if you undertook to put it on the ground that it is a limitation, which the Chair thinks would not be sound, but if you did could not be sustained upon that ground, because it requires a direct affirmative action of the President in relation to a matter foreign to the purposes of this bill before he could use any part of the money sought to be appropriated by this bill. In other words, if this amendment is in order, then you could put any other condition on the bill that the mind could possibly suggest. You could write into this bill this proposition: "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the purposes for which it is appropriated until and unless the President should sign and approve some certain bill which might be mentioned that Congress had passed but upon which the President had not yet acted"; or, as suggested by some gentlemen, you might say it should not be available until and unless the President would first turn back to the private owners the telegraph and telephone lines. You can imagine perhaps a hundred different restrictions which you could put upon this appropriation requiring a direct, affirmative, positive action by the Executive before he could use any part of the appropriation. It seems to the Chair that this is unthinkable. Now, the Chair does not think, in the first place, that this amendment is germane to this section of the bill. He thinks it violates the other rule already referred to. You are placing a condition and restriction that requires affirmative positive action upon the executive officers which has been ruled so repeatedly can not be done as a limitation upon a legislative bill. Therefore, the point of order is sustained; and the Chair wants to add that if any gentleman wants to appeal from the decision of the Chair and take the judgment of the committee, he will be glad to have him do so.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I most respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is: Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the decision of the committee?

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. HEFLIN and Mr. BANKHEAD) there were ayes 83, noes 21.

So the decision of the Chair stood as the decision of the committee.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Page 8, line 7, after the word "aforesaid," insert the following words: "To prevent the importation into the United States of wheat or wheat flour at a price lower than the United States price."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments to this section may close in——

Mr. ANDERSON. I have one amendment to the section which I desire to offer.

Mr. LEVER. I will say in 20 minutes.

Mr. MANN. That is practically 20 minutes over here.

Mr. LEVER. I will keep a few minutes for myself—15 minutes over there—and 5 minutes here.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from South Carolina designate the gentlemen to whom the time is to go?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] to have 5 minutes, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] to have 5 minutes, the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BAER] to have 2 minutes, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] to have 3 minutes, which makes 15, and I will reserve 5 for myself, 20 minutes in all.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto shall close in 20 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, if this amendment should be adopted, the section would read:

That whenever the President shall find it essential in carrying out the guaranties aforesaid to prevent the entry into the United States of wheat or wheat flour at a price lower than the American price—

And so forth.

It would place it in the power of the President to say to the speculator who would buy wheat in Canada at a low price and get it into the United States to have the benefit of the United States guaranteed price, or to the speculator who bought wheat at a low price in Argentina and paid the freight and got it up here and unloaded at the United States price, that that might be prevented. In a way it is a protective proposition. I assume that the members of the committee do not want to encourage unfair speculation, nor do they want to encourage any kind of speculation.

I assume they would not want to prefer in this matter the price fixing in the United States, Canadian low-priced wheat as against the American fixed-price wheat. They certainly would not want to prefer the Argentine low-priced wheat, brought into the United States merely that it might be unloaded on a level with the American fixed-price wheat. If this provision goes into the bill, while it might not direct the President, because we do not do that, it would at least suggest to the President, or give him the authority, to prevent those who were manipulating in wheat from utilizing the cheap world-price markets and benefiting, at the expense of the United States Treasury, from the United States high-priced wheat.

Mr. WELLING. Will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. WELLING. Does not the language in lines 9 and 10 of the bill prevent the importation of the wheat into the United States and give the same results you wish to reach?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have read that very carefully, and taking it in connection with the discretionary powers conferred on the President with respect to other things, it seemed to me there was a loophole and no inhibition. If we put in the language carried in my amendment, I think it would be clear that the intent of the legislature was to prevent the bringing into the United States of foreign wheat produced at a price less than the American fixed price and unloading it on the United States.

Mr. WELLING. But it says it shall be unlawful to import into the United States from any country named in such proclamation of the President.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the President shall find it essential to issue his proclamation. My amendment makes it a little stronger than that, and practically directs, without using the word "direct," protection against unfair importation.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, when the food-control act of August 10, 1917, which was the act that provided for the guaranteed price of wheat, was prepared, it was realized that the difficulty mentioned by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] might arise and be present, and a portion of section 14 was prepared and enacted for the purpose of meeting that trouble. And I have prepared an amendment to be offered at the end of section 6, on page 8, in the same words as the act of August 10, 1917. It is fuller and, in my opinion, it is better than is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield? Does the gentleman intend to read it? I have no preference as to words. The idea is to prevent speculation or unfair manipulation by those who are speculators in respect to cheap foreign grain.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I will read from the act. Immediately following the sentences relating to the guaranteed price the act says:

When the President finds that the importation into the United States of any wheat produced outside of the United States materially enhances or is likely materially to enhance the liabilities of the United States under guaranties of prices therefor made pursuant to law, and ascertains what rate of duty added to the then existing rate of duty on wheat and to the value of wheat at the time of importation would be sufficient to bring the price thereof at which imported up to the price fixed or prevailing under the direction of the President under or pursuant to this act, he shall proclaim such facts, and thereafter there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon wheat when imported, in addition to the then existing rate of duty, the rate of duty so ascertained; but in no case shall any such rate of duty be fixed at an amount which will effect a reduction of the rate of duty upon wheat under any then existing tariff law of the United States.

I have copied that, except I have changed a few words so as to make it applicable to section 6 of this bill. The exact words as they appear in section 14 of the act of August 10, 1917, would not quite fit.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman intend to offer that?

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes. I shall offer it at the very close of section 6. I think it will be proper to offer it as a substitute. I will say to the chairman of the committee that this is taken almost word for word—it is the same idea exactly—from the act of August 10, 1917.

Mr. LEVER. What is the matter with the provision in section 6 as it stands?

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It makes no provision whatever for the President fixing the price in any way of foreign wheat that is brought into this country. He may prohibit the importation altogether or bring it in under such regulations or orders that may possibly apply to price.

But my impression is that it does not apply to the price, and something such as I have offered would be the only thing that would authorize the President to fix or influence in any way the price of wheat brought into this country.

Mr. LEVER. Does the gentleman's proposition go to striking out section 6?

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. No. It adds to section 6, and leaves the section otherwise just as it is.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment in order that the substitute may be offered.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I send it up.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the substitute offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN].

Amendment offered by Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan: Page 8, line 25, at the end of line 25, add:

"Provided further, That when the President finds that the importation into the United States of any wheat produced outside of the United States materially enhances or is likely materially to enhance the liabilities of the United States under guaranties of prices therefor made pursuant to law, and ascertains what rate of duty added to the then existing rate of duty on wheat and to the value of wheat at the time of importation would be sufficient to bring the price thereof at which imported up to the price fixed or prevailing under the direction of the President under or pursuant to this act, he shall proclaim such facts and thereafter there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon wheat when imported in addition to the then existing rate of duty the rate of duty so ascertained; but in no case shall any such rate of duty be fixed at an amount which will effect a reduction of the rate of duty upon wheat under any then existing tariff law of the United States."

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment. Wherever the word "wheat" occurs I desire to offer an amendment immediately following, "wheat flour, semolina, or similar wheat products."

Mr. MANN. This amendment refers to the guaranteed prices that have been fixed. There has been no guaranteed price fixed on wheat flour, so that the gentleman's amendment, if it were agreed to, would not amount to anything, and it might complicate the others. I thought of the same thing.

Mr. ANDERSON. I will offer the amendment at a different place. The gentleman is right about it.

Mr. LEVER. Let me ask the gentleman from Michigan in my own time if the effect of his amendment, if it has an effect at all, would not be that it would result in a higher price of wheat to the consuming public of America?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It would give the President the authority to protect the price against improper manipulation or ruinous competition from abroad. My idea, as the gentleman knows, has always been that the Grain Corporation should let the people of the United States have the benefit of every reasonable and proper market price. But there are certain improper, unfair influences that might be at work, and I would give the President the power and authority to meet those and to overcome them.

Mr. LEVER. In such case would not the President have the power under section 6 to regulate imports in such a manner as to prevent that? If my friend will permit, the language of section 6 provides for that, I think.

Mr. MANN. Section 6 would limit him to forbidding importations entirely, and perhaps that is what he would do. But supposing he wanted to permit some importations, and wanted to have the importers pay a higher price in order to equalize the price, he would not have that authority under this bill. This simply gives him that authority. It leaves it wholly in the discretion of the President.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I will defer to my colleagues on the committee. If they see no objection to it, I shall not object to it. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. McLAUGHLIN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BAER: Page 8, line 13, after the word "wheat" strike out the word "or" and after the word "flour" insert the words "bran, shorts, and middlings."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that.

Mr. BAER. I hope the chairman of the committee will accept this amendment.

Mr. LEVER. I will say to my friend from North Dakota that the committee has repeatedly voted down that proposition.

Mr. BAER. I think it is a mistake to say that with this purpose in view the committee voted it down. This is an entirely different situation, and it serves an entirely different purpose. It is an entirely different proposition when it comes to imports and exports.

Mr. LEVER. If my friend will permit, I think that the committee has voted this proposition down repeatedly, for the reason that it wanted to take the hand of the Government off as many things as possible, and do it now. I think that is the fundamental reason for doing it.

Mr. BAER. The hand of the Government should not be taken off the by-products that are complementary to the wheat and absolutely germane to this subject. And, more than that, it is silly, it is foolish, for us to put an embargo on wheat and wheat flour and at the same time let people ship in products that are manufactured out of wheat flour. Let me cite one instance——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. LEVER. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BAER. I thought I had two minutes.

Mr. KING. The gentleman had two minutes under the agreement.

Mr. LEVER. I hope the gentleman will take it on the next paragraph.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANDERSON: Page 8, line 13, strike out the words "wheat and wheat flour" and insert in lieu thereof "wheat, wheat flour, semolina, and similar wheat products."

Mr. LEVER. I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment for the purpose of preventing an enhancement of the liabilities of the Government under its guaranty. Semolina is a product of wheat, produced in the manufacture of flour. In fact, it is the whole flour in coarse form, the first break of the rollers. If there were no power to embargo the importation of semolina it would be possible to bring wheat flour into the United States in the form of semolina, put it through the rollers, and make flour of it and sell it in competition in this country, and thus reduce the price and consequently enhance the liability of the Government. This does not inject any new element into the situation at all. It simply authorizes specifically an embargo against a product of wheat, which is flour, but is not generally and commercially known as flour. I will say that semolina is treated in exactly the same way in the last tariff act, always in connection with wheat flour.

Mr. LEVER. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order, for this reason: I do not care whether the importation of semolina is forbidden. You might say potato flour. They are making immense quantities of potato flour now, and are likely to. I think probably if you enlarge the scope of the bill by including a number of other things not included in the bill, that will open it up to adding anything else that anybody chooses to add to make it in order. While I have no special objection to adding cotton, I do not think we would get through to-night adding all the various things that Members might suggest.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON. I want to be heard on the point of order. This does not add any new product to this bill. Semolina is wheat flour in the process of manufacture. It is not a new product at all. I recognize the force of the argument of the gentleman, and I would immediately acquiesce in it if I thought that the addition of semolina to this bill was the addition of a new article which would have the effect of broadening the scope of the legislation. But the fact of the matter is that semolina is not a new product. As I said before, it is wheat flour in the process of manufacture. That is all it is.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I had supposed semolina was a form of flour and that it would probably be covered by the term "flour." I do not know whether the courts have passed upon the matter of importations or not. "Wheat flour" is a very broad term. I quite agree with the gentleman about the desirability of preventing the importation. I am inclined to think it would be covered by the term "wheat flour"; but if it is not, then it introduces a new subject matter, which would permit the introduction of any other.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from Illinois has covered what I intended to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That any person who knowingly or carelessly makes any false statement or representation to any officer, agent, or employee of the United States engaged in the performance of any duty under this act, calculated to secure any of the benefits of the aforesaid guaranties, or any person who willfully assaults, resists, impedes, or interferes with any officer, agent, or employee of the United States in the execution of any duty authorized to be performed by or pursuant to this act, or any person who knowingly violates any regulation or order issued pursuant to this act, except as otherwise made punishable in this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

Page 9, line 1, strike out the words "or carelessly."

The committee amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 4, strike out the words "calculated to secure" and insert "or falsely represents to any of said persons that the wheat he offers for sale was grown as a part of the 1918 or 1919 crops for the purpose of securing."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That for carrying out the aforesaid guaranties and otherwise for the purposes of this act, there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be available during the time this act is in effect, the sum of $1,000,000,000, of which not to exceed $3,000,000 may be used for such administrative expenses, including the payment of such rent, the expense, including postage, of such printing and publications, the purchase of such material and equipment, and the employment of such persons and means, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, as the President may deem essential. Any moneys received by the United States from or in connection with the disposal by the United States of wheat or wheat flour under this act may, in the discretion of the President, be used as a revolving fund for further carrying out the purposes of this act. Any balance of such moneys not used as part of such revolving fund shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 12, after the word "Receipts" insert "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay rent in the District of Columbia."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out in line 24, page 9, the figures "$3,000,000."

Mr. LEVER. That amendment has just been adopted.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Not in this section.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a committee amendment that has just been agreed to.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Here is a $1,000,000,000 proposition which we understand is to go to the protection of the farmers who raise wheat, and out of that $1,000,000,000, three millions of his money, and money of other citizens of the United States, is to be thrown in a lump sum into the hands of somebody not designated in this bill but to be appointed later by the President, possibly Mr. Hoover, now in Europe, to be used for the administrative expenses. While we have had some reports showing how the lump sums already appropriated for the uses of Mr. Hoover and others have been expended, if the people of the United States who pay the taxes had an opportunity to scan these reports as carefully as we have been able to scan them, perhaps there would be a protest arising up from the people themselves against this method of using the public funds.

I regret very much the opportunity is not now here to move to strike out this sum of $3,000,000 for these administrative officers whom we now do not know, who are not even in mind, and who might be obliged, like other administrative officers of the Government, to come to the Committee on Appropriations and present their claims in the regular way. Gentlemen have contended that this was not an appropriation bill against which a point of order would lie, but that it is a legislative bill and therefore is not subject to the same limitations as other bills, but under color of war in time of peace, just one lump sum of $3,000,000 is to be taken out of this tremendous sum of $1,000,000,000 of the farmers' money and all to be thrown wherever the administrative officers, when appointed, see fit to throw it.

I want to ask the gentleman from South Carolina, before my time expires, whether, in order to avoid a motion to recommit, since this has gotten into the bill and passed us rather hurriedly, without the sanction of the Appropriations Committee, which ought to have scrutinized this appropriation, he will agree that we shall have a vote on its staying in the bill?

Mr. MANN. We can not help but have a vote. This is an amendment which has been inserted. Let me make this suggestion to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], who is one of the brightest men I ever knew so far as reading things is concerned, that after all this is a limitation, and that if this item were not inserted here the entire $1,000,000,000 or any part of it could be used for administrative purposes. The language is—of which not to exceed $3,000,000 may be used for such administrative expenses.

Having appropriated $1,000,000,000 for the purposes of the act, without this limitation I am afraid they would expend a good deal more than the $3,000,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman and thank him for having pointed out the fact that it is a limitation, and since it is a limitation I should like to make it still further a limitation by reducing the amount from $3,000,000 to $1,000,000, so long as it does not have to pass the scrutiny of the Committee on Appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, let me say this to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that in the first place the Committee on Appropriations is not called upon to scrutinize an appropriation in an Agricultural bill. The Agricultural Committee has both legislative and appropriation powers, and I am inclined to think that it is about as careful in scrutinizing appropriations as any committee of the House. The suggestion was made, and they told us it was more or less of a guess, that it might be necessary to use $10,000,000 of this fund. I do not think it possible to calculate exactly how much will be needed for this purpose. If there is an enormous crop, with a large surplus on hand, then they will have to have one kind of organization; but if calamity overtakes the present wheat crop, then they will have to have another kind of organization, and expenditures would be relatively small. Legislating upon a prospect, as we are doing in this bill, it is impossible for the Committee on Agriculture or anyone else to so segregate this fund of $3,000,000. Besides, this is only a temporary proposition. The committee came to the conclusion as to the amount by getting from the reports which the Food Administration filed with Congress from time to time the expenditures of the Grain Corporation for the year 1918, and the committee found that the expenditures of the Grain Corporation for that period amounted to $1,794,273.96. Of course, the gentleman from Pennsylvania well knows that a great many of the men connected with the Grain Corporation are men who are working for a dollar a year, serving without salaries.

I seriously doubt that such a condition would be possible in the administration of this act. The amount of $3,000,000 is based upon the additional months, making in all 20 months instead of 12.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman knows that under section 2 the powers are very general.

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the Food Administration Grain Corporation is only a very small part of what is contemplated. My judgment is that it would have been better to limit the work contemplated by this bill to the Food Administration Grain Corporation, but a number of new agencies are contemplated, and it seems to me the Committee of the Whole ought to have an opportunity to vote upon the amount of money that is to be applied.

Mr. LEVER. The committee gave that careful consideration. I think the lawyers on the committee were divided in their opinion as to whether or not the grain corporation, after the termination of the emergency and the issuance of the proclamation of the President, would be a legal entity. Therefore we have tried to continue it by calling attention to it by name.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What objection would there be to my making a motion to substitute $1,500,000 for $3,000,000 in order to have a vote?

Mr. LEVER. I would not want to do that. I think the committee has gone into this as carefully as it is possible to do, and we have arrived at a calculation that is based on facts which have been reported to Congress.

The gentleman's proposition will be merely a guess, and he would not want that, I am sure.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman showed the expenses for the Grain Corporation for the year, I think, of $1,700,000. Why could not they do the work as cheaply for the coming year? Why would it be necessary to advance it to $3,000,000? It is proposed to continue employees—

Mr. LEVER. This is for the 12 months, and the appropriation in this bill is for 20 months.

Mr. RUBEY. If the gentleman will permit, I want to say to the gentleman that 19 men on this board are serving without pay.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will say to the gentleman frankly that those gentlemen who serve without pay on a board of this kind sometimes excite my suspicion.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Before this section is passed would it be in order for me to move to strike out $3,000,000 and insert $1,500,000?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the committee voted upon that proposition awhile ago.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The Chair feels it is out of order at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the opinion the Chair entertains.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Page 10, line 13, after the word "Columbia," insert: "Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay for wheat the growth of seed hereafter sown."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I am entirely conscious of the duty of the United States to stand by its guaranties, but I do not think that any damage has been sustained by any man who has not yet cultivated and sown his fields, and that spring wheat, amounting, I believe, to about 300,000,000 bushels in prospect, ought not to be guaranteed now. The food-control act is limited by its terms to the period of the war. It was intended as a war measure. When the President guaranteed the wheat crop of 1919 it was supposed the war would be going on now and that we would need that remedy. We find, now that the war is at an end, that the prospects of wheat are of tremendous crops, a tremendous surplus instead of being what it was then, a shortage which had to be taken care of. The United States guaranty under those circumstances and the President's proclamation ought to have been conditioned upon the termination of the war. It was not so conditioned, but notwithstanding this is a guaranty not already accepted, not already acted upon, but a proposition to pay for wheat hereafter to be sown. The winter wheat has been sown, and it ought to be paid for. The spring wheat ought not to be guaranteed at that price, for it puts into the market a tremendous amount of wheat which will reduce the price of all the wheat that is grown, winter wheat and all.

Mr. BAER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I have only five minutes. If the gentleman could get me more time, I would. This is a most important matter, and the United States should not pay to produce wheat that is not needed, which, because not needed, reduces the price of wheat throughout all the world and simply makes the Government pay for wheat which is not wanted and pay more for wheat than was wanted and which has been raised. The proper course for the President to take—and it ought to be left to his discretion; he is not here—is to say we would rather pay damages to anybody who has prepared his land in order to grow wheat than to guarantee his crop. We withdraw a proposition to guarantee, that has not been accepted because the wheat has not been planted; and we propose if there are any damages to pay them, but not to pay for the whole crop. That is my proposition, and I think it is fair.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto shall close in 20 minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I do not know what this debate is going to develop, and I am not quite willing it should be closed in 20 minutes.

Mr. LEVER. I will reserve five minutes to be divided between the gentleman from Minnesota and myself. Mr. Chairman, make it 25 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to 25 minutes? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I have always had the highest regard for the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER]. He has always stood up with such dignity and spoken with such frankness that I had the greatest esteem for him; but I am sorry to know that in his retiring hours in this Congress he proposes to break faith with the solemn obligations for which he voted himself. He now wants to repudiate an obligation which he voted for and is honor bound to carry out. When the price was fixed on wheat on August 10, 1917, wheat brought that day $3.07; that all the men that had raised winter wheat in Iowa and the other States had already been paid as high as $3.50 a bushel.

Then immediately the administration made a cut off, reduced the price to $2.20, and the farmers in the Northwest only received $1.92, while this bulk of wheat in the Nation filled the elevators, and the producers of winter wheat got $3.50. And, now, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] proposes, after cutting the farmer off at the large end of the horn, to cut him off at the small end, and say that he can not get the benefit of this guaranteed price. I say that the farmer has prepared the soil and has begun to prepare for this crop in other ways. Many acres have been plowed throughout the West for spring wheat. He has his seed wheat, and has it cleaned and treated and ready to put in the ground.

Mr. FOCHT. I would like to ask the gentleman if he is in favor of reciprocity with Canada?

Mr. BAER. I am not. And I want to say further, when I spoke on this amendment a few minutes ago, that if we do not put an embargo on this product of semolina and other products of wheat that there will be thousands of bakeries along the whole Canadian border that will be making cheaper wheat products out of Canadian wheat and trading across the border. Not long ago at Windsor, Canada, bread sold for 6 cents a loaf, while in Detroit, right across the river, bread was 11 cents a loaf. We must not only put an embargo on wheat and wheat flour but on all the products of wheat.

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Chairman, I had prepared an amendment which I intended to offer, couched in almost the same phraseology as the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER]. I want to say that I am heartily in favor of his amendment, and I believe that it is proper and ought to be adopted by the House.

We all know that the purpose of the guarantee was to stimulate the production of wheat, and that with the signing of the armistice, the cause which made it necessary, in our judgment and in the opinion of the President, ceased. Any man who had intelligence enough to grow wheat knew the reasons which were given for growing it in this great abundance had ceased. We all knew that the wheat was to be grown for the purpose of feeding our allies and our soldiers while they were engaged in whipping the Germans, and when the Germans were licked there was no reason for anybody to go ahead and plant extra area. [Applause.]

Now, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON], I believe, said that all the land was broken for spring wheat that was fit for plowing at that time. I do not know whether that was true or not. I was not out in that section, but I want to say this, if so, it was the first time they ever had it broken so early in the year. The fact is, I do not believe that all of it is broken yet. [Applause.]

The climate where I happen to come from certainly is as favorable to breaking land as that from which the gentleman comes, and in my section they are not done breaking it yet. They are not done breaking it for the spring grain in many instances. But suppose they have broken it. They knew the armistice had been signed. Let them go on and plant this land in corn or some other grain and take the chances along with the balance of us.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LARSEN. I regret I can not. I have not the time.

Mr. LOBECK. Do you plant wheat?

Mr. LARSEN. We usually grow corn or other products.

Mr. LOBECK. Do you grow wheat?

Mr. LARSEN. I grow a little. I am trying to do so at this time. I suppose I grow as much as does the gentleman from North Dakota, to say the least of it. That would not be very much. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio wants a reason for making good the guaranty on spring wheat. The best reason I know of is because we have agreed to make good the guaranty upon spring wheat. But let us see just "where we are at" on this proposition. We are assuming that we are going to have more wheat next year than we know what to do with. We may have a short crop of wheat this coming year, in spite of the large acreage. Russia will have no export wheat at all. Russia ordinarily exports 175,000,000 bushels. Roumania, Bulgaria, and Austria will have practically no export wheat. The crop of France will be at least one-fourth less than normal. If the present industrial conditions continue in Argentina, we may have no export wheat at all from Argentina. The world is very likely, indeed, to need every bushel of wheat that we can raise this year.

The question propounded by the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from New Jersey was asked of practically every man who appeared before our committee, and not one of them was willing to take the responsibility of saying that if the guaranty upon spring wheat was repudiated and it resulted in a reduction in the wheat acreage, we would be certain of a sufficient crop this next year to supply our own and the world's demands. It has already been stated that we cut the spring-wheat farmer off in 1917 when we made this guaranty. It is not fair, it is not just to consider this guaranty from the present standpoint of the Government. It ought to be considered from the standpoint of the conditions that existed at the time we made it. When we made it the world was suffering for wheat, and although the farmer had the best market he ever had in his life, we said to him, "We will not give you more than $2.20 a bushel for your wheat," and we said that in the face of the fact that wheat was then selling for $3.45 a bushel. If we squeeze the farmer at one end of the horn, as my friend from North Dakota [Mr. BAER] says, are we going to squeeze him at the other end, too? Having made a guaranty when it was advantageous for us to make it are we now going to say that we propose to repudiate that guaranty when it does not appear to us to be to our advantage to keep it?

Mr. WELTY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WELTY. Are you going to offer the farmer a bonus?

Mr. BAER. The gentleman from Ohio would have us rob him.

Mr. ANDERSON. I would keep the agreement that we made, and I do not think it is necessary to consider any other proposition.

Mr. WELTY. He has not accepted the guaranty, has he?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; he has. Now, when the farmer gets an advantage from this guaranty, it is not just to say that we will repudiate it, when we cut down his price at a time when it was to his advantage not to have the price fixed.

Mr. WELTY. You are not answering the question. If the farmer has not broken his ground——

Mr. ANDERSON. The farmer has broken his ground.

Mr. WELTY. And if he has not got the seed, there is no contract at all.

Mr. ANDERSON. He has broken the ground, and he has got the seed. If the gentleman knows anything at all about spring-wheat farming, he knows that in every case the land is always plowed in the fall, and the gentleman exposes his ignorance when he suggests anything else.

Mr. WELTY. Do you not think we ought to find out how much he has been damaged?

Mr. ANDERSON. It is impossible to do that. Every man who came before our committee testified that it was absolutely impossible to administer this wheat guaranty on that basis.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and fifteen Members present. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] is recognized.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I shall support the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey providing for the withdrawal of the guaranteed price from wheat not yet planted. The warrant for the appropriation of money to pay the guaranteed price for wheat, as contained in this bill, is founded upon the proposition that the Government owes to the wheat farmers, under the proclamation of the President, the duty of carrying out the promise contained in that proclamation. In other words, gentlemen base their argument upon the theory that the Government has bound itself by contract to pay to the wheat growers the guaranteed price. Before a contract can become an obligation there must be an agreement by both parties to the contract. Each party must assume obligations in consideration of assumed benefits to it accruing, from which it is not at liberty to withdraw.

The proclamation of the President simply amounted to an offer to the wheat farmers that if they did on the faith of that offer plant wheat and offer it for sale within a certain time the Government would guarantee the price stipulated in the proclamation. Until that offer shall have been accepted by the party to whom it was made the Government has both the moral and legal right to withdraw that offer, and until the spring wheat grower has planted his wheat and put it into the ground, and placed himself in such a position as he would not have assumed but for the President's proclamation, there is no acceptance on his part of the offer made by the Government, and consequently no obligation on the part of the Government to pay him the guaranteed price can be implied. [Applause.]

Mr. RUBEY. Does that apply to a law passed by Congress?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Absolutely, because all that the law amounted to was to authorize an agreement with the wheat growers.

Mr. RUBEY. It is not an agreement. Has the gentleman read the law?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I have, but not recently.

Mr. RUBEY. The law says that after the proclamation is issued thereupon the Government of the United States hereby guarantees every producer of wheat produced within the United States, and so forth. The United States made a solemn agreement with these wheat growers.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman is wrong about that. No matter how the law reads, the wheat growers could not be guaranteed the price until the President issued the proclamation. We should not appropriate the money of the taxpayers to pay these gentlemen until they have brought themselves within the terms of the law. [Applause.]

Mr. ALEXANDER. Where does the obligation of the Government begin? You say it does not begin when he plows the land and sows the wheat?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I did not say that.

Mr. ALEXANDER. When does the obligation of the Government begin? The statement is made that the man has plowed his ground and purchased the grain.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Suppose the man has plowed the ground and put no wheat in. Could the Government in any way require him to plant the wheat? He could plant corn tomorrow. The gentleman from Missouri is too good a lawyer to deny that a contract embodies the agreement on the part of both parties. And it is unilateral until it is accepted by the other party. He would plow his ground for whatever crops he might plant, and his seed wheat can be sold at the guaranteed price, which is as great as that which it cost him.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Suppose a man has a contract with another and the other man has carried out a part of it. You could not repudiate it.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman talks about repudiation. If this is simply a contract Congress can not repudiate it, because the Constitution guarantees that the obligation of contracts can not be impaired.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The Government could not——

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I do not yield further to the gentleman unless he observes the rules of the House.

You say the wheat grower who has not yet planted wheat should be paid because we have guaranteed the price of wheat. You have not guaranteed it until the party accepts the offer and actually makes the acceptance and brings himself within the terms of the offer. [Applause.]

The wheat grower who has not yet planted his wheat can not plead that he has been induced by the Government to plant wheat, on the faith of the proclamation, because he has not. in fact, planted the wheat either on the faith of the Government's offer or on the faith of anything else. He is at liberty to plant what he pleases and has not entered into any undertaking which the Government can enforce as against him. Who is there who will say that the wheat farmer of the Northwest is not free to plant corn or other crops instead of wheat and who is there that doubts that he will plant such crops if they offer promise of a greater money return than the guaranteed price for wheat?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to read from the President's proclamation:

The sums thus determined and fixed are guaranteed by the Government of the United States at the respective principal primary markets of the United States above mentioned to every producer of wheat of any grade so established under the United States grain standards act, upon the condition that said wheat is harvested in the United States during the year 1919, and offered for sale before the 1st day of June, 1920.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. No. If that is not a solemn obligation made by the President of the United States to the wheat growers I do not understand the proposition at all.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I can not yield now. I said this morning that the people of my district do not grow enough wheat to make biscuits for breakfasts every day in the year, but I would regard an affirmative vote upon this amendment absolutely a repudiation of a solemn obligation made by the President of the United States. I am surprised to find so many of my friends here taking the opposite view. This contract can not be fulfilled by the farmer until he has harvested his wheat and offered it to the Government agents. When he does that he has fulfilled his part of the contract, and he is entitled to the benefits of the contract. In every one of these war contracts that I have here on my desk you will find a cancellation clause, but there is no cancellation clause in this contract between the wheat grower, the spring-wheat grower and the fall-wheat grower, and the United States. It is an obligation; it is a contract that must be fulfilled or else repudiated, and I do not believe that this Congress will repudiate it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LEVER) there were—ayes 28, noes 75.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That the provisions of this act shall cease to be in effect whenever the President shall find that the emergency growing out of the war with Germany has passed and that the further execution of the provisions of this act is no longer necessary for its purposes, the date of which termination shall be ascertained and proclaimed by the President; but the date when this act shall cease to be in effect shall not be later than December 31, 1920. The termination of this act shall not affect any act done, or any right or obligation accruing or accrued, or any suit or proceeding had or commenced in any civil case before the said termination pursuant to this act; but all rights and liabilities under this act arising before its termination shall continue and may be enforced in the same manner as if the act had not terminated. Any offense committed and all penalties or liabilities incurred prior to such termination may be prosecuted or punished in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been terminated.

With the following committee amendment:

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to offer to the committee amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 1, after the word "than," strike out the words "October 15" and insert the words "the 1st day of June, 1920."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I want to take the chairman of this committee at his word. A short time ago he read what was the contract. He denominated the bond; he read from the President's agreement with the farmers of the country when he fixed the price of wheat, and in that agreement made by the President, sanctioned by the Congress, was the following language:

The sums thus determined and fixed are guaranteed by the Government of the United States at the respective principal primary markets of the United States above mentioned, to every producer of wheat of any grade so established under the United States grain-standards act, upon the condition that said wheat is harvested in the United States during the year 1919 and offered for sale before the 1st day of June, 1920.

That is the end of it. That is the agreement of the President—that we would take anything offered for sale before the 1st day of June, 1920. If I were disposed to vote against this bill I would vote against it upon the ground that it proposes to break the contract.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I would say to the gentleman, as I interpret this language, read in connection with the proclamation of the President making the guaranties, that I do not think the President under this act would have the power to buy a single bushel of wheat after June 1, 1920. The only thing that he could do under the proposed committee amendment would be to sell the wheat and the flour that the Grain Corporation or the agents might have on hand. The thought that the committee had in mind was that at the end of the wheat year, June 1, 1920, there might be a rather large surplus in the hands of the agents operating under this bill, and that it would be wise to allow them some time in which to dispose of it.

For instance, there might be some delay on the part of the farmers in bringing in their wheat under the guaranty. Now, that being true, the committee thought it was wisdom to make provision for continuing the life of this act so that the grain corporation or agency might dispose of the surplus wheat on hand after June 1, 1920. That is the only effect, in my judgment, of this provision here.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. This act does not create an obligation. The guaranty was given under another paper or on another paper. The obligation was incurred under a previous act and when the President acted. This is to carry out that agreement and that guaranty; but this date of October 15 is not put in here for the purpose and does not have the effect of extending the guaranty beyond the time fixed in the President's proclamation. It simply and solely is put in for the purpose, as the gentleman from South Carolina says, to enable the grain corporation to clean up its business and dispose of its surplus.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I am glad the two gentlemen, active as they are on the Committee on Agriculture, have attempted to explain this paragraph. I maintain that this is the crucial point in this whole discussion. We are asked to keep our faith, we are asked, Who will dare to violate our agreement with the farmers? I, for one, have answered I will not violate the agreement that I have made in part with the farmer. I am ready to keep it to the letter and yield up $1,000,000,000, which the people must pay in order that that faith shall be kept. Now, what is the faith, what is the contract, what is denominated in the bond? The President wrote it. He indicated in the bond he would take anything from them before the 1st day of June, 1920; that is the limit; that is presumed to be the end of the war; that is presumed to give time to every man who has planted his wheat and has wheat on hand to sell his wheat.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask that I may have five minutes additional.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto shall close in 12 minutes, the gentleman from Pennsylvania to have 5, the gentleman from Texas to have 5——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto shall close in 12 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WELLING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WELLING. Would not it meet the objection that the gentleman has if the language remained as amended by the committee, and insert after the period in line 2 the following proviso:

Provided, however, That no wheat shall be purchased by the Government under this act after June 1, 1920.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think probably that might meet the situation, but my amendment, perhaps, is the shorter way. I believe in keeping the bond——

Mr. WELLING. That would allow the Government to close up the business in wheat that it had purchased up to June 1.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. My point, I will say to the gentleman, is this: The committee—and I am not challenging its good faith—the committee had before it very earnest and very insistent men who were willing that this bond should be extended. They were willing that this agreement should be continued in order that the benefits derived from it should continue after the war, even after we had intended they should stop. Now, the committee yielded and had at first fixed December 31 as the date to which this bond may be extended, and then, evidently realizing that a mistake had been made, it still further shortened the time and brought it to October 15.

What was that for? To let negligent farmers bring in their stock? To let men who had large stocks in elevators take advantage of a delay in the situation? What was the purpose of it? Absolutely nothing, except to break the terms of the bond.

Now, those of you who are in favor of keeping this bond, those of you who say there must be no repudiation of the agreement of the farmer, those of you who insist that the letter of the bond shall be kept should vote to keep faith with the President and to see that the agreement that he made is fulfilled and that there is no extension of time. If I wanted to vote against this proposition I could vote against it now in good faith as it is written here, because it is a violation of the agreement as it is brought in in this bill. We should hold to the date that was fixed. If we are going to adhere to the agreement made by the President we should see that the terms of this bond are fulfilled and we should hold to the date fixed by him in his agreement, of June 1, 1920. Otherwise it is a breach of faith with the people of the United States.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I sought while this bill was before the committee to have this date fixed at June 1, 1920. As originally written in the bill it was December 31, 1920, and the compromise proposition was adopted in committee, which was October. I am still of the same opinion that I was when the matter was before the committee. We have many powers given in this bill that would not be given in peace times under any consideration. It is a relic of the war power, a licensing system that handles all the elevators; that handles the wholesale dealers; that handles the merchants of the Government; that has by the throat all of the business interests that handle wheat in any kind of relation. And those powers go in this bill that we are now seeking to enact into law, whereas the proclamation of the President says that we will purchase this wheat up to the 1st day of June, 1920. What wheat? The wheat that is now in the ground, and that will be in the ground within the next month or six weeks, and this is the year 1919. And yet you are going to extend these war powers in peace times up to October 15, 1920, unless you adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]. We ought not to do it. [Applause.] We are not dealing in good faith with the American people when we extend this war power beyond June, 1920. And I appeal to you, who are here representing the business interests of this country, that we should not invoke these war powers to go beyond the date of June 1. And if a farmer has not got the 1919 crop sold before January 1, 1920, he ought not to have the benefit of the guarantee that we are now making good in this legislation. [Applause.]

I want to see business gotten out from under these war powers. God knows I am tired of them, and I want to get out from under them just as soon as we can do it in good faith; and in good faith we must get out from under them, as far as this bill is concerned, on June 1, 1920, because when you steal a day beyond that you are stealing a time that does not belong to you or to me, but belongs to the American citizen. [Applause.]

Oh, here is the trouble. You let this wheat be hoarded up by this Food Administration or by this corporation that is going to handle it, and they can use it as a lever on the next year's crop, either to boost it or depress it. I say, let us take our medicine. Let us sustain the loss we have got to sustain, and get out from under it by June 1, 1920, and let us get back to a normal basis. [Applause.]

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute offered by Mr. RUBEY: Page 12, line 2, after the word "twenty," insert:
"Provided, That after June 1, 1920, neither the President nor any agency acting for him shall purchase or contract for the purchase of wheat or flour, but all operations of the President or his agents shall be confined to the sale of the wheat and flour on hand owned by or under the control of the Government."

Mr. MANN. The gentleman, I suppose, means after that date all power——

Mr. RUBEY. My amendment retains the date of October 15.

Mr. MANN. I understand; but after the date of June 1 all the power——

Mr. RUBEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I think his amendment does not so state.

Mr. RUBEY. I think so.

Mr. MANN. I think not.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. RUBEY. After June 1, 1920. Let the Clerk read it again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be read.

Mr. RUBEY. It says "after June 1, 1920." Let the Clerk read it again.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 2, after the word "twenty," insert: "Provided, That after June 1, 1920, neither the President nor any agency acting for him shall purchase or contract for the purchase of wheat or flour, but all operations of the President or his agents shall be confined to the sale of the wheat and flour on hand owned by or under the control of the Government."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. MANN. I think it would be desirable to say that after that date the powers of the President shall be confined, and so forth. Maybe not. I suppose it would be construed the way the gentleman means.

Mr. RUBEY. The date when this act shall cease to be in effect shall not be later than October 15, 1920, but after June 1, 1920, they shall not buy any wheat. They shall have from June 1, 1920, until October 15, 1920, to dispose of the wheat they may have on hand.

Mr. MANN. It probably would be so understood, but it is not clear.

Mr. LEVER. So far as I am concerned, I have no objection to the substitute.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. RUBEY. I will if I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri has not the floor.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Regular order!

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. By the law it provides that the producer of wheat shall receive the price guaranteed from any wheat produced in reliance upon this guaranty within the period not exceeding 18 months prescribed in the notice concerning the price. Now, the proclamation was issued on the 2d day of September, 1918. The 18 months end on the 2d day of March, 1920, and not in June. The proclamation of the President beyond June is void.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for one question?

Mr. RAGSDALE. The regular order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. I want to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] a question.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Missouri for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike from the substitute all after the word "flour."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, may we have it read as proposed?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment proposed by Mr. MANN: Strike out all after the word "flour" in the Rubey amendment, so that the amendment would read: "Page 12, line 2, after the word 'twenty,' insert: 'Provided, That after June 1, 1920, neither the President nor any agency acting for him shall purchase or contract for the purchase of wheat or flour.'"

Mr. WELLING. That is all right.

Mr. RUBEY. That is all right. I accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri whether——

Mr. RAGSDALE. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. All debate is exhausted. If the gentleman demands the regular order, the question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY].

The question was taken, and the amendment to the substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the substitute as amended.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I demand a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 72, noes 6.

So the substitute as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], as amended by the substitute offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY].

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. That if any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act shall for any reason be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder thereof, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, or part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 12, strike out lines 20 to 23, inclusive, reading as follows: "This act shall not be construed as repealing or limiting any other act of Congress, but shall be construed as an enlargement, addition to, and extension of all existing acts of Congress."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. It will save five minutes. I have absolutely no objection to striking out the section.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey: Page 12, strike out lines 13 to 19, inclusive.

The amendment was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LEVER the committee rose; and Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HAMLIN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 15796) to enable the President to carry out the price guaranties made to producers of wheat of the crops of 1918 and 1919 and to protect the United States against undue enhancement of its liabilities thereunder, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. LEVER. I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to the final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded on any of the amendments? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. LEVER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] desire to offer a motion to recommit?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, first, on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a motion to recommit.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have already stated that I desire to offer a motion to recommit.

Mr. ANDERSON. I desire to offer a motion to recommit.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I am opposed to the bill. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule laid down by the Speaker, with which, of course, the House is familiar, the Chair will ask, Is there anyone absolutely opposed to the bill?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I am.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the bill as it stands, without this amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman from Minnesota opposed to the bill?

Mr. ANDERSON. I am not opposed to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] absolutely opposed to the bill?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I am opposed to the bill without my amendment. I stand in the same situation as the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] offers a motion to recommit, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Agriculture with instructions to report the same forthwith with the following amendment:

Page 12, line 1, strike out the words "October 15" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the 1st day of June, 1920."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina moves the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman from North Carolina a question which interests most of the Members of the House. Is there any indication of an extra session, or can the gentleman inform the Members of the House, many of whom desire to prepare to leave Washington, of any extra-session program?

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not know of any at all. Of course, if any gentlemen in the Senate desire to defeat any of the appropriation bills, they can do it. They can hold them up over there, and if they do, of course, we will have to have an extra session; but I would say that there would not be much probability of an early session if the bond bill which we propose to pass in the House is passed by the Senate.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If there should be an extra session due to delay in the other body, can the gentleman indicate about how long a recess there will be?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; I can not. If the Senate does not pass the bond bill, we shall have to have an extra session I should say by April 1 anyway.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What does the gentleman think the chances are?

Mr. KITCHIN. If Congress passes the bond bill, it would not be necessary, so far as I can see, to have an extra session before May 15 or June 1.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I make this inquiry on behalf of Members of the House who desire to make appointments after March 4.

Mr. KITCHIN. I have no authority to make any statement whatever. I am just simply answering the gentleman's question as best I can.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, a great many gentlemen have requested that I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen who have spoken on the bill may have five legislative days in which to extend remarks on the subject matter of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that gentlemen who have spoken on the bill shall have five days in which to extend remarks upon the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, and I shall object if the gentleman includes a longer period than five days.

Mr. LEVER. I did that because it is customary to allow five days. I do not care myself, as I am not going to extend my remarks. What does the gentleman suggest?

Mr. WALSH. I have no suggestion to make.

Mr. LEVER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I make it three days.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman modifies his request to three days. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for leave of absence for one day, and in connection with that I want to say that, understanding this vote would be taken to-night, I had arranged to go away to-morrow. If I could be present, I would vote against the motion to recommit and vote for the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Dakota asks leave of absence for one day. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania) there were—ayes 11, noes 76.

So the motion to recommit was lost.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WILSON of Illinois, for six days, on account of illness.

To Mr. ALMON, for one day, on account of illness.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 22, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, February 22, 1919.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come to Thee with that exaltation of spirit that always arises in contemplation of the name and character and services of that great outstanding man in American history, the man whose character was forged in the furnace and wrought out our independence and formed the basis of our civil liberties. And as we think of him to-day we pray that we may lay emphasis upon that which he in his final address to his beloved countrymen made the point of supreme emphasis, that we can not maintain our free civil institutions without morality, and that we can not maintain fixed standards of morality without religion. So we pray Thee that we may follow his exhortation to develop our religious nature, give ourselves to the divince guidance, and work out that which was in his dream and purpose, the establishment of freedom and peace on the earth. For Christ's sake. Amen.

READING OF WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In accordance with the order of the Senate heretofore made, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] will now read Washington's Farewell Address.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (at the Secretary's desk). Mr. President, thus spake George Washington in his Farewell Address to the American people on September 17, 1796:

To the people of the United States.

FRIENDS AND FELLOW CITIZENS: The period for a new election of a citizen to administer the executive government of the United States being not far distant, and the time actually arrived when your thoughts must be employed in designating the person who is to be clothed with that important trust, it appears to me proper, especially as it may conduce to a more distinct expression of the public voice, that I should now apprise you of the resolution I have formed, to decline being considered among the number of those, out of whom a choice is to be made.

I beg you, at the same time, to do me the justice to be assured, that this resolution has not been taken, without a strict regard to all the considerations appertaining to the relation which binds a dutiful citizen to his country; and that, in withdrawing the tender of service which silence in my situation might imply, I am influenced by no diminution of zeal for your future interest; no deficiency of grateful respect for your past kindness; but am supported by a full conviction that the step is compatible with both.

The acceptance of, and continuance hitherto in the office to which your suffrages have twice called me, have been a uniform sacrifice of inclination to the opinion of duty, and to a deference for what appeared to be your desire. I constantly hoped that it would have been much earlier in my power, consistently with motives which I was not at liberty to disregard, to return to that retirement from which I had been reluctantly drawn. The strength of my inclination to do this, previous to the last election, had even led to the preparation of an address to declare it to you; but mature reflection on the then perplexed and critical posture of our affairs with foreign nations, and the unanimous advice of persons entitled to my confidence, impelled me to abandon the idea.

I rejoice that the state of your concerns external as well as internal, no longer renders the pursuit of inclination incompatible with the sentiment of duty or propriety; and am persuaded, whatever partiality may be retained for my services, that in the present circumstances of our country, you will not disapprove my determination to retire.

The impressions with which I first undertook the arduous trust, were explained on the proper occasion. In the discharge of this trust, I will only say that I have, with good intentions, contributed towards the organization and administration of the government, the best exertions of which a very fallible judgment was capable. Not unconscious in the outset, of the inferiority of my qualifications, experience, in my own eyes, perhaps still more in the eyes of others, has strengthened the motives to diffidence of myself; and, every day, the increasing weight of years admonishes me more and more, that the shade of retirement is as necessary to me as it will be welcome. Satisfied that if any circumstances have given peculiar value to my services they were temporary, I have the consolation to believe that, while choice and prudence invite me to quit the political scene, patriotism does not forbid it.

In looking forward to the moment which is to terminate the career of my political life, my feelings do not permit me to suspend the deep acknowledgment of that debt of gratitude which I owe to my beloved country, for the many honors it has conferred upon me; still more for the steadfast confidence with which it has supported me; and for the opportunities I have thence enjoyed of manifesting my inviolable attachment, by services faithful and persevering, though in usefulness unequal to my zeal. If benefits have resulted to our country from these services, let it always be remembered to your praise, and as an instructive example in our annals, that under circumstances in which the passions, agitated in every direction, were liable to mislead amidst appearances sometimes dubious, vicissitudes of fortune often discouraging—in situations in which not unfrequently, want of success has countenanced the spirit of criticism,—the constancy of your support was the essential prop of the efforts, and a guarantee of the plans, by which they were effected. Profoundly penetrated with this idea, I shall carry it with me to my grave, as a strong incitement to unceasing vows that heaven may continue to you the choicest tokens of its beneficence—that your union and brotherly affection may be perpetual—that the free constitution, which is the work of your hands, may be sacredly maintained—that its administration in every department may be stamped with wisdom and virtue—that, in fine, the happiness of the people of these states, under the auspices of liberty, may be made complete by so careful a preservation, and so prudent a use of this blessing, as will acquire to them the glory of recommending it to the applause, the affection and adoption of every nation which is yet a stranger to it.

Here, perhaps, I ought to stop. But a solicitude for your welfare, which cannot end but with my life, and the apprehension of danger, natural to that solicitude, urge me, on an occasion like the present, to offer to your solemn contemplation, and to recommend to your frequent review, some sentiments which are the result of much reflection, of no inconsiderable observation, and which appear to me all important to the permanency of your felicity as a people. These will be offered to you with the more freedom, as you can only see in them the disinterested warnings of a parting friend, who can possibly have no personal motive to bias his counsel. Nor can I forget, as an encouragement to it, your indulgent reception of my sentiments on a former and not dissimilar occasion.

Interwoven as is the love of liberty with every ligament of your hearts, no recommendation of mine is necessary to fortify or confirm the attachment.

The unity of government which constitutes you one people, is also now dear to you. It is justly so; for it is a main pillar in the edifice of your real independence; the support of your tranquillity at home; your peace abroad; of your safety; of your prosperity; of that very liberty which you so highly prize. But, as it is easy to foresee that, from different causes and from different quarters much pains will be taken, many artifices employed, to weaken in your minds the conviction of this truth: as this is the point in your political fortress against which the batteries of internal and external enemies will be most constantly and actively (though often covertly and insidiously) directed; it is of infinite moment, that you should properly estimate the immense value of your national union to your collective and individual happiness; that you should cherish a cordial, habitual, and immovable attachment to it; accustoming yourselves to think and speak of it as of the palladium of your political safety and prosperity; watching for its preservation with jealous anxiety; discountenancing whatever may suggest even a suspicion that it can, in any event, be abandoned; and indignantly frowning upon the first dawning of every attempt to alienate any portion of our country from the rest, or to enfeeble the sacred ties which now link together the various parts.

For this you have every inducement of sympathy and interest. Citizens by birth, or choice, of a common country, that country has a right to concentrate your affections. The name of American, which belongs to you in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of patriotism, more than any appellation derived from local discriminations. With slight shades of difference, you have the same religion, manners, habits, and political principles. You have, in a common cause, fought and triumphed together; the independence and liberty you possess, are the work of joint counsels, and joint efforts, of common dangers, sufferings and successes.

But these considerations, however powerfully they address themselves to your sensibility, are greatly outweighed by those which apply more immediately to your interest.—Here, every portion of our country finds the most commanding motives for carefully guarding and preserving the union of the whole.

The north, in an unrestrained intercourse with the south, protected by the equal laws of a common government, finds in the productions of the latter, great additional resources of maritime and commercial enterprise, and precious materials of manufacturing industry.—The south, in the same intercourse, benefiting by the same agency of the north, sees its agriculture grow and its commerce expand. Turning partly into its own channels the seamen of the north, it finds its particular navigation invigorated; and while it contributes, in different ways, to nourish and increase the general mass of the national navigation, it looks forward to the protection of a maritime strength, to which itself is unequally adapted. The east, in a like intercourse with the west, already finds, and in the progressive improvement of interior communications by land and water, will more and more find a valuable vent for the commodities which it brings from abroad, or manufactures at home. The west derives from the east supplies requisite to its growth and comfort—and what is perhaps of still greater consequence, it must of necessity owe the secure enjoyment of indispensable outlets for its own productions, to the weight, influence, and the future maritime strength of the Atlantic side of the Union, directed by an indissoluble community of interest as one nation. Any other tenure by which the west can hold this essential advantage, whether derived from its own separate strength; or from an apostate and unnatural connection with any foreign power, must be intrinsically precarious.

While then every part of our country thus feels an immediate and particular interest in union, all the parts combined cannot fail to find in the united mass of means and efforts, greater strength, greater resource, proportionably greater security from external danger, a less frequent interruption of their peace by foreign nations; and, what is of inestimable value, they must derive from union, an exemption from those broils and wars between themselves, which so frequently afflict neighboring countries not tied together by the same government; which their own rivalship alone would be sufficient to produce, but which opposite foreign alliances, attachments, and intrigues, would stimulate and embitter.—Hence likewise, they will avoid the necessity of those overgrown military establishments, which under any form of government are inauspicious to liberty, and which are to be regarded as particularly hostile to republican liberty. In this sense it is, that your union ought to be considered as a main prop of your liberty, and that the love of the one ought to endear to you the preservation of the other.

These considerations speak a persuasive language to every reflecting and virtuous mind, and exhibit the continuance of the union as a primary object of patriotic desire. Is there a doubt whether a common government can embrace so large a sphere? let experience solve it. To listen to mere speculation in such a case were criminal. We are authorized to hope that a proper organization of the whole, with the auxiliary agency of governments for the respective subdivisions, will afford a happy issue to the experiment. It is well worth a fair and full experiment. With such powerful and obvious motives to union, affecting all parts of our country, while experience shall not have demonstrated its impracticability, there will always be reason to distrust the patriotism of those who, in any quarter, may endeavor to weaken its bands.

In contemplating the causes which may disturb our Union, it occurs as matter of serious concern, that any ground should have been furnished for characterizing parties by geographical discriminations,—northern and southern—Atlantic and western; whence designing men may endeavor to excite a belief that there is a real difference of local interests and views. One of the expedients of party to acquire influence within particular districts, is to misrepresent the opinions and aims of other districts. You cannot shield yourselves too much against the jealousies and heart burnings which spring from these misrepresentations: they tend to render alien to each other those who ought to be bound together by fraternal affection. The inhabitants of our western country have lately had a useful lesson on this head: they have seen, in the negotiation by the executive, and in the unanimous ratification by the senate of the treaty with Spain, and in the universal satisfaction at the event throughout the United States, a decisive proof how unfounded were the suspicions propagated among them of a policy in the general government and in the Atlantic states, unfriendly to their interests in regard to the Mississippi. They have been witnesses to the formation of two treaties, that with Great Britain and that with Spain, which secure to them everything they could desire, in respect to our foreign relations, towards confirming their prosperity. Will it not be their wisdom to rely for the preservation of these advantages on the union by which they were procured? will they not henceforth be deaf to those advisers, if such they are, who would sever them from their brethren and connect them with aliens?

To the efficacy and permanency of your Union, a government for the whole is indispensable. No alliances, however strict, between the parts can be an adequate substitute; they must inevitably experience the infractions and interruptions which all alliances, in all times, have experienced. Sensible of this momentous truth, you have improved upon your first essay, by the adoption of a constitution of government, better calculated than your former, for an intimate union, and for the efficacious management of your common concerns. This government, the offspring of our own choice, uninfluenced and unawed, adopted upon full investigation and mature deliberation, completely free in its principles, in the distribution of its powers, uniting security with energy, and containing within itself a provision for its own amendment, has a just claim to your confidence and your support. Respect for its authority, compliance with its laws, acquiescence in its measures, are duties enjoined by the fundamental maxims of true liberty. The basis of our political systems is the right of the people to make and to alter their constitutions of government.—But the constitution which at any time exists, until changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people, is sacredly obligatory upon all. The very idea of the power, and the right of the people to establish government, presuppose the duty of every individual to obey the established government.

All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberations and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency.—They serve to organize faction, to give it an artificial and extraordinary force, to put in the place of the delegated will of the nation the will of party, often a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community; and, according to the alternate triumphs of different parties, to make the public administration the mirror of the ill concerted and incongruous projects of faction, rather than the organ of consistent and wholesome plans digested by common councils, and modified by mutual interests.

However combinations or associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely, in the course of time and things, to become potent engines, by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men, will be enabled to subvert the power of the people, and to usurp for themselves the reins of government; destroying afterwards the very engines which have lifted them to unjust dominion.

Towards the preservation of your government and the permanency of your present happy state, it is requisite, not only that you steadily discountenance irregular opposition to its acknowledged authority, but also that you resist with care the spirit of innovation upon its principles, however specious the pretext. One method of assault may be to effect, in the forms of the constitution, alterations which will impair the energy of the system; and thus to undermine what cannot be directly overthrown. In all the changes to which you may be invited, remember that time and habit are at least as necessary to fix the true character of governments, as of other human institutions:—that experience is the surest standard by which to test the real tendency of the existing constitution of a country:—that facility in changes, upon the credit of mere hypothesis and opinion, exposes to perpetual change from the endless variety of hypothesis and opinion: and remember, especially, that for the efficient management of your common interests in a country so extensive as ours, a government of as much vigor as is consistent with the perfect security of liberty is indispensable. Liberty itself will find in such a government, with powers properly distributed and adjusted, its surest guardian. It is, indeed, little else than a name, where the government is too feeble to withstand the enterprises of faction, to confine each member of the society within the limits prescribed by the laws, and to maintain all in the secure and tranquil enjoyment of the rights of person and property.

I have already intimated to you the danger of parties in the state, with particular references to the founding them on geographical discrimination. Let me now take a more comprehensive view, and warn you in the most solemn manner against the baneful effects of the spirit of party generally.

This spirit, unfortunately, is inseparable from our nature, having its root in the strongest passions of the human mind.—It exists under different shapes in all governments, more or less stifled, controlled, or repressed; but in those of the popular form it is seen in its greatest rankness, and is truly their worst enemy.

The alternate domination of one faction over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge natural to party dissension, which in different ages and countries has perpetrated the most horrid enormities, is itself a frightful despotism.—But this leads at length to a more formal and permanent despotism. The disorders and miseries which result, gradually incline the minds of men to seek security and repose in the absolute power of an individual; and, sooner or later, the chief of some prevailing faction, more able or more fortunate than his competitors, turns this disposition to the purpose of his own elevation on the ruins of public liberty.

Without looking forward to an extremity of this kind, (which nevertheless ought not to be entirely out of sight) the common and continual mischiefs of the spirit of party are sufficient to make it the interest and duty of a wise people to discourage and restrain it.

It serves always to distract the public councils, and enfeeble the public administration. It agitates the community with ill founded jealousies and false alarms; kindles the animosity of one part against another; foments occasional riot and insurrection. It opens the door to foreign influence and corruption, which finds a facilitated access to the government itself through the channels of party passions. Thus the policy and the will of one country are subjected to the policy and will of another.

There is an opinion that parties in free countries are useful checks upon the administration of the government, and serve to keep alive the spirit of liberty. This within certain limits is probably true; and in governments of a monarchial cast, patriotism may look with indulgence, if not with favor, upon the spirit of party. But in those of the popular character, in governments purely elective, it is a spirit not to be encouraged. From their natural tendency, it is certain there will always be enough of that spirit for every salutary purpose. And there being constant danger of excess, the effort ought to be, by force of public opinion, to mitigate and assuage it. A fire not to be quenched, it demands a uniform vigilance to prevent it bursting into a flame, lest instead of warming, it should consume.

It is important likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration, to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department, to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. A just estimate of that love of power and proneness to abuse it which predominate in the human heart, is sufficient to satisfy us of the truth of this position. The necessity of reciprocal checks in the exercise of political power, by dividing and distributing it into different depositories, and constituting each the guardian of the public weal against invasions of the others, has been evinced by experiments ancient and modern: some of them in our country and under our own eyes.—To preserve them must be as necessary as to institute them. If, in the opinion of the people, the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the constitution designates.—But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this, in one instance, may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil, any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.

Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism, who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness, these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and to cherish them. A volume could not trace all their connections with private and public felicity. Let it simply be asked, where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in courts of justice? and let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect, that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle.

It is substantially true, that virtue or morality is a necessary spring of popular government. The rule, indeed, extends with more or less force to every species of free government. Who that is a sincere friend to it can look with indifference upon attempts to shake the foundation of the fabric?

Promote, then, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion, it should be enlightened.

As a very important source of strength and security, cherish public credit. One method of preserving it is to use it as sparingly as possible, avoiding occasions of expense by cultivating peace, but remembering, also, that timely disbursements, to prepare for danger, frequently prevent much greater disbursements to repel it; avoiding likewise the accumulation of debt, not only by shunning occasions of expense, but by vigorous exertions, in time of peace, to discharge the debts which unavoidable wars may have occasioned, not ungenerously throwing upon posterity the burden which we ourselves ought to bear. The execution of these maxims belongs to your representatives, but it is necessary that public opinion should co-operate. To facilitate to them the performance of their duty, it is essential that you should practically bear in mind, that towards the payment of debts there must be revenue; that to have revenue there must be taxes; that no taxes can be devised which are not more or less inconvenient and unpleasant; that the intrinsic embarrassment inseparable from the selection of the proper object (which is always a choice of difficulties,) ought to be a decisive motive for a candid construction of the conduct of the government in making it, and for a spirit of aquiescence in the measures for obtaining revenue, which the public exigencies may at any time dictate.

Observe good faith and justice towards all nations; cultivate peace and harmony with all. Religion and morality enjoin this conduct, and can it be that good policy does not equally enjoin it? It will be worthy of a free, enlightened, and, at no distant period, a great nation, to give to mankind the magnanimous and too novel example of a people always guided by an exalted justice and benevolence. Who can doubt but, in the course of time and things, the fruits of such a plan would richly repay any temporary advantages which might be lost by a steady adherence to it; can it be that Providence has not connected the permanent felicity of a nation with its virtue? The experiment, at least, is recommended by every sentiment which ennobles human nature. Alas! is it rendered impossible by its vices?

In the execution of such a plan, nothing is more essential than that permanent, inveterate antipathies against particular nations and passionate attachments for others, should be excluded; and that, in place of them, just and amicable feelings towards all should be cultivated. The nation which indulges towards another an habitual hatred, or an habitual fondness, is in some degree a slave. It is a slave to its animosity or to its affection, either of which is sufficient to lead it astray from its duty and its interest. Antipathy in one nation against another, disposes each more readily to offer insult and injury, to lay hold of slight causes of umbrage, and to be haughty and intractable when accidental or trifling occasions of dispute occur. Hence, frequent collisions, obstinate, envenomed, and bloody contests. The nation, prompted by ill will and resentment, sometimes impels to war the government, contrary to the best calculations of policy. The government sometimes participates in the national propensity, and adopts through passion what reason would reject; at other times, it makes the animosity of the nation subservient to projects of hostility, instigated by pride, ambition, and other sinister and pernicious motives. The peace often, sometimes perhaps the liberty of nations, has been the victim.

So likewise, a passionate attachment of one nation for another produces a variety of evils. Sympathy for the favorite nation, facilitating the illusion of an imaginary common interest, in cases where no real common interest exists, and infusing into one the enmities of the other, betrays the former into a participation in the quarrels and wars of the latter, without adequate inducements or justifications. It leads also to concessions, to the favorite nation, of privileges denied to others, which is apt doubly to injure the nation making the concessions, by unnecessarily parting with what ought to have been retained, and by exciting jealousy, ill will, and a disposition to retaliate in the parties from whom equal privileges are withheld; and it gives to ambitious, corrupted or deluded citizens who devote themselves to the favorite nation, facility to betray or sacrifice the interests of their own country, without odium, sometimes even with popularity, gilding with the appearances of a virtuous sense of obligation, a commendable deference for public opinion, or a laudable zeal for public good, the base or foolish compliances of ambition, corruption, or infatuation.

As avenues to foreign influence in innumerable ways, such attachments are particularly alarming to the truly enlightened and independent patriot. How many opportunities do they afford to tamper with domestic factions, to practice the arts of seduction, to mislead public opinion, to influence or awe the public councils!—Such an attachment of a small or weak, towards a great and powerful nation, dooms the former to be the satellite of the latter.

Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence, (I conjure you to believe me fellow citizens,) the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake; since history and experience prove, that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government. But that jealousy, to be useful, must be impartial, else it becomes the instrument of the very influence to be avoided, instead of a defense against it. Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike for another, cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side, and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other. Real patriots, who may resist the intrigues of the favorite, are liable to become suspected and odius; while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people, to surrender their interests.

The great rule of conduct for us, in regard to foreign nations, is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith:—Here let us stop.

Europe has a set of primary interests, which to us have none, or a very remote relation. Hence, she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves, by artificial ties, in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics, or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.

Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. If we remain one people, under an efficient government, the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annoyance; when we may take such an attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve upon, to be scrupulously respected; when belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not lightly hazard the giving us provocation, when we may choose peace or war, as our interest, guided by justice, shall counsel.

Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice?

It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliance with any portion of the foreign world; so far, I mean, as we are now at liberty to do it; for let me not be understood as capable of patronizing infidelity to existing engagements. I hold the maximum no less applicable to public than private affairs, that honesty is always the best policy. I repeat it, therefore, let those engagements be observed in their genuine sense. But in my opinion, it is unnecessary, and would be unwise to extend them.

Taking care always to keep ourselves by suitable establishment, on a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies.

Harmony, and a liberal intercourse with all nations, are recommended by policy, humanity, and interest. But even our commercial policy should hold an equal and impartial hand; neither seeking nor granting exclusive favors or preferences; consulting the natural course of things; diffusing and diversifying by gentle means the streams of commerce, but forcing nothing; establishing with powers so disposed, in order to give trade a stable course, to define the rights of our merchants, and to enable the government to support them, conventional rules of intercourse, the best that present circumstances and mutual opinion will permit, but temporary, and liable to be from time to time abandoned or varied as experience and circumstances shall dictate; constantly keeping in view, that it is folly in one nation to look for disinterested favors from another; that it must pay with a portion of its independence for whatever it may accept under that character; that by such acceptance, it may place itself in the condition of having given equivalents for nominal favors, and yet of being reproached with ingratitude for not giving more. There can be no greater error than to expect, or calculate upon real favors from nation to nation. It is an illusion which experience must cure, which a just pride ought to discard.

In offering to you, my countrymen, these counsels of an old and affectionate friend, I dare not hope they will make the strong and lasting impression I could wish; that they will control the usual current of the passions, or prevent our nation from running the course which has hitherto marked the destiny of nations, but if I may even flatter myself that they may be productive of some partial benefit, some occasional good; that they may now and then recur to moderate the fury of party spirit, to warn against the mischiefs of foreign intrigue, to guard against the impostures of pretended patriotism; this hope will be a full recompense for the solicitude for your welfare by which they have been dictated.

How far, in the discharge of my official duties, I have been guided by the principles which have been delineated, the public records and other evidences of my conduct must witness to you and to the world. To myself, the assurance of my own conscience is, that I have, at least, believed myself to be guided by them.

In relation to the still subsisting war in Europe, my proclamation of the 22d of April, 1793, is the index to my plan. Sanctioned by your approving voice, and by that of your representatives in both houses of congress, the spirit of that measure has continually governed me, uninfluenced by any attempts to deter or divert me from it.

After deliberate examination, with the aid of the best lights I could obtain, I was well satisfied that our country, under all the circumstances of the case, had a right to take, and was bound, in duty and interest, to take a neutral position. Having taken it, I determined, as far as should depend upon me, to maintain it with moderation, perseverance and firmness.

The considerations which respect the right to hold this conduct, it is not necessary on this occasion to detail. I will only observe that, according to my understanding of the matter, that right, so far from being denied by any of the belligerent powers, has been virtually admitted by all.

The duty of holding a neutral conduct may be inferred, without anything more, from the obligation which justice and humanity impose on every nation, in cases in which it is free to act, to maintain inviolate the relations of peace and amity toward other nations.

The inducements of interest for observing that conduct will best be referred to your own reflections and experience. With me, a predominant motive has been to endeavor to gain time to our country to settle and mature its yet recent institutions, and to progress, without interruption, to that degree of strength and consistency which is necessary to give it, humanly speaking, the command of its own fortunes.

Though in reviewing the incidents of my administration, I am unconscious of intentional error, I am nevertheless too sensible of my defects not to think it probable that I may have committed many errors. Whatever they may be, I fervently beseech the Almighty to avert or mitigate the evils to which they may tend. I shall also carry with me the hope that my country will never cease to view them with indulgence; and that, after forty-five years of my life dedicated to its service, with an upright zeal, the faults of incompetent abilities will be consigned to oblivion, as myself must soon be to the mansions of rest.

Relying on its kindness in this as in other things, and actuated by that fervent love toward it which is so natural to a man who views in it the native soil of himself and his progenitors for several generations, I anticipate with pleasing expectation that retreat in which I promise myself to realize, without alloy, the sweet enjoyment of partaking, in the midst of my fellow citizens, the benign influence of good laws under a free government—the ever-favorable object of my heart, and the happy reward, as I trust, of our mutual cares, labors, and dangers.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. THOMAS. I present to the Senate a joint memorial from the General Assembly of the State of Colorado and ask to have it printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

The memorial is as follows:

Senate joint memorial 3.

To the Hon. Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, the United States Railroad Administration, and the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialists, the General Assembly of the State of Colorado, respectfully represent that:

Whereas the railroads of the United States are now under Federal control; and

Whereas the narrow-gauge branch of the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad between Salida, Colo., and Montrose, Colo., is inadequate for the needs and development of the extensive agricultural, live-stock, coal and metal mining industries of the vast domain tributary to said narrow-gauge line of railroad, as is evidenced in the fact that all broad-gauge shipments of products from this section have to be routed via Grand Junction, Colo., necessitating an additional haul of 142 miles, which creates added delay, expense, and losses; and

Whereas the Uncompahgre Valley project, one of the largest governmental irrigation undertakings in the entire West, is located at Montrose and along said narrow-gauge line of railroad and is now in process of development; and

Whereas embraced in this great domain are vast partially developed coal fields, including the only shipping anthracite mines west of Pennsylvania; also the greatest shipping center of live stock in the State, and the most important producing field of carnotite ores in the Nation; and

Whereas embraced in this great domain are large fields of low-grade ores containing gold, silver, copper, zinc, and other minerals, which under the present inadequate narrow-gauge railroad facilities remain undeveloped, and which under improved and adequate facilities would become producing areas, thus building up profitable industries and adding to the world's supply of these necessary minerals:

Now, therefore, your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the Twenty-second General Assembly of the State of Colorado, do respectfully request and urge the United States Government take such action as may be necessary to authorize and direct the broad gauging of the narrow-gauge line of the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad between the city of Salida, Colo., and the city of Montrose, Colo., so that said line may be enlarged and transformed into a broad-gauge, standard line of railroad.

It is directed that this memorial be entered in the records of the general assembly and that copies hereof be forwarded by the secretary of state to the President of the United States, the United States Railroad Administration, to the United States Senate and National House of Representatives, and to our Senators and Representatives of Congress.

President of the Senate.
ALLYN COLE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved February 17, 1919.

OLIVER H. SHOUP,
Governor of the State of Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I also present a senate joint resolution of the General Assembly of Colorado, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The resolution is as follows:

Senate joint resolution 6.

Whereas there is now pending in the Congress of the United States a bill (S. 4987) to create a department of education, to appropriate money for the conduct of said department, to appropriate money for Federal cooperation with the States in the encouragement and support of education, and for other purposes: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Colorado (the House concurring), That we hereby indorse the provisions of said bill and urge its early passage by Congress.

Resolved, That the secretary of state be instructed to forward a copy of this memorial to the Representatives of the State of Colorado in Congress.

President of the Senate.
ALLYN COLE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved February 18, 1919.

OLIVER H. SHOUP,
Governor of the State of Colorado.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I ask leave to have inserted in the RECORD without reading a telegram in the nature of a petition from the Chamber of Commerce and members of the Community Labor Board of Clarksdale, Miss., asking that the United States Employment Service be supported by the proper appropriations, and stating that it has done great good in finding employment for returning soldiers. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The telegram is as follows:

CLARKSDALE, MISS., February 21, 1919.

JAS. K. VARDAMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

United States Employment Service doing splendid work in placing returning soldiers back into civil life and should be maintained. Support continuance of office if possible to consistently do so.

M. D. MARTIN,
Secretary Chamber of Commerce and Member Community Labor Board.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I present another telegram, in the nature of a memorial from the commissioner of agriculture of Jackson, Miss., protesting against any reduction in the appropriations for farm-demonstration work, stating that its results will be very detrimental to the farming country. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The telegram is as follows:

JACKSONVILLE, MISS., February 21, 1919.

Hon. JAS. K. VARDAMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Any reduction in appropriation will disorganize the farm-demonstration force in Mississippi and seriously cripple its efficiency. Sheppard amendment absolutely essential.

P. P. GARNER,
Commissioner of Agriculture.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I present another telegram from the president of the Mississippi Bankers' Association, R. C. King, urging that adequate appropriation be made by Congress for farm-demonstration work, and calling upon the Senator from Mississippi to support the proposition. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The telegram is as follows:

GREENWOOD, MISS., February 21, 1919.

Senator JAS. K. VARDAMAN,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

It appears imperative that the Mississippi farm-demonstration force be maintained upon present efficient basis. Decrease of funds means reduction of Mississippi force 25 per cent at a time when it has its greatest opportunity to encourage increased food production. Especially if cotton acreage is reduced, it is hoped you may be in position to support Sheppard amendment.

R. C. KING,
President Mississippi Bankers' Association.

Mr. ASHURST. I present a House concurrent resolution adopted by both bodies of the Legislature of the State of Arizona and ask that the same may be read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

MIT SIMMS,
Secretary of State.
By R. E. MCGILLEN,
Assistant Secretary.

Mr. ASHURST. I have also a house joint resolution adopted by one chamber of the Legislature of the State of Arizona, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD without reading and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The resolution is as follows:

House joint resolution 5.

Whereas it has been recommended by the Hon. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior of the United States, that Congress immediately appropriate the sum of $100,000,000 for placing the returning soldiers of the United States upon farms, thereby inaugurating a plan whereby at least 100,000 men will be immediately employed in the creation of at least 25,000 farms within the territory of the United States; and

Whereas the plan as outlined by the honorable Secretary of the Interior proposes the reclamation of approximately 215,000,000 acres of arid and swamp land within the United States at present unfit for cultivation because of the lack of water in the one case and drainage in the other; and

Whereas the plan suggested is not a "charity scheme," and under appropriate management will be self-funding, and will offer alluring opportunities to settlers as compared with the old land settlement systems, inasmuch as 40 years time is to be given the settlers within which to reimburse the United States for the money and credit loaned to them: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Arizona (at its fourth regular session), That the plan as outlined by Secretary of the Interior Lane meets with its heartiest and utmost approval, and that this legislature urges upon the Congress of the United States the early enactment into law of the plan proposed and the appropriation of the money needed to carry out the provisions thereof; and be it further

Resolved, That this resolution be signed by the presiding officers of each branch of the legislature and the governor of the State, and that the secretary of state of the State of Arizona be, and he is hereby, directed to forward copies of these resolutions to the Hon. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, to the President of the Senate of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each of Arizona's representatives in Congress.

Secretary of Senate.
THOMAS E. CAMPBELL,
Governor of Arizona.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I merely rose at this moment to conform to what is the custom and give notice that upon Monday at the first moment the business of the Senate will permit, I will assume to address this body touching some of the features of the constitution of the league of nations, and, if I may be permitted, to pay some heed to the observations of the able Senators, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. President, I was asked by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], who has been suddenly called out of the city, please to announce in his behalf that he would address the Senate on Wednesday next, February 26, on the matter of the league of nations. I comply with that request, of course, with pleasure.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I merely desire to give notice that, with the permission of the Senate, on Friday, February 28, I shall address the Senate upon the question of the draft submitted by the committee to the peace conference in Paris on the league of nations.

I wish also to give a precisely similar notice on behalf of the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] for Saturday, the 1st of March.

POSITION OF EX-PRESIDENT TAFT ON LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I submit a letter, a statement, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SWAN CREEK, ILL., February 18, 1919.

Hon. L. Y. SHERMAN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SHERMAN: I am a farmer and a brush lawyer and a Republican, which you know from the old days when you lived up this way. I hear a good deal of folks talk in my township and around here. I notice Taft says that the Republicans will get beat if they don't swallow the document about the league of nations just as the President fetches it over from Paris. Why can't Taft keep still since he fell through the flooring in 1912? He gives everybody a pain except Democrats.

[Laughter on the floor and in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The occupants of the galleries must maintain order or the galleries will be cleared.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the letter, as follows:

They could afford to pay the freight on him even if old Carnegie didn't, just to keep him thrashing around and falling down over things. Nobody in the corn belt has forgot how he framed up the Canadian reciprocity muss when he was President. This was a fine mess for Democrats who believe that way. Nobody can blame them for being pleased with Taft then. I hear as many Democrats opposed to this league business as I do Republicans. I don't believe I have heard a mother or father talk about it since it started who is for it. There are some societies in Chicago passing resolutions about it who favor it. I notice none of them I'm acquainted with ever had any mud on their boots or had any of their folks in this last fight. We have got an old constable in this township who knows more real politics about what people are thinking than Taft would ever know if he was pensioned off for life on Carnegie funds. He says there ain't anybody who wants this country hitched up to every fool fuss the rest of the world gets into. If the Germans or any other country gets into their bean they can straddle over the rest of the world, all of us favor a fight, just as we done, only we ought to be ready next time. It makes everybody laugh around here to hear Taft talking about politics, if people don't take his advice. When the curtain fell on him in November, 1912, he had 8 out of 531 electoral votes. His Canadian reciprocity and fool performances like it give the Bull Moose their chance. They couldn't have horned and tramped things up like they did if Taft hadn't made most Republicans satisfied to see it done. Taft has been running around with Frank Walsh so long he's caught some of the disease. In his frame of mind he is a fine expert to be telling us what to do in politics. About all a fellow needs to get right on is to find out what Taft is doing and then hit the trail the other way.

I hope the Senate won't tie us up so as to send any more of our boys up to north Russia to fight in countries we think ought to be let alone. It will be time enough for the United States to dip in when somebody threatens us or interferes with our affairs.

Don't make no mistake about following Taft in politics unless you want to wind up in the ditch again. As a ditch trailer there ain't anybody in this country can put it over on Taft. I want to let you know about what people are thinking back in your old home country.

Yours,

RICHARD ASHKUM.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I rise to express my personal regret that a Senator should ask that such a letter be read to the United States Senate. I have never agreed with Mr. Taft on politics, but he was for four years President of the United States of America. He was beaten for reelection, and he received the smallest electoral vote that any President running for reelection ever received in the history of American politics. I was glad of it. I hope if he runs again he will be beaten worse. But, Mr. President, William Howard Taft was at all times in office and out of office a conscientious, patriotic gentleman of the highest type. I could bring here letters I have received that would arouse the risibilities of Senators and the populace, letters reflecting on other eminent men, Democrats and Republicans. But I do not choose to make the Senate of the United States the conduit through and by which public men whom the Nation esteems, although it may differ with them, may be made the object of ridicule. I do not believe that is the way to conduct the debate in behalf of or against the league of nations.

With perfect respect to my friend, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], whom I entirely love, I believe that as the years glide by and when in the future he sees that document he has caused to be read and thus petrified into the RECORD of his country's Congress he will be as ashamed of it and of his action to-day as I am.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask unanimous consent for a couple of minutes.

Mr. ASHURST. I will yield in just a moment. I only want another minute.

This discussion of the league of nations is going to sweep many men off their feet. It is going to cause many men to lose their heads. Let us proceed with the discussion without throwing ridicule, abuse, and vilification upon members of the citizenry of our country who may differ from us.

Ex-President Taft, once a judge, was governor of the Philippine Islands, and Secretary of War. He was twice named for President by a great political party, a party that I hope will always be defeated wherever it may challenge the Democratic Party for supremacy; and when you Republicans nominated Taft you nominated a gentleman, and he is entitled to fair and courteous treatment at the hands of the Senate of the United States. He is a credit to our American institutions although I do not agree with him politically and have always opposed him.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I can understand fully the sentiment of the Senator from Arizona. I would feel the same way he does if I were a Member of the other side of the Chamber. No greater blessing was every vouchsafed to the majority than that conferred by the mistakes which are referred to by this humble correspondent. I think I have a right to defend this constituent.

I would not have presented this letter here under the head of "Memorials and petitions" had it not been for the fact that this ex-President of the United States not very many days ago said he would trust no Member of the United States Senate who was not for the league of nations. Whether one is or is not for the league remains a matter of future consideration.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield? I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that Ex-President Taft this morning made a specific denial of that statement, and republished his own words, which apparently do deny it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I trust the Senator will place the denial in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be glad to do that.

Mr. REED. If the Senator from Illinois will permit me, the Senator from Tennessee might also put in with the denial his subsequent statements, because these statements have been appearing from day to day.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have them before me and will do so.

Mr. THOMAS. I have the denial here.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would be glad for my part to have it placed in the RECORD.

Mr. THOMAS. It is very short, and I will read it, with the Senator's permission.

Mr. SHERMAN. So let it be considered.

Mr. McKELLAR. I would be very glad for the Senator from Colorado to read it.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Chair finds no objection made, I have no objection to having it interpolated.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Taft says:

> I observe that I have been misquoted in dispatches from San Francisco. I have been made to say that I would not trust overnight Senators opposing this treaty. What I said was this:
> I yielded to no man in my profound respect for the Constitution of the United States as the greatest fundamental instrument ever struck from the brain of man, but it made me impatient to see a perversion of its meaning and purpose urged in order to keep this great country out of a covenant to secure peace among men; that among those engaged in this were men whose adherence to the guaranties of civil liberty in that great instrument, and the means of maintaining them through the courts, had not been conspicuous in the past, and whose disposition to amend or weaken them in the past made me feel that I would hesitate to trust them with the Constitution overnight.
> I have said that those who oppose this covenant on the ground that we should maintain the so-called policy against entangling alliances and would withdraw us again into an impossible status of world isolation without responsibility for the peace of the world have a narrow vision of our national duty. They fail to realize our enormous power of assistance to the world in securing peace by concert. Thus they minimize America's proper part as a factor in the advance of civilization. They thereby belittle America and become little Americans.

Let me add, Mr. President, that while I am not in sympathy with Mr. Taft's views concerning a league of nations, I entertain the same high regard for him as a statesman and as a citizen as does the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST].

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, upon the whole, I indorse the sentiment conveyed in the letter from Mr. Ashkum, my constituent. However it may arouse the indignation of certain Senators, I regard the conduct of the ex-President of the United States in its entirety as not only undignified but as grossly partisan and unfair. I regard his conduct as meriting the homely observation conveyed in the letter from my humble constituent. From many hundreds of such letters I selected that which more accurately in that phrase conveyed my impression of the ex-President's conduct.

It is entirely proper for him to take such course as he sees fit in the advocacy of a league of nations. I can understand why, as referred to in this letter, there is a sympathy between Mr. Taft and the President. The President applied to Mr. Carnegie's fund for a pension, and Mr. Taft has his expenses paid in this campaign from the same tainted source. There is a community of interest and an entire unanimity in the source of supply.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not ask the Senator to yield. I rise to a question of order. I call for the regular order. I intended to explain why I called for it, but I simply call for it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Do I understand the Senator from Nevada objects to further remarks?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada has called for the regular order.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I have to acquiesce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Reports of committees are in order.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia submitted an amendment providing that all officers charged with disbursement of public funds and all officers responsible for public property intrusted to their custody since April 6, 1917, etc., shall be held responsible only in case of fraud or attempted fraud or embezzlement in the disbursement of such public money or the custody of such public property, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

COURT-MARTIAL OF JOSEPH LINESKE.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator to a matter which, I think, possibly may reach the Secretary of War and the people of the United States more generally through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD than by any other method. I refer to the court-martial proceedings of a young man by the name of Joseph Lineske, from Cheboygan, Mich., late a private in Company H, One hundred and twenty-fifth Infantry, who was tried by court-martial last March and who is now serving a three-year sentence in Fort Leavenworth. The record of his trial is short, and I think the people, and especially the Senate, ought to know just what it is. I am therefore asking that it be inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The record of the trial does not show the final determination of the court, which was that this soldier was sentenced to three years at Fort Leavenworth for causes which seem to me to be absolutely unworthy the consideration of a court in reference to a boy who is not a slacker; who is not charged with having been a slacker; who first enlisted in the National Guard; who was honorably discharged therefrom before he was drafted into the regular service; who was then imposed upon by being subjected to a surgical operation, which, however, he did not object to the first time, but which the second time was required of him with an assurance that he would not be helped by it. Because he resisted or objected to that he was tried and sentenced to Fort Leavenworth. I ask that the record of this trial may be inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The court proceeded to the trial of Pvt. Joseph Lineske, Company H, One hundred and twenty-fifth Infantry, National Guard, who, on appearing before the court, introduced Lieut. Clarence H. Kells, Fifty-fifth Infantry, as counsel.

R. K. Barton was sworn as reporter.

The accused was asked if he desired a copy of the proceedings, to which he replied in the affirmative.

The order appointing the court was read to the accused and he was asked if he objected to being tried by any member present named therein, to which he replied in the negative.

The accused was notified of the absence of the members of the court, and the reasons therefor, and was asked if he objected to being tried by the court as now constituted, to which he replied in the negative.

The members of the court, the judge advocate, and the assistant judge advocate were then sworn.

The accused was then arraigned upon the following charges and specifications:

ARRAIGNMENT.

Charge I: Violation of the ninety-sixth Article of War.

Specification 1: In that Joseph Lineske, private, Company H, One hundred and twenty-fifth Infantry, National Guard, having been found to be suffering from hemorrhoids and prolapse of rectum, and having been advised by Maj. John C. Morfit, Medical Reserve Corps, that an operation consisting of hemorrhoidectomy by cauterization under local anesthesia was necessary to enable him to perform properly his military duties, did, at base hospital, Camp MacArthur, Waco, Tex., on or about January 15, 1918, refuse to submit to such operation; that after such refusal the said Pvt. Joseph Lineske was examined by a board convened under authority of paragraph 2, General Orders, No. 167, War Department, 1917; that the said board found that the operation advised by the said Maj. John C. Morfit, Medical Reserve Corps, was necessary to enable the said Pvt. Joseph Lineske properly to perform his military duties; that the said Pvt. Joseph Lineske was at base hospital, Camp MacArthur, Waco, Tex., on or about January 26, 1918, notified of the findings of said board; and that thereafter he persisted in his refusal and still persists in his refusal to submit to such operation.

C. W. WALKER,
Captain, Medical Reserve Corps, United States Army.

To which the accused pleaded:

PLEAS.

To the specification of the charge: Not guilty.
To the charge: Not guilty.

The paragraphs of the Manual for Courts-Martial that set out the gist of each of the several offenses were read to the court by the judge advocate.

The JUDGE ADVOCATE. The judge advocate desires to introduce two witnesses in this case, one to show that the accused was advised that an operation as herein specified was necessary, and both to show that a board met under the proper general order and personally examined the accused and found that this operation was necessary. That this board had advised the operation and that he refused the said operation.

TESTIMONY OF MAJ. JOHN C. MORFIT.

Maj. John C. Morfit, Medical Reserve Corps, United States Army, a witness for the prosecution, was sworn and testified as follows:

Examination by the prosecution.

Q. State to the court your full name, rank, and organization.—A. John C. Morfit, major, Medical Reserve Corps, base hospital, Camp MacArthur, Waco, Tex.

Q. Do you know the accused?—A. Yes, sir; his name is Lineske.

Q. State to the court his name, rank, and organization.—A. His name is Lineske, and he was a patient in the base hospital. I don't know his rank and organization.

Q. What was the accused suffering with at the base hospital?—A. He has been in the base hospital two or three times. He had two conditions, piles or hemorrhoids and prolapse of the rectum. Prolapse of the rectum means evacuation of the bowels, and in which the bowel comes out and has to be pushed back, or it causes a good deal of inconvenience if it remains.

Q. Maj. Morfit, did you examine the accused at the hospital?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What treatment did you advise?—A. That is right in line with the story I was going to tell. He was operated on for hemorrhoids. Now, an operation for hemorrhoids incidentally cures in most cases the prolapse of the rectum. He returned to the hospital with the prolapse and further operation was advised for that.

Q. Did you inform the accused that it was necessary for him to have this operation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you operate upon the accused?—A. No, sir; not for this. The first time he was operated on for the piles and did not result in a cure for the prolapse.

Q. Why was it you did not operate upon the accused?—A. He refused the operation.

Q. Was this operation of a serious nature you advised, doctor?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, did it endanger life?—A. No, sir.

Q. What further action did you take when the accused refused to submit to an operation?—A. He was put up before the board which had charge of those cases.

Q. Who were the members of the board?—A. Capt. Vanderveer, Lieut. Armstrong, and myself.

Q. State to the court the findings of the board.—A. The patient was examined—presented to the board and examined, and they all recommended the second operation.

Q. Who was the senior officer of the board?—A. I was.

Q. Did you render a written account of the findings of this board?—A. Yes, sir.

The JUDGE ADVOCATE. If there is no objection, I would like to have the witness identify the findings of this board and introduce it in evidence.

The COURT. Any objection on the part of the defense?

Lieut. KELLS. No objection.

The JUDGE ADVOCATE. Will you tell the court whether or not this is the correct findings of the board?

A. (witness looks at paper). Substantially; yes, sir.

Q. Is that your signature to the findings?—A. Yes, sir.

The COURT. There being no objection to the proceedings produced to the court, it will be introduced in evidence and certified copy attached to the record.

The prosecution read to the court the findings of the board of medical officers, which is hereto appended and marked "Exhibit I."

The ASSISTANT JUDGE ADVOCATE. Maj. Morfit, was the accused told of the findings of this board?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was his reply to that?—A. He refused the operation.

Q. He still refused the operation?—A. Yes, sir.

The ASSISTANT JUDGE ADVOCATE. No further questions.

The COURT. Any cross-examination?

Lieut. KELLS. Yes, sir.

Cross-examination—examination by the defense:

Q. Maj. Morfit, did you operate on the accused on or about November, 1917?—A. He was operated on; I think I did. It was either I or Maj. Howard.

Q. You are not sure it was you or Maj. Howard?—A. No.

Q. Were you familiar with the reason for the operation at that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why was the operation done then?—A. For hemorrhoids and prolapse of the rectum.

Q. Did he or did you not state to the accused at that time that particular operation would cure him?—A. No, sir; I never said an operation will cure at all.

Q. Didn't you assure the accused that a proper operation would not cause him very much pain and it would cure him, and it would not be necessary for him to return to the hospital again?—A. No, sir.

Q. After the findings of the board were given to the accused, and he was told that he was to be operated on again, did he or not ask you whether this operation would cure him?—A. Yes, sir; he did.

Q. Will you state to the court what you told him at that time?—A. I don't think that I can state exactly what I told him at that time, but at that time and subsequently I have told him that he should have an operation, a very simple one, under a local anesthesia, which, I believe, would complete his cure, and if it was not completed in that way it could be completed by a more radical method.

Lieut. KELLS. That is all.

The COURT. Any redirect examination?

The ASSISTANT JUDGE ADVOCATE. No redirect examination.

The COURT. Questions by the court.

Examination by the court—questions by the Court:

Q. Doctor, why were you sure at one time the operation would cure this man, and the other you were not? You stated the first time you didn't believe that the operation would cure him; the second time you stated that you did believe and told him it would cure him.—A. No, sir; I did not say the second time that it would cure him absolutely. I said it would probably do so, and it probably would.

Q. You said you advised him it is a simple operation and would cure him, and if that didn't a more redical method would. What more radical method would?—A. I mean by this: In prolapse of rectum sometimes, in fact in the majority of the cases, under cocaine you can let that prolapse come out, and with the cautery make a few cauterization marks in the intestinal wall that would cause a scar contraction sufficient to hold that up. Now, in about 25 per cent of the cases that does not occur; in those instances you have to get a cure, you have to amputate, and cut off what is hanging out. That makes it a much more severe operation.

Q. Doctor, you examined the man in November, didn't you?—A. Yes.

Q. And you found he had the same condition he has now?—A. Not the same thing. He has a prolapse.

Q. Has he still the hemorrhoids?—A. Well, the hemorrhoids are minor, however, now. At that time the hemorrhoids were majority trouble. He is practically cured of hemorrhoids, but didn't get an incidental cure of the prolapse.

Q. Was the resulting pain or inconvenience to the man after the first operation? How long was he laid up?—A. I don't know how long he was in the hospital.

Q. Any danger to life to the cutting off of the prolapse of that bowel?—A. No more danger than there is in the constant danger there of the condition.

Q. Is there much danger in cutting off that prolapse?—A. No, sir.

Q. Isn't these conditions, many occasions, one of sequel of the other? A man with hemorrhoids will have prolapse?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And this just happened to be one isolated case where the operation for the hemorrhoids did not cure the prolapse?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And further operation was necessary?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was this man told at the time the board met if he refused the operation he would be liable to be tried for it?—A. Yes, sir; that was all explained to him.

Q. What did he state was the reason for it, doctor, after his refusing?—A. I have forgotten just what he said. I think he doubted the results, feared the pain, or something of that sort. I don't know just what he said. He just refused.

Q. I want to get clear why they didn't operate for prolapse when they operated for the hemorrhoids?—A. As I was trying to bring out the operation for prolapse which is a precedent condition of the operation for hemorrhoids, which is a precedent condition for prolapse, sometimes is because of it when the hemorrhoids are operated upon incidentally cures the prolapse.

Q. He actually had the prolapse at the time?—A. He had the prolapse at the time, yes.

Q. He was told that the first operation, was he, that it would cure both the hemorrhoids and prolapse?—A. No; he could not have been told that because we don't guarantee a cure. There is an element of uncertainty in all operations, in all operative work. He was given to understand that he would probably be cured.

Q. The first operation as he was in the second one, the same degree of assurance.—A. The same degree of assurance.

Q. Yes?—A. Yes, sir.

TESTIMONY OF FIRST LIEUT. JOHN H. ARMSTRONG.

First Lieut. John H. Armstrong, Medical Reserve Corps, Base Hospital, Camp MacArthur, a witness for the prosecution, was sworn and testified as follows:

Examination by the prosecution:

Q. State to the court your full name, rank, and organization.—A. John H. Armstrong, first lieutenant, Medical Reserve Corps, United States Army.

Q. Do you know the accused?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State to the court his name.—A. Joseph Lineske, private, Company H, 125th Infantry.

Q. State to the court under what conditions the accused came under your observation.—A. Examined by me. I was ward surgeon in ward 9. He had prolapse of the rectum. I advised operation for its relief. He refused the operation. Later, examined by me as a member of the board, he again refused the operation.

Q. Do you—as a member of that board did you make a personal examination of him?—A. I did.

Q. State to the court your findings.—A. Prolapse of the rectum.

Q. Lieutenant, can you identify this as a copy of the findings of the board?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that your signature attached as recorder?—A. It is, sir.

The JUDGE ADVOCATE. If there is no objection, I would like to introduce as evidence the same proceedings as read previously and which has been identified by the first witness and by this witness.

The COURT. If there is no objection it will be introduced.

The JUDGE ADVOCATE. No further questions by the prosecution.

The COURT. Any cross-examination?

Lieut. KELLS. Yes, sir.

Cross-examination—examination by the defense:

Q. What capacity did you act, Lieutenant, on the board that examined the accused?—A. I was one of the examiners, and also recorder.

Q. You were the junior member?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Besides Maj. Morfit, who else was a member of that board?—A. Capt. Vanderveer.

Lieut. KELLS. That is all.

The COURT. Any questions by the court? If not, the witness will be excused.

The JUDGE ADVOCATE. No further testimony by the prosecution.

The COURT. I would like to have a statement from the defense as to what he proposes to introduce.

Lieut. KELLS. May it please the court, we have no witnesses to introduce in this case except the accused. I wish the board would take into consideration it is impossible to produce any witness for the defense, because this man's regiment is not here and his company has been moved and is not here at this time. They have been ordered out, and perhaps for oversea duty. There is no one here who is familiar with his case. It is impossible to get any communication where this man was enlisted, who enlisted him, who examined him when he was sworn into service. We can't find any records here at the base hospital.

The COURT. I would like to know what those things have to do with him refusing the operation?

Lieut. KELLS. The defense desires to prove that this case existed before he was enlisted in the service and really should not be held for an offense, which should have been found before he was brought into military service. If he is now unfit for military service he could prove it by the facts that he was enlisted erroneously.

The COURT. This Government is in need of every man that they can get, and if this can be corrected by an operation under local anesthesia it is not proper to stand up there and plead that he should not have been drafted. That is to brand the man a slacker.

Lieut. KELLS. We have no witnesses, only the accused, who is to make a statement to the court.

The COURT. You, the accused, are informed that you have the right to testify in your own behalf and, subject to cross-examination, offer any evidence in denial, in explanation, or in contradiction of the charges against you. If you do testify, your testimony will be given the weight of evidence, the same as any other witness, and you may not be cross-examined beyond the field of your direct examination, except to test your credibility as a witness. You may also make an unsworn, verbal, or written statement of the case, which may consist of a brief summary or version of the evidence, with such explanation or allegation of motive, excuse, matter of extenuation, etc., as you may desire to offer, or it may embrace, with the facts, a presentation also of the case and an argument both upon the fact and the law. Such statement is not testimony, and therefore is not subject to cross-examination, but as a personal defense or argument, however, it may, and properly should, be taken into consideration by the court. You do not have to do either, and your failure to do either will not create any presumptions against you. Do you fully understand all that I have said to you?

The ACCUSED. Yes, sir.

The COURT. Knowing those rights, do you not wish to testify and to make a statement in your own behalf, or to do either? In other words, do you desire to be sworn as a witness in your own behalf or make an unsworn statement?

The ACCUSED. I desire to make an unsworn statement.

UNSWORN STATEMENT BY THE ACCUSED.

I was operated on here on the 19th of November, and I turned this operation down. I should better. On 9 o'clock in the morning, Capt. Howard was in charge of the ward. He came to me and asked me why I turned this operation down. I told him, "I am afraid it will do no good." He said, "We have some good surgeons." I told him that was what I wanted. I wanted to be fixed up or left alone. I told him the conditions. He told me he would fix me up. He said I would never have to turn this up any more. I went and took the operation about 12 o'clock the 19th of November. After the operation I was took to ward 12. After I got up so I had to get out on my feet, I went to the toilet. My rectum came out. It was no help, I got worse. They sent me back, and at that time, the 29th of November. It never helped me at all. I was in the Infantry and they sent me back, and I saw the shape it left men in their condition after operations. They sent me back. They wanted me to take another operation. I told them I didn't want to take it, for the first one didn't do me no good. They told me it would help me the first time, and it never did. I had this rectum trouble 15 years, and it never bothered me for two years. It never bothered me when we came down here, and then it got to hurting me, and I reported it, and I submitted to an operation. I don't want to be operated on if it don't help me any. They operated 10 days to-day on one and I seen the man go away from here. He was operated on for such a thing as that and he had no control of his bowels at all. Sometimes he would crack away and sometimes he would not. I seen him with my own eyes. I know it to be a fact. He was sent out of T. B. They said he had consumption. He went out on T. B. and went home. I know a man who was operated on for the same thing. He had lost control of his bowels. He had no control of them. I don't want to be in a shape like that. I would submit to an operation provided it helped me, but I dont't want to be killed or make me worse than I am. I am worse than I was. I want to stay in the service. I did not turn this operation down to get out. I had no idea of that.

I don't believe the operation would help me. That is one reason I turned it down. I am willing to do what I can. I am willing to do my bit. I don't want to submit to four or five operations and not be any help to me. I had the understanding the first time I would never have to force this thing back again. When I came to the operating room, Maj. Morfit said: "You are the one that turned this down." I said: "I thought if you were not going to help me I wouldn't have done it the first time." He said: "Never mind, son; we will fix you up." I asked him afterwards; I said: "Major, if I do let you operate on me—the way you burn me, do you think it will be any help to me?" He said: "No; I won't promise you nothing; I won't." I said: "You had one chance. I give you a chance, and I don't like to take any chance where I don't know." He told me he could not give me any guaranty. He said if he couldn't fix me up on that operation he would operate again. I told him it is not necessary to operate on a man seven or eight times. I told him I wanted to be fixed up, and he didn't give me no satisfaction. I told him I wanted to do my bit. I have always tried to do my bit. I explained it to them down in the operating room? I showed it to them. He said, "We will attend to you all right," and he never did. I fell out like down on the border. I couldn't make it. My feet got sore when on the hikes. When I go on a hike my feet get sore, and I explained that to them in the operating room, and they said, "We will attend to you all right." But he never did. I took exercise over in the infirmary for my feet, but it never done me any good. I am willing to do my bit if there is any way to do it.

The COURT. Has the defense anything else to offer.

Lieut KELLS. May it please the Court, the counsel would like to make a few remarks.

The COURT. Your argument will follow the prosecution's.

The JUDGE ADVOCATE. The Judge Advocate has no argument to make.

The COURT. Argument by the defense.

REMARKS BY COUNSEL FOR DEFENSE.

May it please the court, it has been shown that this man was operated on on November, 1917, for practically the same thing in which he is being tried now for refusing an operation. The operation at that time was not successful. The accused didn't object to this last operation, provided it would be the same as the other one, but was objecting to the cauterization. The accused lives in fear of being burned. It has never been shown, or rather, not shown, the accused has said he has had this same disease for the last 15 years, and it never bothered him before until he was subject to hard training here and became painful; then he could not stand it any longer, and he was sent to a hospital. It would seem he was there plenty of time to either have cured or not cured. If he was unfit for military service it seems they could have decided long ago. The major of the board on the operation the first time was also president of the board who examined this man. That has been proved in evidence here. The accused has stated to the court he is not trying to get out of the military service, but is willing to serve his country. I have investigated with the short time which I have had and really have found that to be such. He is a good man, and he comes from as good people, perhaps, as a great many who are in the service to-day. It is my opinion that the board would make a great mistake to either sentence this man a long term of confinement or give him a sentence that would put him out of military service. It seems that some way could be prepared that he could be kept in the military service and given lighter duty instead of heavy training which would necessitate this old disease coming back on him.

The COURT. Any reply by the judge advocate?

The ASSISTANT JUDGE ADVOCATE. No reply by the judge advocate.

The court was closed and finds the accused:

EXTENSION OF CLAYTON ACT.

Mr. KELLOGG and Mr. SMITH of South Carolina addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to bring up Senate joint resolution No. 222, which was unanimously reported by the Judiciary Committee on yesterday. It is a joint resolution which extends for another year section 10 of the Clayton Act, which has been twice extended by Congress. I do not think that there will be any objection to the joint resolution, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration, because it should be passed immediately.

Mr. REED. I hope the Senator from Minnesota will not ask to bring up that joint resolution at this time. The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] has given notice that he would address the Senate to-day, and I also have given a similar notice. The Senator from Washington has been so extremely generous as to give me the place he would occupy; and I should like to proceed with my remarks as soon as the morning business is over.

Mr. KELLOGG. If there is any discussion on or objection to the joint resolution, I shall not ask that it be considered. I do not think that there will be. I do not wish to take up any time.

Mr. REED. If there is no discussion on the joint resolution I shall not object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 222) extending until July 1, 1920, the effective date of section 10 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 2, after the date, "July 1, 1920," to insert:

Provided, That said section shall become effective on March 1, 1919, as to any corporations hereafter organized.

So as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the effective date on and after which the provisions of section 10 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, shall become and be effective is hereby deferred and extended to July 1, 1920: Provided, That said section shall become effective on March 1, 1919, as to any corporations hereafter organized.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE AND WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS (S. DOC. NO. 410).

Mr. GORE. I am informed by the superintendent of the Senate document room that the Declaration of Independence has never been printed as a public document. I therefore request that the Declaration of Independence and Washington's Farewell Address may be printed as one document, and that as large a number be printed as is permissible under the law governing such printing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The order was reduced to writing, and agreed to as follows:

Ordered, That the Declaration of Independence and Washington's Farewell Address be printed as a Senate document, and that as many additional copies as can be obtained for $500 be printed for the use of the Senate.

PATRIOTIC ATTITUDE OF ORGANIZED LABOR.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a short article from the Evening Star newspaper of this city, headed, "Washington printers denounce bolshevism. Declare organized labor opposes foreign effort to produce general strike."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

WASHINGTON PRINTERS DENOUNCE BOLSHEVISM—DECLARE ORGANIZED LABOR OPPOSES FOREIGN EFFORT TO PRODUCE GENERAL STRIKE.

The printers of Washington, as represented by Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, went on record yesterday as opposed to any form of industrial Workers of the World and bolshevism, reaffirming their loyalty and allegiance to sane patriotism and refusing to give their indorsement to the nation-wide effort of the Industrial Workers of the World to tie up enterprise and industry of the country by a general strike July 1.

The matter came up on the reading of a communication addressed to the union in which indorsement of the strike movement was asked.

ATTITUDE OF ORGANIZED LABOR.

E. W. Oyster, a member of the union and one of the best-known labor leaders, locally and nationally, presented the resolution that clearly defines the attitude of the printers, and, in fact, that of organized labor generally affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

The preamble declares the right of organized labor to secure its rights and recognition through peaceful channels, denounces violence in any form, and registers disapproval of bolshevism, favoring the maximum penalty of the law in the punishment of all violators.

The resolution, which was given unanimous indorsement, follows:

"The Industrial Workers of the World and the Bolsheviki, un-American organizations, composed mostly of unnaturalized foreigners, who believe in and are advocating murder, assassination, and incendiarism by the uncivilized, treacherous, and brutal use of the dynamite bomb, the dagger, and the torch, are advocating a universal strike to commence on the 1st day of July, and are endeavoring to influence all labor organizations to join with them in the universal strike.

COWARDLY AND UNCIVILIZED.

"Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, believing that such a strike would be unwarranted and unjustifiable and detrimental to the best interests of the whole country, and of all honest workers, whether organized or unorganized, that law and order should be maintained under all circumstances, and that the rightful demands of the working classes of the country for justice can be more surely and effectively brought about by peaceful and lawful means—through agitation, education, organization, and the ballot—rather than by cowardly and uncivilized use of dynamite or other unlawful methods, unreservedly condemns and repudiates any and all persons who encourage or resort to violence and destruction of life and property during labor troubles, or at any other time, and believes that the maximum penalty should be inflicted upon all those who so violate the laws of the land."

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further morning business, morning business is closed.

OIL AND GAS LANDS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on Senate bill 2812, the oil leasing bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nevada.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2812) to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, and sodium on the public domain.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. Just a second. I wish to make a statement with reference to this matter. I want the legislative situation——

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If the Senator will yield to me, the morning hour is not yet closed. We are still under the head of resolutions, are we not?

Mr. PITTMAN. We are now considering the conference report on Senate bill 2812, as I understand.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The reason I make the suggestion is that I did not hear the announcement made that we had passed the introduction of morning business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair asked if there was any further morning business, and, nobody interrupting, the Chair said morning business was closed.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The reason why I desire recognition is that there is a matter of importance that I want to bring to the attention of the Senate. It will not create discussion. I refer to a Senate resolution asking for certain information from the Agricultural Department. The time is so short that, unless the resolution is promptly acted upon, the Department of Agriculture will be unable to get the information to the Senate. I therefore desire to ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. PITTMAN. I temporarily yield the floor for that purpose.

NITRATE OF SODA.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read. The resolution (S. Res. 461) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture is directed to advise the Senate as soon as possible as to the cost of the nitrate of soda now being distributed by the Agricultural Department to the farmers; including the original cost of the soda per ton shipside Chile, the cost of ocean transportation per ton; an itemized statement of what other costs were included in its final delivery to the Ordnance Department; the price paid the Ordnance Department per ton; and an itemized statement of the cost included in the handling, shipping, and distribution to the farmers; also, the present price per ton of soda shipside Chile and the cost of delivery at the ports of America.

OIL AND GAS LANDS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] has stated that he gave notice that he would at the close of morning business address the Senate with regard to the constitution of the proposed league of nations, or a matter of that substance. It has been understood, however, for several days that, owing to the legislative situation, during the morning hour, after the routine morning business was completed, the Senate would devote its time to the consideration of the conference report on what is known as the general mineral releasing bill. That understanding has been violated ever since that report has been before the Senate. Such action has been in accordance with our antiquated rules, I will admit; but, whether it is in accordance with the rules or not it is an outrage upon the country, and it is bringing into greater contempt the legislative efforts of the Senate.

On the 18th of this month, on behalf of the conference committee, I presented to the Senate the conference report embodying the agreement between the House of Representatives and this body with regard to legislation considered so vital by the President of the United States that some four years ago he urged upon Congress the necessity of passing legislation of this character. He has found it necessary time and time again to urge upon Congress in his messages to enact this important legislation for the benefit of the country. The two bodies of Congress have been striving for six years to reach an agreement. This body has three times passed a bill on this subject and the other body has three times passed a bill; but this is the first time the two bodies have reached an agreement.

I can not permit myself, as chairman of the committee of conference on the part of the Senate, to stand idly by and see the wishes of the Senate, of the House, and of the people of this country trampled on because rules made when Senators had respect for their privileges still exist in this body. Think of the absurdity of having great measures for determination before the Senate, with only eight or nine days left of the session, and Senators standing here talking for hours on some subject that is not under consideration by this body.

On the 18th of this month I had the conference report printed in the RECORD, so that Senators might read and consider it; on the 19th of this month, during the morning hour, the Senate saw fit to consider the conference report and brought it forward; but it had hardly reached the floor when the distinguished Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] proceeded to discuss the league of nations until the hour of 2 o'clock arrived, and, under our system of procedure, at the hour of 2 o'clock, appropriation bills being given precedence, the conference report which was supposed to be under discussion—an agreement of the two Houses—was cast aside, and the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill took its place. Even when that bill was before the Senate for consideration the distinguished Senator from Washington still continued to discuss the league of nations.

Again, on the next day, the 20th of February, performing my duty as the chairman of the managers of the conference on the part of the Senate, I again suggested to the Senate that it should take up for consideration the conference report on this general mineral leasing bill during the morning hour, knowing that at 2 o'clock the unfinished business would again come along and displace it from further consideration. On the next day, February 21, yesterday, another distinguished Senator on the other side of the Chamber, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], aided in the determination of this vital question by discussing the proposed league of nations until within 10 minutes of 2 o'clock, and consideration during those 10 minutes was taken up by the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], who has kept on tap a speech to use whenever there is any time that might be available for the consideration of the conference report. He proceeded to speak on yesterday, and when the hour of 2 o'clock arrived and another bill was brought up he discontinued his speech. He has discontinued that speech every time any other Senator wanted him to discontinue it and when there could not be a vote on the conference report on the mineral leasing bill.

I intend to relieve myself of this responsibility. The Senate is either going to consider this conference report seriously or it is going to vote not to do so. Whenever the Senate votes not to do so I am willing to abide by that decision, but I do not intend to stand here and see one or two Senators contravene the will, or what may be the will, of the majority of the Senate.

I am serving notice now that I am going to move, when the hour of 2 o'clock arrives, to take up the conference report and continue its consideration. Then, if Senators see fit to discuss some other subject, at least when they get through we will have the report before the Senate. As it is now, when we only have the morning hour each day, Senators speak continuously until 2 o'clock, and then the consideration of the conference report terminates.

I am simply stating this because I want to urge the Senate to assist me in making this report the unfinished business, so that we may determine it one way or the other. Of course, if matters of far greater importance come on, I know what the Senate will do. They will take up those matters of greater importance. But if there is a filibuster against this matter, if two or three Senators are trying to defeat this measure by preventing it from coming to a vote, why, let that be demonstrated. It will not take them long to demonstrate it.

Oh, I admit that it is entirely according to the rules of the game for a gentleman to filibuster on the floor of the Senate. It is a privilege that you can not question. It has been done time and time again by all the Members of the Senate, I believe; yet it is the duty of those having charge of a bill to make those who see fit to utilize that power do it openly before the country, and not do it under cover. I want them to come out and say so, and if they do not come out and say so, I want their actions to confess to the country that they, by reason of the privilege they have to stand on this floor and talk without end, are going to defeat the will of Congress by virtue of that privilege.

Here is a measure that substantially in this form has passed the Senate three times and the House three times. Here is a conference report that was approved by the House of Representatives by a vote of 232 to 109. I am satisfied that two-thirds of the Members of this body, if given a chance to vote at this minute, would vote to approve that conference report. I believe there are Senators here who are attempting to defeat the right of the Senate to vote on this conference report, and, so believing, I am going to force them into the open, if the Senate will stand by me in this matter. If that power on the part of two or three men can be exerted to the end of preventing this body from agreeing on the report of one of its committees or disagreeing to the report of one of its committees, then let the world know it, and do not let those who are not responsible for the failure of legislation have to bear the burden of that failure. I want to tell you that if the report of this committee, which was appointed by this body, is not considered and this bill fails by reason of it, those who are responsible for it will have a burden to bear which is possibly far greater than they at present realize.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator state of what great importance this very measure which he has under consideration is to the great West. Our resources have been tied up for 15 years. We can not get any development whatever; and is it possible that the time of the Senate is to be frittered away on matters that are not before the Senate when this great measure has been agreed upon after six years of discussion upon each side of the Chamber?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, great as is the value of this matter to the western country, I say that it is of more value to the consumers of this country than it is to the development of the West.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. KNOX. I should like to inquire of the Senator if he is willing to state to the Senate which is of the greater importance, the oil-leasing bill or a project to revolutionize the entire political system of the world?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, there is not any question but that these great matters that are now pending in Europe are of more importance than any legislation that this body now has before it, or ever had before it; and yet it does not seem necessary that this body should cease to function by reason of matters that will take four or five or several months to terminate over there. It does not seem that that is essential. We have about eight days more in which to legislate in this body before this Congress comes to an end, and the question is as to whether or not the opinions and voices of these Senators with regard to something that may terminate six or seven months from now are of more value than the performance of the duties that they should perform in this body.

I do not know whether or not the chief duty of the Senator from Pennsylvania is to speak on this floor. I have no doubt that his advice and his opinion will be of great help to the body over there that is preparing this treaty with our enemies; but he has other forums in which he may speak on that matter. He has other times in which he can speak on that matter. We have eight days more in which to perform the duties that have been imposed upon us by the people of this country. Whenever a treaty comes to this body, then the Senator from Pennsylvania will discuss it directly and in a manner that will have its effect. The Senate of the United States, as a Senate, has nothing to do with the negotiations that are now going on in Europe. As an individual, every citizen has a right to be interested in them, but no Senator has any more rights or privileges with regard to the discussions going on in Europe than the most lowly private citizen in this country. He has no more right to utilize the time of this body in speaking with regard to those subjects than if we should open the doors here and invite the public in to use this as a public forum. There is no comparison between the importance of the two matters; but one of them is here before this body for a vote and the other is not here, and will not be here for months to come.

Now, I want to say something in regard to the importance of this bill as not dealing with the West. I know that those who have opposed this bill are doing it upon the theory that it is a benefit to the West. Let me tell you that the defeat of this bill is of more value to the Standard Oil Co. than any piece of legislation which could be enacted on this floor. Those men who are constantly crying that this bill is in the interest of the Standard Oil Co. would know, if they gave the matter any consideration at all, that they are working either voluntarily or involuntarily for the Standard Oil Co. The Standard Oil Co. own thousands and hundreds of thousands of acres of lands in Texas. They own title to hundreds of thousands of acres throughout the United States. They have patents to their land. They have a monopoly, to a certain extent, of the great existing oil fields of this country. All possible competition to that great concern is barred so long as those 6,000,000 acres of supposed oil lands are tied up and prevented from being put to use.

Ah, yes; they come in here and they say, "You want to help the Standard Oil Co." The Standard Oil Co., with the power of their money, have bought in Texas, in Kansas, and throughout this country private lands that will furnish them all the oil that they will need for years and years to come; and where is the competition coming from?

We have asked in this bill that one man be allowed to take by lease one oil claim. We have placed in this bill every clause that could be conceived of to distribute this oil throughout and among the people. It is protected against monopoly in every particular. It is drastic in its provisions against monopoly. Has anyone fought those provisions? Does anyone criticize the provisions covering monopoly? I tell you that when you see the distinguished Senator from Utah fighting the bill because he does not approve of a leasing system, and the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin fighting the bill because it is not enough of a leasing system, you have a combination that requires consideration.

The Senator from Utah contends, and has contended before the committee all of the time, that there are too many provisions for Government control thrown around this thing, so that they will embarrass the operation of it; it is a danger; it was the ruination of the leasing bill in Alaska, so it has been said on the floor of the Senate; while, on the other hand, the distinguished Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] attacks the bill on the ground that it is not sufficiently drastic.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. GRONNA. Is it or is it not true that under the provisions of this bill the mineral lands will enter into private ownership; and is it not possible for Rockefeller and for the Standard Oil Co. to get the balance of the land which the Government now owns?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I will answer that directly, without going any further, by saying "no." It is provided in this bill that no individual or corporation shall acquire, either directly or indirectly, an interest in more than 1,280 acres of land. Does that answer the Senator from North Dakota? I knew that the Senator from North Dakota knew nothing with regard to the provisions of this bill. I knew that the only information he ever had with regard to this bill was the letter he put in the RECORD the other day from Mr. Gifford Pinchot. Now, let me tell you how reliable the information of Mr. Gifford Pinchot is. Listen to this, please. Here is a part of his letter. Here is what Mr. Pinchot said:

> As to oil and gas discovered in the future, it compels the Government to give absolute patents to the discoverer, leaving a small area adjacent to the lands so patented to be leased to others.

That is his statement. Let me tell you how true that is. He says it gives title by patent to the discoverer, does he not? And you would understand that it gave him a patent to everything he discovered, would you not? Is not that the idea that Mr. Pinchot intended to convey? As a matter of fact, under the bill which lies before us, he only gets patent to one-fourth of the oil land he discovers. The other three-fourths is subject to lease by the Government. Mr. Pinchot says that a little land, a small quantity of land adjacent, is subject to lease. There is three times as much land subject to lease under this bill as there is subject to patent to the discoverer.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question right there?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. GRONNA. Is it not true that if these lands can not be leased, they will enter into private ownership, and that that will be the ultimate result—that they will all pass into private ownership?

Mr. PITTMAN. If they are not leased?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. PITTMAN. Then they remain Government property, as they have remained for nine years, because there is no law by which they can go into private ownership.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; but I used the word "ultimately."

Mr. PITTMAN. Ultimately?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; ultimately; I agree with the Senator. Ultimately, after the absurdity of this Pinchotism has penetrated the consideration of men who personally know nothing about it, the whole foolish thing will be wiped into the waste-basket.

I want to say to you that constantly you are trying to regulate the laws of nature by legislation. You are trying to make men discover oil who know nothing about oil. You are trying to make men develop oil who never developed oil. You are trying to create out of a mining engineer a prospector; you are trying to make a mining expert out of a farmer; you are trying to make a farmer out of a miner, all the way through. You are trying to take your beautiful dreams and improve upon nature. We have been compelled to accept this legislation. I want to say that as far as I am personally concerned, it is simply the best that I could get. We have surrendered, I want to say to you, nearly every foot of ground to those people who believe in what you call the leasing system of minerals. There is not any question about that.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I do not find any fault with the distinguished Senator from Nevada for calling attention to the fact that I may not understand the provisions of his bill; but if the Senator from Nevada has given this matter as much attention as he states, he will know that I have had bills pending before his committee since he became a Senator, and in fact long before he came to this body, which I believe contain provisions that would be more beneficial to his own country, and certainly more beneficial to the entire country.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have always listened before the committee with a great deal of interest to the Senator, and I have found that when the Senator was moved by reason, rather than by impulses, you could follow him quite often; but when the Senator will take a letter like this one and place it in the RECORD as a description of his views of the bill, how can one account for it?

Now, another thing. Let me read from that same letter. I have just read a glaring misstatement from the letter and now I will read another glaring misstatement.

Mr. GRONNA. Will the Senator do me the justice to read what I said in the brief statement I made, in which I said I do not believe in locking up these minerals from the use of the public? Will the Senator be kind enough to do me the justice to read that?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will admit the Senator does not believe in it, and he said so. Let me read another beautiful statement from Mr. Pinchot. He had already, as I said, made a glaring misstatement in regard to the land that was patented. Listen to this. He says:

> The bill under discussion abolishes this system of classification by value and returns to sale at the old nominal prices, with competitive bidding above the minimum, a device easily workable by bidders to depress the price to the minimum.

He knows that in this bill there is a provision that no man who owns 2,560 acres of coal land, or who is interested in 2,560 acres of coal, either directly or indirectly, may become a bidder at that sale. He knows that the prior right is reserved to the Secretary of the Interior to refuse any and all bids that he considers unfair to the Government.

You have got to assume that the Secretary of the Interior is going to be dishonest before you could sustain the charges made by Mr. Pinchot. If the Secretary of the Interior is dishonest, then the grant of power to him to execute the leases under this bill can be utilized for the same fraudulent purposes.

I want to say to you now that there will not be oil enough in this country to supply domestic needs and the requirements of the Navy and of our great commercial fleet, unless some provision is made by Congress for the discovery and development of additional oil fields in this country. And what is your plan?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning hour having expired, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 14746) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

Mr. PITTMAN. The important part of this bill is the provision looking to the discovery of new oil fields. That was the purpose of the act. The Standard Oil Co. already owns under patents sufficient oil to satisfy its needs. It is the thousands of other prospectors in this country, it is the independents, whom you want to draw into this field of enterprise. Now, what is your plan? What is your plan of developing oil fields, of discovering oil fields? Do you think for one moment that the Government to-day owns an oil field? If it did, why does it not set it aside for the Navy? When their experts came before the Committee on Naval Affairs in regard to naval reserves they asked us to set aside 6,000,000 acres of oil lands described by geologists. Why do you not set aside 100,000 acres of that for Navy and develop it. They said, "Because we do not know whether there is oil there or not. It will cost us $50,000 a well to find out whether there is oil, and we may sink 100 wells and never find it." Yet 6,000,000 acres of that land that the Government itself is afraid to prospect has been withdrawn from entry for nearly nine years. What is your plan for developing it? Have you got any?

Yet when these two Houses agree on a plan of development we have one man write a letter here, a letter that was written before the conference report was agreed to, before he knew what it contained, and you put that in the RECORD as advice for legislation to this body. In his letter he states that the House bill is fairly good, that the Senate bill is abominable, and at the time he wrote that letter there had been no agreement as to which bill would be sustained. That is the character of advice he offered.

I say to you this Congress has worked untiringly through its committees in attempting to devise a fair plan for the discovery of new oil fields, for the development of the so-called 6,000,000 acres of oil land. After six long years we have agreed on this plan, which is partial title and partial leasing. They allow a man to take a prospecting permit on the public land of not to exceed 1,280 acres, 640 acres if it is within 10 miles of a known oil well, or 2,560 acres if it is over 10 miles from a known oil well. He is required to develop that. He is required to expend his own money, his own time. If he makes a failure, he gets nothing. If he makes a discovery, the people of this country are enriched by additional oil supplies and a new competitor has been found for the Standard Oil Co.

The Standard Oil Co. will acquire that oil? Yes; but for one-fourth that the man gets a patent to there are three-fourths that the Government leases and keeps under control forever through the leasing system.

That only applies to discoveries, mind you. That only applies to something that the Government has not got. When you get down to the known oil fields, this straight leasing system and nothing but the leasing system, with perpetual Government control, continues to exist under this bill,

Mr. GRONNA. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator how many oil wells the Standard Oil Co. is operating now, or the volume of it, in barrels?

Mr. PITTMAN. There are hundreds of millions of barrels.

Mr. GRONNA. Is it not true that the Standard Oil Co. is not operating any; that the mining of oil is done by individuals; that it goes into the hands of the Standard Oil Co. after it has been mined; that it goes into their pipe lines and into their refineries?

Mr. PITTMAN. That is not true, Senator.

Mr. GRONNA. It is true.

Mr. PITTMAN. Let me tell you where you are wrong. The Standard Oil Co. has abundant subsidiary companies. In every great field that is discovered the Standard Oil Co. has its subsidiary operating companies that it puts into those fields. Those companies acquire the land and the Standard Oil Co. acquires the oil. We know that to be a fact. The Senator is simply in error in regard to that. If the Senator was right then a great many of the arguments which have been made that the Standard Oil Co. will be benefited by this bill by acquiring title on the naval reserve will fail. It is not true; but if there is anything against this bill I want those who know it to say so, and not waste their time placing in the RECORD letters that are palpably on their face the production of either an insane man or an inefficient one.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator has been discussing oil. How about coal?

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] says to me that we have discussed the coal situation very clearly. But what is the particular question the Senator wants to know in regard to the legislation on coal?

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator has discussed the oil question. I will now ask him what about the provision in the bill in reference to coal?

Mr. PITTMAN. The bill provides that any citizen of the United States may acquire either by purchase or by lease not to exceed 2,560 acres of coal land. That is the provision. Now, if it is acquired under lease it is acquired under the general provisions of the bill. If it is acquired by purchase he must designate the tract of land, and it must be advertised and published and put up to public competition. After the price and value have been fixed by competitive bidding, then the Secretary of the Interior decides whether he will accept any of the bids or not. If the Secretary of the Interior is honest, then the Government will get the full price of the coal land. But Mr. Pinchot says it will not buy coal lands because people would rather lease them. That is his statement in this letter. But if they do buy it, then it is on a value determined by competitive bidding, and even after the price fixed by competitive bidding the Secretary of the Interior can say, "I do not consider that fair to the Government and I will not take it." It all depends on the honesty of your administrative officers, both as to the leasing provisions and as to the sale provisions.

But that is not all. Mind you, there is not a stockholder in one of the big coal companies in this country who can acquire a lease or title to a foot of coal land under this bill. Did you realize that? There is not a man who is interested as a stockholder in any other corporation or as an individual in any other coal in the country in excess of 2,560 acres of land who can become a lessee or a purchaser under this bill. Where does your monopoly come from? How can you possibly monopolize 40,000,000 acres of coal land under such a provision? I tell you the object of the bill is to fight the monopoly. The anthracite coal monopoly to-day has its coal; the Standard Oil Co. and the Dutch Shell Co., the great oil companies of this country, have their coal. This bill is intended to furnish competition to those great companies, and I regret that you gentlemen, whom I know to be sincere, are led into the support of those great companies by words and assertions that have no foundation whatever.

Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on Senate bill No. 2812.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am indeed sorry if the fact I gave notice that I desired to invite the attention of the Senate to-day to a great question of first importance should have been taken by my very good friend, the Senator from Nevada, as an attempt to obstruct the passage of the bill he so earnestly advocates.

Mr. PITTMAN. Let me assure the Senator that whatever I said that might have conveyed that meaning was not intended by me. I am quite sure the Senator has no intention of filibustering. He has no opposition that I know of to the bill.

Mr. REED. On the contrary, Mr. President, without knowing a great deal about the bill, because it is vouched for by the Senator and by two or three other western Senators, I had intended to give it my support.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri will proceed.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ventured to ask and now venture to again ask the indulgence of the Senate to the great measure now challenging the attention of the world. By way of preliminary, perhaps by way of excuse for taking the time of the Senate when we are in the closing hours of a session, I might say a word called out by a remark of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. I think I heard him say in effect to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] "that the league of nations now in process of formation is no part of the business of the Senate and will not be until it is brought here in the form of a treaty; that it is no more a part of the business of any Member of the Senate than it is of the humblest man in the Nation."

In one sense that is true, for all that may transpire in the making of this league of nations affects the humblest man in the Nation. It affects him because it affects his country, and anything that affects his country is his business. He is yet the sovereign, and for that humblest man, that sovereign with the pick and the shovel, or that sovereign back of his bank counter with his dollars, or that sovereign who is a student, or that sovereign who follows the plow—for all of them I have to say they have the right to think, to question, and to speak when it is proposed in any manner to change the structure of their Government. This is their country, this is their Government, this is their Constitution; and the humblest man is as great as is the greatest of the land. Each is an uncrowned king, and each has yet the right to think and speak.

But, sir, the Senate does have a peculiar responsibility, and that responsibility does not begin at such time as an instrument may be laid here before us, all complete, for if we wait until that time we may be guilty of a kind of laches which would at least place us in the position of having failed to speak when we should speak.

Mr. President, upon that let me read you a very significant statement—a statement which I think challenges us now, before the thing is done, to speak out clearly lest the thing be done. I read:

> The President is made to approach that body—
> The Senate—
> as a servant conferring with his master, and, of course, deferring to his master.

This was written sometime ago, as you will observe.

> His only power of compelling compliance on the part of the Senate lies in his initiative in negotiation, which affords him a chance to get the country into such scrapes, so pledged in the view of the world to certain courses of action, that the Senate hesitates to bring about the appearance of dishonor which would follow its refusal to ratify the rash promises or to support the indiscreet threats of the Department of State.

Congressional Government, printed in 1900; Woodrow Wilson, its distinguished author.

It therefore seems to me at such a time as this no padlock should be put upon the tongue of any man charged with a high responsibility; but now, before the evil has been accomplished, we should advise the world of what the evil is, if there be evil. If, on the other hand, this instrument be filled with good, if, as some men have claimed, it is the greatest thing since Christ was born, not even excluding the passion of the crucifixion when the Saviour died for all mankind, then the more of light, the more of glory, the more of examination, the better will the shining gold appear. The more of virtue in the instrument, the more it is exposed to the full view of all the world, the more the world will love it. Only the wicked seek the shadows of the night. Only the thing that can not bear investigation shrinks from the test of the forum, from the caldron of debate.

Mr. President, with those preliminary remarks and with one further observation I shall proceed to a consideration of the matter in chief. That observation is this: I shall not try to entertain the Senate; I shall not try to entertain these galleries. I am interested, if I can, in bringing together the various phases and clauses of this proposed constitution of a league of nations and of exposing to view the real meaning of the document.

Let me say further by way of preliminary that it is the most remarkably obscure instrument I have ever read. It does not even possess the clarity of thought and expression that you find in Mr. House's book Philip Drew. Making no pretense to the ability of condensation, I think any man might say that he can put this instrument into perfectly clear and lucid expression with one-fifth of the words employed. It is because of this remarkable construction and obscurity that it is necessary to ask you to follow with great care and at a painful waste of time the language of this deed of power. Two or three propositions I wish to lay down, and then I shall come to an analysis of the document itself.

Mr. President, shall we surrender with the pen what Washington gained by his sword?

Shall we repudiate the nationalism under which we have become the first people of the earth for the doubtful experiment of internationalism?

Shall we make our Government of the people, by the people, and for the people a Government partly by the people and partly by kings and emperors?

The answer to these questions is involved in the acceptance or rejection of the proposed constitution of the league of nations.

The hour is big with the fate of the world. The consequences flowing from the steps threatened to be taken must inevitably affect all peoples, nations, and tongues of the living. They may concern the destiny of the shadowy races yet unborn. They are undoubtedly fraught with the gravest consequences to our beloved country. A situation so tragic demands the attention of every loyal citizen of the Republic.

America entered this war a complete sovereign. She acknowledged no master; she was arbiter of her own destiny. A victor in the war, shall she nevertheless emerge a mere constituent state of a league dominated by European monarchs and Asiatic despots? Shall her nationalism be stricken down and for it substituted an internationalism? Shall our independent democracy come under the control, either in whole or in part, of foreign monarchs or of foreign Bolsheviki? We can not escape these questions if we will but learn the truth of what is concealed within the four corners of the proposed international league.

A few weeks ago I ventured to state in a speech that the proposed league would:

(a) Abrogate the Monroe doctrine.
(b) Surrender in part our sovereignty.
(c) Involve us in the conflicts of the world.
(d) Compel us to contribute to an international force, which might in certain exigencies be used against us.
(e) Submit matters vital to the United States to a tribunal the majority of which would be composed of foreigners.

At once there arose an indignant protest. Members of Congress and many important members of the press declared that no such proposition would ever be found in the league when once its terms were made known. They insisted with indignation that the attack upon the league was prejudiced and unfair, because the plan of no such league was in contemplation. Senators sitting within the sound of my voice know that I have had such conversations with them.

I now affirm, and shall undertake to show, that the text of the league constitution as submitted embraces every evil I predicted, and that it carries us into many other iniquities to which I shall call attention.

In order to understand the questions involved it is necessary to study the composition of the league of nations. That study will speedily demonstrate five things. I am asking the Senate now to hold this in their minds as we proceed:

First. That the control of the league from the first will inevitably be in European and Asiatic nations, having many interests in common and who may have common antagonisms against us.

Second. The British Empire will, in all probability, constitute the controlling influence of the league.

Third. If at any time England shall lose control, the Germanic powers will be likely to succeed to her position of dominance.

Fourth. There is in the background the menace of world Bolshevism. Indeed, that monster is the most earnest advocate of internationalism. Its fangs are plainly visible in the constitution of the league.

Fifth. Whoever controls the league will control the world.

The members of the league are known as the "high contracting parties." At present these are, so far as disclosed, Great Britain, France, Italy, Japan, and the United States. It is provided that they may also include (a) other States permitted to sign when the league is formed, a list of those States being made up; (b) those named in a secret protocol as States to be invited. What those States are we are not advised. (c) Any self-governing countries, including—get the language—dominions and colonies, that may be admitted by a two-thirds vote.

DELEGATES.

The action of the members is to be effected through a body composed of delegates of the members. Each member has but one vote, but may have three delegates. So let me pause to mark it.

Contrary to certain newspaper reports which have been sent out from time to time, the United States of America will have one vote, and only one vote, in this league. The smallest nation admitted and the smallest independent colony admitted will have a vote equal to the vote of the United States of America.

CONTROL OF THE LEAGUE.

I come now to discuss the question of who will control this league. At present, of the known signatories, are the British Empire, an empire; Italy, a monarchy; Japan, a monarchy or despotism; France, a republic; the United States, a republic. Thus the league will be composed of three monarchies and two republics. Who will control it, I ask again?

It must not be forgotten that France is under immeasurable obligations to Great Britain of money and of gratitude. She is always bound to rely upon Great Britain for assistance, for shipping, money, and protection. The British Empire holds the key to the Mediterranean. The Mediterranean is vital to France. Upon the army and navy of the British Empire France is, and always must be, dependent against the great Germanic people, whether they exist as republics or as empires.

This menace, Senators, has been present for 2,000 years. The soil of Alsace-Lorraine was watered with the blood of contending Gaul and Teuton before Christ was born, and every century since the red stain has been renewed.

France knows that a combination between the Germanic powers and the British Empire would mean her annihilation. She also knows that such a fate could not be prevented by the United States.

Italy and France are so similarly situated that, for the purposes of this argument, what has been said of one may be applied to the other. England, France, and Italy are bound together by geographical contiguity and by many common interests in which the United States is not concerned and which may even be antagonistic to us.

Japan has for many years been the close ally of Great Britain, and is held to her by a secret treaty of alliance. At the same time she has been in a state of irritation against us so acute as to cause grave fears of war. So delicate has been the situation that in recent years—very recent years—our Secretary of State made a trip to California to persuade her authorities not to irritate Japan by insisting upon the right of California as a sovereign State to determine the rights of Japanese subjects residing within her borders. I said then, and I say now, that the performance was not to the credit of the United States.

It thus appears that if the original organization of the league is limited to the five known members, namely, the British Empire, France, Italy, Japan, and the United States, in any controversy there will be the votes of four aliens against the single vote of the United States. The interests of these four aliens are especially in the Eastern Hemisphere, and they are, as I have undertaken to show, united by treaties and common interests. Clearly the United States is from the first at a disadvantage.

At this point I want to read the words that fell from the dead Washington, which were read to you this morning. He said:

> Europe has a set of primary interests, which to us have none or a very remote relation. Hence, she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves, by artificial ties, in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics, or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.
> It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliance with any portion of the foreign world.

ADDITIONS TO THE LEAGUE.

I will proceed now to discuss the additions to the league. What nations are named in the secret protocol as eligible we do not know. Perhaps Mr. House will later inform us, for that unofficial American appears to be the principal representative of America, save the President. Neither do we know whether any or all of those named in the secret protocol will join the league. We do know—and get this, please—that at any time by a two-thirds vote any State or dominion or colony can be admitted, and when they are admitted they shall each have one vote, each having a vote equal to that of the United States. The power, therefore, which now controls may at any time increase its dominance by admitting only such self-governing countries, dominions, or colonies as will best suit its purposes and perpetuate its control.

Nearly all of us have had some experience in politics. All of us know that if you can control the primary organization—and the primary organization determines who is to come in afterwards—having control of the primary organization, you can hold control forever. So here primary control is such that it can continue to control by letting in or keeping out whomsoever it pleases. It is not difficult to tell how the power will be exercised.

DOMINIONS AND COLONIES.

This question was so ably discussed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] on yesterday that I hesitate to enter upon it. I was, however, surprised to find one of our keenest Senators had placed a different construction on the language. I am glad the Senator from Idaho put into the RECORD the quotation from the London Times, which I venture to repeat:

> The project, if not the same as that outlined by Gen. Smuts, is like it as its brother. * * * It is a cause for legitimate pride to recognize in the covenant so much of the work of Englishmen. * * * It is again a source of legitimate pride to Englishmen that article 19 in the covenant might almost be taken as an exposition of the principles animating the relations of Great Britain with India and the dominions. That the dominions are in this document recognized as nations before the world is also a fact of profound significance in the history of these relations.

As for me, there never has been any doubt of the language. Attend, please. The provision is contained in article 7. The admission of the dominions and colonies is most significant and indicates that Great Britain is "on the job." Whether all dominions and all colonies may be admitted, or whether only self-governing colonies and self-governing dominions are eligible may be a matter of debate, for the language is:

> ART. 7. Admission to the league * * * shall be limited to fully self-governing countries, including dominions and colonies.

The phrase "including dominions and colonies" is meaningless unless the following are fully eligible: First, the Dominion of Canada; second, Australia; third, New Zealand; fourth, the Union of South Africa, formerly the Orange Free State and the Transvaal, now possessing a government similar to that of Canada, with Gen. Botha as premier. The plan adopted then is that the league may be so constituted that the British Empire will have 5 votes against 1 vote by the United States.

Senators, I challenge your thought to this matter; I appeal for a candid judgment upon it—not for that biased kind of judgment we so often bring to questions of minor importance. I say that under the terms of this instrument the self-governing British colonies and dominions can be admitted, and, when admitted, each will have a vote the equal of the vote of the United States.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. REED. I yield for a question.

Mr. GORE. I simply desire to observe that Australia has fewer people than the State of New York by 2,000,000, and Australia has less people than Pennsylvania or Illinois.

Mr. REED. Whether Great Britain, France, and Italy have at present other colonies which may be called "self-governing," it is clear that nations, having many colonies, can quickly qualify any of them by granting the necessary degree of autonomy. Possibly Japan could in like manner increase its vote by qualifying Korea and some other possessions. I do not stop to inquire.

SELF-GOVERNING COUNTRIES—WHAT KIND ARE ELIGIBLE.

I come now to consider the character of countries which may be admitted. The phrase is:

Admission to the league of States * * * shall be limited to fully self-governing countries, including dominions and colonies.

If we make the phrase read, as we must, if we limit the colonies and dominions to those that are self-governing—and to do otherwise would be to admit all the colonies, an absurd result—then the language would be "admission to the league of States shall be limited to the fully self-governing States, including fully self-governing colonies. Plainly, if Canada and Australia and New Zealand are fully self-governing colonies, then Persia, now self-governing in the sense indicated, yet completely under the control of Great Britain, could be admitted.

What of Egypt and India? What of the other colonies and dependent States? What of those States included within "spheres of influence?" How nearly will Japan come to voting China?

The foregoing commentaries make it plain that the league as originally organized will (a) be in all probability dominated by Great Britain; (b) this primary control will enable her to maintain her control by regulating new membership; (c) her right to vote her colonies and dominions gives her an immense advantage; (d) from the first, and at all times, European and Asiatic influences will predominate over the United States; (e) assuming that no general revolution takes place in the immediate future, it is clear that from its inception monarchies will largely outnumber the republics. If, however, the Bolshevists, Socialists, and internationalists shall succeed in gaining control of a large number of countries, then that influence may become predominant and the league be brought within its complete control, or the forces referred to may combine with despotic powers against us, as the Bolshevists of Russia did with Germany against their allies, and thus work irrevocable havoc.

STATES HAVE EQUAL VOTES IN THE LEAGUE.

I return to that theme. I read; I am not now going to give my comment, but the language of this instrument:

Each of the high contracting parties shall have one vote, but may not have more than three representatives. (Art. 2.)

The high contracting parties embraces those who organize the league and who afterwards become members. That is my comment. That is made plain by the following. I quote:

The action of the high contracting parties under the terms of this covenant shall be effected through the instrumentality of a meeting of a body of delegates held at stated intervals * * *. (Art. 1.) For the purpose of dealing with matters within the sphere of the league. * * * Each of the high contracting parties shall have one vote, but may not have more than three representatives. (Art. 2.)

Representatives of the high contracting parties and officers of the league shall enjoy diplomatic immunities. (Art. 6.)

A reading of all parts of the instrument makes it plain that the term "high contracting parties" applies to all members. It therefore follows that the language of article 2, "each of the high contracting parties shall have one vote," means that each State upon becoming a member of the league shall be entitled to cast one vote.

Under the rule thus established the British self-governing colony of New Zealand has a vote equal to that of the United States; likewise Australia, Canada, and the Union of South Africa. Each would be able to cast a vote offsetting that of the United States. The same statement probably applies to such countries as Luxemburg; it certainly does apply to all of the smaller countries of Europe, even to such kingdoms as Montenegro, with its population of less than a half million souls; Liberia, the Negro republic, with a population of between 1,000,000 and 2,000,000, might be admitted, for, bear in mind, she is one of our gallant allies, having gone to a paper battle with Germany immediately after we signed a declaration of war.

Now follow this: Germany and Austria can not be forever apart from this league, nor can Russia, unless we are to have a league that will compose one half the world and allow another league to be formed that will compose the other half, and then allow the two leagues to fight it out for supremacy, and thus insure another world war. So we must consider them. If Germany and Austria and Russia are admitted, as they must ultimately be, then each of these countries will cast a vote equal to that of the United States; indeed, the four kingdoms of the German Empire and the five kingdoms of the Austro-Hungarian Empire could all undoubtedly qualify.

What has been said places it beyond dispute that, in every question that may arise, the representatives of European and Asiatic countries, principally monarchies, will constitute a majority of the league. Canada, the one great country of the Western Hemisphere which might have natural geographical and economic interests with us is a part of the British Empire and as loyal to England as is the city of London.

THE JURISDICTION OF THE LEAGUE.

I come now to the question of the jurisdiction of the league, and I assert that a close study of the scheme of the league demonstrates that its powers are almost unlimited. Every nation entering the league yields to its arbitrament and decision all controversies with other countries, even though they involve the national honor or the national life. There is no exception. I am going to repeat that, for I want to burn it into the brain and heart of the American people, that every nation entering the league yields to its arbitrament and decision all controversies with other countries, even though they involve the national honor or the national life.

Nay, more; so that I may be clearly understood, I assert that they yield this power of decision to a league—not to an arbitration, and not to an arbitration court, both of which are mentioned in this document—but, as I shall show, a decision in every instance can be forced by the league itself.

This brings me to a sort of peculiar construction in this scheme—the executive council. We have the league, composed of the delegates of all of these States. Then there is erected an executive council, which has powers largely similar to or embracing those of the league. This executive council has also some powers that it really does not appear the league possesses, but I take it that a fair construction in the end would be that the executive council is the creature of the league. Nevertheless, we must consider it along with the league.

THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL.

The league is expressly authorized to create an executive council, which shall consist of representatives of the United States, the British Empire, France, Italy, Japan, and four other States, to be selected "by the body of delegates on such principles and in such manner as they think fit"; so that the other four additional members are to be selected by the body of delegates, who shall select such nations as they see fit, and select them in such manner as they see fit, without the let or hindrance or control of a single line of this instrument. I refer you to article 3 for the statement I have just made.

To this executive council, which is a part of and the creature of the league, are assigned certain great powers, and to the league itself certain other great powers. Some of these powers will be found practically all-embracing.

Any matter within—

Get this language—

Any matter within the sphere of action of the league or affecting the peace of the world may be dealt with at such meetings.

That is, the meetings of the executive council. I have quoted from article 3. Do you get it?

*Any matter * * * affecting the peace of the world.*

Of course that means any matter which the members of the council, in their judgment, think affects the peace of the world. Any matter affecting the peace of the world may be dealt with by the executive council.

Yesterday the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] quoted an expression from Macaulay, in which he declared that the actions of Frederick the Great in Europe had made black men fight on the coast of Coromandel and red men scalp each other by the Great Lakes of North America; so that actions that may be very small or that may be domestic in their nature, but which in the opinion of these nine autocrats—eight of them representing foreign countries; seven of them, at least, representing Asiatic or European despotisms or monarchies—anything that in their opinion affects the peace of the world comes within their all-embracing jurisdiction. Let no man say I have misrepresented this. Let those who hesitate and doubt, scarcely believing that such a thing as this should be writ down in cold ink upon cold paper, read article 7.

I quote again:

No State shall be admitted to the league unless * * * it shall conform to such principles as may be prescribed by the league in regard to its naval and military forces and armaments.

When we enter this league, we give to the league the right to say what the Army and Navy of the United States shall be. To this league, composed of Europeans and Asiatics, to this league, composed of the representatives of kings for the most part, we yield the sovereign right of the people of the United States and of the Congress of the United States to fix the size of our Army and our Navy.

I read again:

The executive council shall formulate plans for effecting such reduction. The executive council shall also determine for the consideration and action of the several Governments—for the consideration and action of the several Governments what military equipment and armament is fair and reasonable in proportion to the scale of forces laid down in the program of disarmament, and these limits, when adopted, shall not be exceeded without the permission of the executive council.

That is where they are trying to get around the Constitution—

When once they have said to Uncle Sam: "You shall have an Army of a certain size," or "a militia of a certain character," or "vessels of a certain number," we can not exceed that number without going to Europe and asking the gracious permission of eight gentlemen, six of whom probably can not speak our language and who have likely never set foot upon our shores!

I have just read from article 8. Under that article the executive council is authorized to present a scheme to limit and regulate the private manufacture of arms in all countries; so, before we can permit the manufacture of arms in the United States by private persons we shall have to get a license from these same eight foreign gentlemen; and they will give us that license or not give it as suits the interests of their own countries. Such is the history of the world. Such will be its history until men shall cease to be men.

Each nation must report the condition of its industries adapted to warlike purposes, and a sort of international smelling committee is instituted to find out what is being done. That you will find in articles 8 and 9.

When you set up this league, when you subscribe to this abdication of American sovereignty, you will have given to eight foreign gentlemen the right to fix the size of the Army and Navy, to regulate the amount of ammunition and guns the American Nation can manufacture for itself, and also the amount which private citizens within this Republic can manufacture.

Many Congressmen pay me the compliment of their attendance. They are standing up, and I wish they had seats; we ought to have some over here; but I say to these Members of the House: My poor remarks will be printed. I claim no merit for them, save that I have drawn together certain parts of this remarkable instrument; but Members of the House will find cited in the RECORD the language of the instrument to back every assertion I make, if they care to pay me the further compliment of an examination.

Now, since they have limited our arms, our right to make them, the size of our Armies and our Navies, let us see what else they are empowered to do. Notice the language of articles 10 and 11. I shall read them throughout:

Article 10.

The high contracting parties undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all States members of the league. In case of any such aggression—

I pause at that. That makes us do what the Holy Alliance did—guarantee the maintenance of the States signing. It makes us agree to send our arms and our money to protect the borders and sustain from all outside attack the Government of every nation in this league, whether it be despotic or not. It means also that if any nation should go to the rescue of a people rising in rebellion to gain their liberty, that would be an outside attack, and we would be bound to enter the war against those who are in rebellion.

Suppose, if you please, that Poland is erected into and recognized as a State. Suppose that a part of Russia lying adjacent to her, or a part of Austria, filled with patriots, loving republicanism and hating tyranny, should rise and should ask to become a part of Poland, and the Polish Army or the Polish people should go to their relief. That would be an outside interference; and it would then be the duty of the United States to march its Army to the defense of the monarch whose bloody hands had been upon the throats of an oppressed people. Suppose, sir, that Ireland were to rebel, and that some outside help were to be sent to Ireland. It would then be our duty, as guarantors of Great Britain against outside attack, upon being ordered by the league or by the council, immediately to attack the nation that had gone to the rescue of the Irish, who were seeking to establish their liberty.

Suppose, sir, that at some future day Canada shall conclude that she wants a separate government or that she wants to become a part of the American Commonwealth and have herself welded into the body of our States. If we go to her help every other nation in the world which is a member of this league will be bound to make common cause against us and against the Canadians who dare to seek either a government of their own or to aspire to be a part of this country.

We guarantee the territorial integrity of countries; and the executive council—not the Senate of the United States, not the House of Representatives, not the President, not all three combined—determine and advise upon the means by which—for the term is "advise"—the obligations shall be fulfilled. This is an astounding sweep of power; a transfer of the power which Congress has always had, which even the President did not have, which the fathers of the Republic withheld from the Executive and placed in the control of the representatives of the people. That power is here vested in an executive council, eight members of which are foreign to the United States, and, I say again, six members of which do not speak the English language as their mother tongue, and six of which are at present representatives of kings, and spring from countries that prefer kings and monarchies to republics.

I read on:

In case of any such aggression—

I am reading from article 10, and notice the language—

In case of any such aggression, or in case of any threat or danger of such aggression, the executive council shall advise upon the means by which the obligation shall be fulfilled.

"Any threat or danger!" Why, sir, a cloud of dispute as big as a man's hand may rise in the political horizon, and that could be construed into a threat or danger. A dispute with Mexico over an oil territory, a dispute with reference to the stealing of American cattle, a dispute with reference to shooting across the line—all these would be threats or dangers; and instantly this body of non-English-speaking foreigners, living 3,000 miles from here, could assume jurisdiction and could advise upon the means by which the high contracting parties would preserve the territorial and political independence of Mexico!

Read it, Senators. Do not read it like men who intend not to see; but read it, and may God give you the inspiration to read it, in the great white light that flows down from the soul of Washington upon the land he loved and dedicated to liberty.

I read article 11:

Any war or threat of war, whether immediately affecting any of the high contracting parties or not, is hereby declared a matter of concern to the league, and the high contracting parties reserve the right to take any action that may be deemed wise and effectual to safeguard the peace of nations.

What? Do you say this league is to interfere with matters outside its own members and that do not concern its own members? It is unbelievable that so monstrous a thing as that should be proposed; yet it is here plainly written down as one of the clauses of this document that is not capable of misunderstanding, one that is plain. I read it now again; and all men in the country should be compelled, somehow or other, to understand it. Even Taft ought to be made to read it every day to his audiences. [Laughter.]

Any war or threat of war, whether immediately affecting any of the high contracting parties or not, is hereby declared a matter of concern to the league, and the high contracting parties reserve the right to take any action that may be deemed wise and effectual to safeguard the peace of nations.

That means that these eight or nine men who constitute this council may take whatsoever action they see fit. Thus do we undertake to set ourselves up as the complete masters of the world. Thus do we solemnly pledge that we will become a party to each international controversy, that we will thrust ourselves into every dispute; that we will play the master over all nations, great and small, that do not come within this league.

These articles, I repeat, leave no room for construction. Each member solemnly binds itself to preserve against external aggression the territory of all of the members. The way in which a nation must respond to this obligation is to be determined by the executive council.

The executive council shall advise upon the means by which the obligation shall be fulfilled.

Unless the word "advise" is synonymous with "direct," and unless the advice is to be followed as a matter of good faith, then the phrase amounts to nothing. Clearly if we enter this league we are bound to fight to preserve the boundaries of every State admitted.

Article 11 goes further and declares that—

Any war or threat of war * * * is hereby declared a matter of concern to the league.

I have discussed that question and shall not repeat it. I proceed now to another phase.

RIGHT TO DECLARE WAR.

The right to declare war is taken from the American Congress and placed in the executive council, which is eight to one composed of foreigners. The propositions just advanced are supported by the provisions of article 10 and article 11 just quoted, and I shall not repeat them, because my argument upon that I regard as complete.

JURISDICTION OF LEAGUE ALMOST UNLIMITED.

What questions, then, come within the purview of the league?

Broadly speaking, every question or any question arising anywhere in the world that may provoke a dispute or may cause a war comes within the jurisdiction of this board of nine men. Among other things, the Monroe doctrine, border disputes, the right of aliens to enter and remain in the United States, privileges of aliens while so remaining, the rights of American citizens along the Mexican border, the destruction of American ships upon the high seas, the seizure of sailors upon American vessels, the imprisonment of American seamen, the building of fortresses to command the canal, the seizure of the canal, these and a thousand other vital questions, including, indeed, all questions, can be forced by any of our antagonists to a decision—note this, please—not by a court of arbitration, not by arbitrators we agree upon, but can be forced to a decision by any of our antagonists, by the executive council, or by the league itself. This I shall now proceed to demonstrate. I quote:

Any war or threat of war, whether immediately affecting any of the high contracting parties or not, is hereby declared a matter of concern to the league, and the high contracting parties reserve the right to take any action that may be deemed wise and effectual to safeguard the peace of nations.

That is article 11. If I seem to repeat, bear in mind I am trying to draw together the phraseology with reference to different items. This, of course, means that the league must decide whether there is any threat of war, and having decided that in its judgment there is a threat of war, it can itself make war.

I quote again:

The high contracting parties agree that should disputes arise between them which can not be adjusted by the ordinary processes of diplomacy, they will in no case resort to war without previously submitting the question and matters involved either to arbitration or to inquiry by the executive council—

And then not until three months after decision. That is article 12.

I quote again:

The high contracting parties agree that whenever any dispute or difficulty shall arise between them which they recognize to be suitable for submission to arbitration and which can not be satisfactorily settled by diplomacy, they will submit the whole matter to arbitration. For this purpose the court of arbitration to which the case is referred shall be—the court agreed upon by the parties or stipulated in any convention existing between them.

Notice the language—

That is article 13. That is, it is to be the court agreed upon.

If there should arise between States members of the league any dispute likely to lead to rupture, which is not submitted to arbitration as above, the high contracting parties agree that they will refer the matter to the executive council; either party to the dispute may give notice of the existence of the dispute to the secretary general, who will make all necessary arrangements for a full investigation and consideration thereof. * * * The executive council may in any case under this article refer the dispute to the body of delegates. The dispute shall be so referred at the request of either party to the dispute, provided that such request must be made within 14 days after the submission of the dispute.

That is from article 15.

Should any of the high contracting parties break or disregard its covenants under article 12 it shall thereby ipso facto be deemed to have committed an act of war against all the other members of the league.

And then follows a list of penalties. That is article 16.

Now, let us go back and go over that. An analysis of these provisions shows that in case a dispute arises between nations, either of them may request arbitration; but by the simple device of claiming either that it is not a question that ought to be arbitrated or by the device of refusing to agree upon an arbitrator, then either party can by serving notice force a decision before the executive council, and by the simple process of giving notice transfer the jurisdiction to the league itself.

To illustrate: If we were to have a dispute with Mexico, one that seemed to threaten war, and we had agreed to these articles, and we should say to Mexico, "We will arbitrate this difference," and Mexico should say to us either, "We do not regard it as a question for arbitration" or "Yes; we will arbitrate, but whom shall we agree upon?" We might suggest this or that nation; but Mexico might refuse to accept any nation we would suggest, or no nation except one that would be prejudiced in her favor, and that already had its decision made up.

If we continued to insist, Mexico, by the simple device of refusing, would put us in a position where we would be left to no other recourse except to serve notice on the executive council, whereupon it would take jurisdiction, and thereupon Mexico, if she did not want the question decided by the executive council, could serve a notice within 14 days and the question would go to the decision of the league itself.

Thus a question arising on American soil, concerning American rights, involving possibly the vital interests of the United States, in a controversy with Mexico, would not go to the arbitration even of an impartial tribunal, but could be sent to the league of nations to be decided by a majority vote of a body composed of representatives of foreign governments. I repeat, most of whom would be representatives of kings or despotisms, either European or Asiatic.

You will find that is the league. You will find that is the provision. It may astound some of my friends, but it is there. If you can not find it, read this speech in the RECORD and you will find the sections drawn together and quoted. Of course, you can all find it if you hunt long enough. You may not be patient enough to do that, although you will be hunting through this document a good many times if it is ever adopted.

The league sets up a jurisdiction and a right to settle every controversy which may arise, including the right to pass upon all questions which it may think may lead to war. It is a jurisdiction as broad as the world. It is as universal as human interests are diversified. Anything which the representatives of the league believe will lead to disputes which may lead to war comes within the broad purview of its illimitable jurisdiction.

It is entirely conceivable that such a tribunal might conclude that a simple tariff levied upon importations might become a cause of war and assume the right to command a State not to levy a tariff duty. It is entirely conceivable that a dispute might arise under old treaties and it might be claimed that some favored-nation clause was being violated, and jurisdiction thereupon attempted to be assumed over the controversy.

THE PAINS AND PENALTIES FOR NONOBEDIENCE.

We are made to agree that if any nation disregards the covenants under article 12, which I have already gone over, it shall—be deemed to have committed an act of war against all the other members of the league.

I have quoted article 12 and article 13 and article 15 and have shown that they embrace all disputes, and that under them any nation can force any dispute to a decision by the league.

Properly understood, therefore, the penalties are to be visited upon all who do not obey the orders of the league, or even the orders of the nine men composing the executive council, or I might, I presume, say five men out of the nine men. In the case aforesaid every member of the league is at once ipso facto at war with the State failing to obey the orders of the league. Under article 16 all trade or financial relations are to be immediately severed. All intercourse between citizens of the offending nation and citizens of all other nations is to be suspended. That is to say, not only the States but the people of the States are to be placed under the ban of an international bull of excommunication.

OUR ARMIES ARE LEVIED BY ORDERS OF THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL.

I quote:

It shall be the duty of the executive council in such cases—

That is, the cases last mentioned, where a nation has offended—to recommend what effective military or naval forces the members of the league shall severally contribute to the armed forces to be used to protect the covenants of the league.

That is article 16. Besides this, we agree to protect one another in the financial and economic measures which may be taken. This compels us, in case Serbia should have a fight with Bulgaria, or England should have a revolution in the Transvaal or in Ireland, to render financial and economic support. Besides this, we bind ourselves to support any member of the league. The language is:

And that they will mutually support one another in resisting any special measures aimed at one of their number by the covenant-breaking State. (Art. 16.)

That binds us to go to the support of any member of the league with ships and arms.

We further agree to let the armed forces of any of the high contracting bodies who are cooperating to protect the covenant of the league to pass across our territory.

Any denial that these various obligations, stipulations, and surrenders taken together do not amount to a transfer of many of the great sovereign powers of the United States to a league controlled and dominated by foreigners is ridiculous and dishonest, William H. Taft to the contrary notwithstanding.

THE LEAGUE COMPELS ITS MEMBERS TO COMMIT ACTS OF WAR.

I have already referred to article 16, which provides that in case any nation shall refuse to obey the provision of article 12, intercourse between that nation and all members of the league shall be at once suspended. This might be held to be within the right of the members of the league. But the provision goes further. After declaring that there shall be a prohibition and prevention of all intercourse, financial, commercial, or personal, between their nationals and the nationals of the covenant-breaking States, it declares that the same provision shall apply to all nationals of any other State, whether members of the league or not.

This monstrous provision translated into direct speech means that if the league has seen fit to use its decree of excommunication against a nation not a member of the league and in no manner concerned in the league or in the dispute, shall have its commerce ravaged from the high seas, its honest trade with the nation with which it is at peace destroyed, its commercial and financial business ruthlessly suspended, and it is made to suffer all the horrors of a war in which it has neither part nor lot.

This is freedom of the seas with a vengeance! It is, in fact, Germany's policy of closing a part of the Atlantic extended to every water of the world. It makes the English fleet master. It leaves the nation thus assailed, maltreated, and deprived of its right under international law with no recourse save that of tame submission or of war.

INTERNATIONAL DESPOTISM.

Evidently in order to make certain that the members of the league must become involved in every dispute of the world and that those who control the league will be able to control the world, it is provided in section 17 that in the event of disputes between nations "whether members of the league or not," the league may take jurisdiction and take whatever action it pleases in the premises. That is to say, if we form this league, the moment it is formed by its constitution it assumes jurisdiction over any dispute in any part of the world between nations, members or nonmembers, which the five or nine men constituting its council see fit to interfere with.

It also proposes to regulate the trade in arms and in munitions of the countries in which the control of this traffic is necessary and in the common interest. I pass over that.

INTERNATIONAL LABOR REGULATIONS.

Article 20 reads:

The high contracting parties will endeavor to secure and maintain fair and humane conditions of labor for men, women, and children, both in their own countries and in all countries to which their industrial and commercial relations extended; and to that end agree to establish as part of the organization of the league a permanent bureau of labor.

I can not pause to discuss this article, but I warn American labor, that has always been the best paid, best treated, highest class of labor of the world, their supremacy and superior condition can not be maintained if they consent to have international bodies composed of the representatives of kingly governments interfering with their condition.

The same, or a worse result, will follow if the Governments fall into the hands of the Bolshevists, terrorists, or anarchists.

I warn American labor that the moment it assumes to exercise jurisdiction over the labor of other countries that same jurisdiction will under this agreement embrace the labor of this country. I warn American labor to beware lest they shall be drawn from their place of advantage to the level of what has been hitherto denominated the pauper labor of other lands.

THE REGULATION OF INTERNATIONAL COMMERCE.

I challenge special attention to article 21. I confess I do not know what it means, although its meaning seems to be plain. I make that paradoxical statement because it is impossible for me to conceive that those who drew this league have yet advanced to that point of international Bolshevism where they will undertake to regulate the international commerce of the world. Yet attend to the language:

ART. 21. The high contracting parties agree that provision shall be made through the instrumentality of the league to secure and maintain freedom of transit and equitable treatment for the commerce of all States members of the league— having in mind, among other things, special arrangements with regard to the necessities of the regions devastated during the war of 1914–1918.

And it is followed by this language:

Let us omit the last few lines, which are only temporary in their effect. What then is the language? I quote:

Provision shall be made through the instrumentality of the league to secure and maintain freedom of transit and equitable treatment for the commerce of all States members of the league.

"Freedom of transit and equitable treatment for the commerce of all States." What does that mean? What can it mean except that the league proposes to regulate international commerce as the United States now regulates interstate commerce. Observe the language of our Constitution, Article I, section 8. I quote:

The Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States and with the Indian tribes.

Under that clause the jurisdiction of Congress over the greater part of the commerce of our country has been asserted and maintained. The language is not so broad or sweeping as that which undertakes to make this league the instrumentality to secure and maintain freedom of transit and equitable treatment for the commerce of all States members of the league.

How can Congress regulate commerce with foreign nations and at the same time the league be the instrumentality to secure equitable treatment for the commerce of all other States? Clearly the provision is unconstitutional. I have not in these remarks undertaken to discuss the unconstitutionality of this remarkable document. I reserve that for another occasion.

Mr. President, I have a few words to say of a general nature and in conclusion of my remarks.

Washington's Farewell Address, the most remarkable document save probably three others ever penned, has been read to the Senate to-day. It has been read in churches and schoolhouses all over our land ever since the day when the Father of his Country was taken from the land he had redeemed with his sword and enriched with his soul. It has been regarded as the textbook and creed of Americanism. But Washington did not stand alone. Every statesman of his day entertained similar opinions. These men were close to the time when our people had been under the control of foreign governments. They were close to the time when America was dragged into every European war. They had passed through a period when ill-advised treaties had involved us in interminable trouble and mischief. They stood near the great consuming flame that had so long burned the liberties of men, the flame of despotism that glowed hot upon the altars of the tyrants of the world. So these men acting in that light and with that knowledge were nearly all of one opinion, and among them there was one whose words I want to read. In 1782 John Adams said:

For my own part, I thought America had been long enough involved in the wars of Europe. She had been a football between contending nations from the beginning, and it was easy to foresee that France and England both would endeavor to involve us in their future wars. I thought it our interest and duty to avoid as much as possible, and to be completely independent, and have nothing to do, but in commerce, with either of them. That my thoughts had been from the beginning constantly employed to arrange all our European connections to this end and that they would continue to be so employed, and I thought it so important to us that if my poor labors, my little estate, or (smiling) sizy blood could effect it, it should be done. But I had many fears.

Now, only one or two other quotations. I read from the Parliamentary Manual of 1800:

The Constitution thought it wise to restrain the Executive and Senate from entangling and embroiling our affairs with those of Europe.

That is in the Constitution, and I make bold to assert that this league is a plain violation of the Constitution; but of that at another time.

I read one other statement:

Let us break these commercial and political fetters. Let us no longer watch the nod of any European politician. Let us be real and true Americans and place ourselves at the head of the American system.

So said the immortal Henry Clay, the intellectual lion of the South.

Let us no longer watch the nod of any European politician.

Adopt this league of nations and the American people need no longer watch their legislators at home; they need no longer depend upon their Congress here; they will be "watching the nods" of these eight foreign heads; they will be watching the hands of eight foreign masters; they will be harkening to the decrees of foreign princes and kings uttered through the mouths of their representatives, or mayhap they will be listening to the representatives as the Lenines and Trotzkys of the time, who may have seized the governments of Europe, overthrown all civilization, and upon its ruins erected the bloody despotism of brutal power.

I have read from one statesman of the South. May I now read from the giant of the North?

Sir, I look on the message of December, 1823, as forming a bright page in our history. I will help neither to erase it nor tear it out; nor shall it be, by any act of mine, blurred or blotted. It did honor to the sagacity of the Government, and I will not diminish that honor.

Thus said Daniel Webster, whose mighty intellect we miss to-day.

Attend to one other. Oh, ye Democrats, who have conjured by the name of Jefferson, who have whispered his praises in the ears of your children almost with your prayers, ye Democrats who have proclaimed him the greatest constructive statesman of all time, the seer who could look down the ages and visualize dangers that lay within the distant future, listen!

In 1820 we find Jefferson writing to William Short, and using this language:

I hope that he (the American minister to Brazil) will promote in his new situation the advantages of a cordial fraternization among all the American nations and the importance of their coalescing in an American system of policy, totally independent of and unconnected with that of Europe. The day is not distant when we may formally require a meridian of partition through the ocean which separates the two hemispheres, on the hither side of which no European gun shall ever be heard, nor an American on the other; and when during the rage of the eternal wars of Europe the lion and the lamb within our regions shall lie down together in peace. The principles of society there and here then are radically different, and I hope no American patriot will ever lose sight of the essential policy of interdicting in the seas and territories of both Americas the ferocious and sanguinary contests of Europe. I wish to see this coalition begun.

I could read on until the cock might crow in the morning, but it is enough that I give this one excerpt from Jefferson; it has been from the day of its utterance the holy creed of democracy. Is it now about to be repudiated?

Mr. President, that doctrine was accepted; that doctrine became our faith. Jefferson warned us that we might avoid the sanguinary wars of Europe. Have we not done so? It is true in 1812, when we were weak, Great Britain sought to destroy us, but from that day in 1812 when we fought for our rights upon the seas 105 years went by without America being involved in a European conflict. I do not count the War with Spain, for that was an American conflict, waged to release the brutal chains that Spain had forged upon our neighbors living in our front dooryard. One hundred and five years went by, and in that time what was occurring in Europe? Sirs, over 50 great wars swept over Europe, wars that called into play enormous numbers of men. I can not pause here even to call the list; I shall not take your time to do that, but I shall later ask, sir, to put into the RECORD a list of these wars.

I call attention to the fact that in that time the Napoleonic wars closed. In those wars there were 3,000,000 men in the field, and 1,900,000 lost their lives; the war of France and Russia of 1812–1815, with 1,500,000 in the field—we were not in those wars—the war of Russia and Turkey in 1828, with 120,000 loss of life—not an American was in that war—the war of Spain and Portugal from 1830 to 1840, but no American was in that war; the revolts in Europe in 1848, in which 60,000 lost their lives, but no American was in that war; the war in 1854 and 1856, in which France, England, Sardinia, Turkey, Austria, and Russia joined issue; the Crimean War in 1877, where 1,460,000 men were involved, and 609,797 died, but no American was among them, unless he crossed the ocean looking for trouble; the war of 1859, in which France, Austria, and Italy were engaged, there were enormous armies mustered, but no American was in that war; the war of 1864, in which Denmark, Prussia, and Austria were engaged, but no American was dragged into that war; the war of 1866 between Prussia and Austria, where there were three-quarters of a million troops involved, but no American was in that war; the war of Brazil, Argentine, and Paraguay, which occurred on this side of the ocean, from 1864 to 1870, but the United States was not drawn into that war; the war of 1865 to 1866 between France and Mexico, in which France, aided and abetted by England, undertook to abrogate the Monroe doctrine in this country, but America did not even become involved in that war, for when we got out of the trouble of the Rebellion France abandoned her attempt and England retreated quietly to the shadows; the war of France and Germany of 1870–71, in which 1,713,000 men were engaged, but no American was in that war; the war of Russia and Turkey from 1876 to 1877, in which 1,500,000 troops were involved, but no American was in that war; the war from 1900 to 1901 with the Transvaal Republic, when England crushed the republic of the Boers, and 400,000 men were involved, but no American was in that war.

I remember when the attempt was made to commit the Republican Party at its convention to intercession, and also the Democratic Party at its convention; but America stood aloof; she refused to intervene even on behalf of two expiring Republics.

Then came the war of 1904–5 between Japan and Russia, with 2,500,000 troops engaged and 555,900 killed; but no American lost his life in that war. The wars of 1912–13, known as the Balkan wars, in which 1,230,000 troops were engaged and 350,000 were killed; but no American was in that war.

Sirs, the claim that we have to join this league in order to keep out of European wars is a monstrous falsehood. We by joining this league put ourselves into all the controversies of the world, whatever they may be. If they can be suppressed without war, of course we shall not have war; but if war comes, we must be a party to the war.

Sirs, do not forget that this league of peace has written across its first page the word "Dishonored"—I say that because its authors make it pointed for armies and navies. When they provide for armies and navies they solemnly affirm that they know there is going to be war, for that is all armies and navies are for.

Mr. President, I ask leave to print as a part of my remarks a fuller list of these wars. There have been a half hundred in a hundred years—one every two years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Without objection, the request of the Senator from Missouri will be granted.

Mr. REED. I ask to engage your attention for a moment while I read what I regard as a message from the front. We went into this war for reasons we all know. Every man in this Senate knows that we would not have declared war if Germany had not served notice that she proposed to renew her indiscriminate submarine warfare, and, more than that, if she had not resorted to overt acts, for every man here knows that the President did not ask us to declare war until these overt acts had taken place. We went over there to compel Germany to respect our rights as a sovereign Nation. When we went there for that good purpose we were, of course, very glad, while we were defending our rights, that we were helping defend civilization and Christianity; but our cause of war is the thing I have stated.

Mr. President, we did not leave it to the volition of our young men whether they would go or not. With the strong arm of the law we compelled more than 2,000,000 to embark upon that mission—a mission to punish Germany for violating American rights and to make her respect American rights.

Now, I want to read a short excerpt from an article by George Pattullo, in the Saturday Evening Post. Pattullo is now an officer in the American Expeditionary Force. I have found him generally a very reliable correspondent:

Not a man in the Third Army but wants to go home. They are longing to get back. They feel that America has accomplished what it set out to do and that the sooner the Army returns to the United States the better.

The more thoughtful among them have reasons other than personal. They can foresee snares and pitfalls and tortuous ways ahead. Already the difficulties are piling up; already problems are arising which may easily place us in a false position. They fear that the United States may become mixed up in the wrangles and jealousies and hates that dominate all national affairs in Europe. The people are fed on it from the cradle. They learn to fear and distrust and prepare against neighboring nations. That is the direct result of propaganda from the top—endless propaganda—centuries of it.

WASHINGTON WAS RIGHT.

In Europe racial prejudices are a stone wall to progress. Every war leaves bitterness and wounds which lead finally to another. It is a vicious circle without any end in sight. From a purely American standpoint, George Washington was right about "no entangling alliances." The officers in our Army are unanimous in declaring that the less we mix up in international affairs on this side of the water the better off we shall be. We haven't the same purposes, we haven't the same aspirations, we haven't the same ideals. Though of the same blood as the older races, we are yet a vastly different breed.

Mr. President, how true that is! Talk about nations thus divided being transformed into a brotherhood of love by the magic of a few resolutions is idle. Sirs, you can never make these races love each other. Answer on your consciences and your honor: Will the day come for a thousand years when France can ever forget? Will bleeding Belgium ever learn to love the horde that marched across her frontiers, ravished her women, and that burned her cities? Will the descendants of the boys whose hands were cut off ever forget the maiming of their ancestors? Will the sons of France ever forget that their women were brutally mistreated? Will the spot ever be forgotten where the Canadian soldier was crucified? Will these men ever learn to forget in the years to come that the inhabitants of the countries lying along their borders are of the same blood as those who in 1914 swept their land with fire and sword, with hate and malice that hell itself could scarcely have conceived? Think you they will forget? And, sirs, will the Armenian forget how the Turkish brute twisted his hands into the hair of Armenian women and dragged them to his seraglios? Will the Serbian forget how his land was trampled into a gory mire? Will the eye of his memory ever fail to see the red flames licking up alike the palaces and the hovels of his country? Will any of these people ever become so forgetful that they will not wait for the hour of their vengeance? And are we, who are in no way united with them, are we, sirs, to thus unite ourselves by a voluntary obligation which puts us into every one of their disputes, their deathless feuds?

This is the first time in a hundred years since we have been at war with Europe. Why were we forced into the present conflict? Well, I think I can answer. First, because international law is in many respects vague and indefinite. I pause at this moment to say that international law should be clarified and codified. The past construction of international law leads to the conclusion that the right of blockade is limited to particular ports; it being required that the blockade shall be rendered effective by a constant patrol. This rule, however, was perhaps not perfectly clear and certain. It was doubtless because of this fact that England undertook to declare a blockade of the entire North Sea—a thing that had hitherto been generally regarded as illegal. That was followed by Germany declaring a blockade of the English Channel and the waters in and about England; and that was followed by Germany undertaking to sweep all commerce from the seas. That brought us into this war.

But there was another reason. The world had been led to believe that America would not fight, and perhaps could not fight. We were not as well prepared as I wish we had been, but I shall not go into that. Many of us made mistakes along that line, and I do not care to argue it now; but Germany believed, more than any other people, that we would not fight. They thought that we were a lot of traders, either too proud or too lazy or too cowardly to fight, and so they threw the glove square in our face. They said, "You can not help yourselves, even if you would." Ah! sirs, that mistake will never be made again. While wood grows and waters run the world will know that Americans c. n and will fight. Never again, so long as we maintain our pride of race, will that mistake be made. They said we could not get ready to fight; but when the boys from the farm and the anvil and the office were called on they came, a glorious concourse of indomitable souls. They went across the ocean, sometimes imperfectly armed, but that made no difference; they may not have had all the weapons they needed, but that did not daunt their courage. The cry upon their lips was: "Take us to the trenches." The only desertions from the American ranks were desertions of men who left their camps that they might serve upon the battle's blazing line.

How well did they fight? I said the other day, and I repeat, the French had been driven back, the English had been driven back; gallantly they had retreated. The English lion, with the bloody froth dropping from his white fangs, facing the foe, but yet being driven back; the French, with gallant heroism, carpeting the ground with their immortal dead; but still they were being driven back, until at last, in the agony of his soul, Haig cried out: "Our backs are at the wall; Britons, stand and die." Just then new sounds were heard coming from the rear. It was the mingled rebel yell and the Yankee cheer.

They swept down through Chateau-Thierry, through St. Mihiel, through Belleau Wood, on through the forest across the Rhine, until they made themselves the masters of Berlin. The flag of the Republic floats to-day above the fortresses of the Teuton!

Sirs, that is our history. Can it be made better? Can you do better than that? Ah, my colleagues, why abandon the nationalism that has done so much for our country for the desperate experiment of internationalism?

The past rises before me like a dream. Again I see the lantern in the old North Church; I hear the clatter of galloping feet as Paul Revere rides out into the night; I see the farmers gathering along the lanes of Lexington, and I hear the sharp reports of their muskets; I catch a glimpse of the next day when the minutemen made their heroic stand along the little stream spanned by the bridge immortalized by Emerson's thrilling lines:

By the rude bridge that arched the flood,
Their flag to April's breeze unfurled,
Here once the embattl'd farmers stood,
And fired the shot heard round the world.

I see them at Valley Forge as they walk amidst the snows and frosts, staggering and hungry, falling dead, but not surrendering. I behold Washington with his troops crossing the Delaware to attack the Hessian horde. I see the flag of Cornwallis above the battlements of Yorktown lowered and the Starry Banner go up amidst the tears and cheers of Washington and his soldiers. Since then no despot has dared try to drag it down. Shall it be now supinely surrendered into the hands of foreigners? Shall it be turned back to the monarchs we defied? Shall we yield the sovereignty thus gloriously obtained?

I have talked too long; I thank the Senate. [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

REVERENCE FOR LAW ENFORCEMENT AND AMERICANISM.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I shall not discuss the league of nations proposal to-day. If one can be formed that does not threaten to engulf Americanism in internationalism and violate the traditions and principles of our Government or involve us in entangling alliances that will impose upon us foreign burdens and wars, I am for it. America and American institutions, the American people and American interests, American homes, and American liberties, however, are first and above all others with me, and upon this basis I shall determine my vote for or against any proposed league of nations that may be submitted to us. The words of Washington to which we have listened to-day are words of wisdom and exalted patriotism, and are not to be treated lightly in this hour fraught with graver consequences to the Republic than any since he spoke those immortal words. I hope this is not the last time they will be read to the Senate. I do wish we would close this war, impose whatever terms of peace we are going to impose on Germany, bring our boys home to mother and loved ones, stop the great expense that is piling up burdens for generations to come, and then settle the differences and fix the relations among the associated nations to promote the peace of the world when it can be done deliberately, calmly, and after due consideration.

If we are to destroy the fruits of the American Revolution we should do it knowingly and willingly and not under the pressure of the desire to end this war, and be prepared to take the consequences.

Mr. President, there are other matters of very vital and pressing concern to this people that, in my judgment, demand immediate consideration and attention; and it is to some of these that I desire to direct my remarks for a while.

Mr. President, we have come through a great war. Our boys have fought a good fight. They have helped to win a great victory for the maintenance of our rights and sovereignty and for civilization and humanity. They are coming home to help solve the problems that confront us. These tasks are more difficult than those of war. They require as great a courage and as steadfast a purpose as the conduct of the war. The real test of our institutions and America is at hand.

What we need above all else is an intense devotion to the fundamental principles of our Government and an ardent love for our country, its laws, and its institutions. Discontent and unrest are growing with the readjustment that must come. Evil-minded men are inciting strife. Old and discarded theories of government are preached under new names and presented in enticing form. From foreign peoples without education, inexperienced in self-government, filled with the prejudices and hatred of centuries of oppression, come men to our cities promoting sedition, anarchy, and revolution through seductive promises and class hatred. Officials of high position are disregarding our constitutional limitations, and great and respectable interests are inciting the law's defiance.

Bolshevism is lifting its horrid head in this fair land of freedom. We denounce it and say that the way to meet it is to shoot it. Mr. President, the best way to meet it is to adjust differences and correct injustice with genuine Americanism and a firm and full adherence to the basic principles of the Government of our fathers. Instead of trying to correct the ills of all humanity, we should be looking after our own internal affairs. We have dangers, but they come from within and not from without. We must save ourselves from ourselves and from those we have allowed to come among us. To do it we must renew our vows as American citizens and go back to the practices and first principles of the Republic.

The ship workers of Seattle went out on a strike a short time ago. A sympathetic strike by affiliated unions was ordered. The tie-up of practically all business, including lighting systems, street car lines, restaurants, schools, and hospitals was probable. Strike leaders proposed to provide eating places, milk for children, service in hospitals, and guards to maintain order. The mayor of the city knew that as the duly elected executive it was his duty to maintain order and to enforce the law. He did not falter. He did not take sides in the labor dispute. He planted himself squarely upon the American doctrine of law and order. He acted promptly and issued a proclamation that law and order would be maintained at any cost by the duly constituted authorities. Order was maintained. The law was enforced. Riot and bloodshed was prevented. True Americanism was triumphant.

Mr. President, I want to read this proclamation, so that it may be in the RECORD as an example and as a model for other executives throughout the country, who are very likely to be confronted with the same problems that confronted our mayor:

PROCLAMATION.

To the people of Seattle:

By virtue of the authority vested in me as mayor, I hereby guarantee to all people of Seattle absolute and complete protection. They should go about their daily work and business in perfect security. We have 1,500 policemen, 1,500 regular soldiers from Camp Lewis, and can and will secure, if necessary, every soldier in the Northwest to protect life, business, and property.

The time has come for every person in Seattle to show their Americanism. Go about your daily duties without fear. We will see to it that you have food, transportation, water, light, and all necessities.

The anarchists in this community shall not rule its affairs.

All persons violating the laws will be dealt with summarily.

FEBRUARY 7, 1919.

Mr. President, going on that strike were 65,000 people in the city of Seattle. It went on for a week. Not a shot was fired; no property was destroyed; no lives were lost; no riots occurred. The law was maintained. Americanism was triumphant.

Mayor Hanson's prompt and firm stand for law and order is greatly applauded all over the land. The newspapers generally praise him warmly and commend his example as one to be followed by other executives. I heartily join in that praise. He acted as a fearless and true executive should act. He had back of him an intensely patriotic citizenship. The people of Seattle have had their trials; they have made their sacrifices in war; they have seen disloyalty show itself and force and brutality disregard and defy the law. They had become fully aroused. They love their country and its institutions. They are Americans to the core. They believe in law and order and were ready to stand by their executive to the limit.

Mayor Hanson was the right man in the right place at the right time. He did his duty well and fearlessly as a true-blue American. What a strange commentary upon the state of the public mind it is when this act of patriotic duty causes so much wonder, amazement, and acclaim. Is it possible that it is an exception and not the rule for public officials to do their plain duty? It looks that way. It is well to commend a public executive when he does his duty, but we should have such a public sentiment as will insure such action when the occasion demands. Do we have so little regard for law and order in this country that its enforcement in times of stress is a source of surprise? If so, then every lover of liberty should bestir himself. Such a state of public sentiment is a fertile field for bolshevism. A Republic without the observance of law and order is anarchy and chaos and a breeder of bolshevism, if it is not bolshevism itself.

We hear much denunciation of bolshevism to-day. I do not defend it. I abhor what I conceive its essence to be. We can not make headway against bolshevism in the masses, however, until we get rid of it in high places. The best antidote for it is an intense respect for law and an ardent love for our institutions and principles of government and a faithful adherence to them by those in authority. We have the best form of government devised by the wit and wisdom of man to insure liberty, justice, and happiness. It gives to every man the opportunity to work out for himself the highest good. The life of the Republic is love for and devotion to the law and its orderly change. The rule of unreasoning force is the essence of bolshevism. It thrives on disregard for law by those in authority. The very public opinion that makes Mayor Hanson's patriotic action so noteworthy foments anarchy and bolshevism.

If one in high position can disregard the fundamentals of law, why can not the humblest of citizens defy the law? If any official in high position can use coercion to accomplish his ends, the humblest citizen sees no reason why he should not obtain his ends by force, if he can do so. Yielding to lawlessness begets more lawlessness. Concession to disloyalty begets more disloyalty. The President of the United States did not intend it so, but he brought our institutions into contempt and struck a deadly blow at the vitals of the Republic when he used the influence of his high office to control the executive of a State in the discharge of his duty under an oath to uphold the laws of the State. His unauthorized act in sending a commission to investigate the acts of State officials in the discharge of their duty gives anarchy its chance to mislead the unthinking to lawlessness and contempt for authority.

Mooney may have been innocent. I do not know. He had been convicted, however, of a most heinous crime under the laws of the State of California, one of the most enlightened States in the Union. Every opportunity had been given to him under those laws to establish his innocence. All that skilled attorneys could do was done. The jury heard the evidence and convicted him. His appeals had been taken and denied. Upon the governor of the State rested the duty and power of granting or refusing a pardon. The President of the United States sought to influence and control the governor in his action on an appeal, or more nearly a demand, for Mooney's pardon. He had no power or authority in the matter. He disregarded one of the fundamental principles of the Republic when he interfered. By his action he encouraged disrespect and contempt for legal authority and the orderly process of law and undermined local self-government.

Grant that Mooney was innocent. It were better that an innocent man should suffer than that the law should be defied and set aside. The excuse for the interference only made matters worse. It was a concession to the bad in bolshevism in a foreign country and aggravated matters there and brought trouble here. Concession to arrogance generally breeds contempt. It did so in this case and encouraged a disregard for our laws that it will take a long time to eradicate. It sowed the seeds of contempt for local authority and encouraged appeals to the irresponsible but influential over the responsible.

Again, the President showed a disregard for the Constitution and the framework of our Government when he came and addressed the Senate on the woman-suffrage amendment. His action is and will be an excuse given by others for disregarding the law when they want to do so. I do not question his motives, his sincerity, or good intentions. He was urging the adoption of a proposition that I strongly favored and will do every proper thing to get passed.

This, however, is a Government of coordinate branches. The invasion of one by the other is subversive of law and orderly government. This resolution was peculiarly outside the power and responsibility of the President. He should not have attempted to interfere, no matter how strongly he may be for it personally.

Anything short of success in revolutionary methods brings reproach to our institutions and casts suspicion upon the sincerity and honesty of those who follow them. That was true in this case. The President's plea failed. He was humiliated. Those opposed to the resolution were embittered. Those who favored it were chagrined and dissatisfied. Some wanted him to use the power of public patronage to coerce individual Senators. Some questioned his sincerity. Others suggested that he was governed by political considerations. Conceding unqualifiedly the sincerity and purity of his motives, I regret more than I can say his disregard of those constitutional provisions defining the powers of the executive and legislative branches. He set an example that the un-Americans can use in a most dangerous way.

The Congress is not blameless in such matters. We do not encroach upon the jurisdiction of any other coordinate branch, but we supinely submit to constant encroachment upon our jurisdiction. We welcome relief from duties and responsibilities that we should discharge fearlessly and courageously.

The public press is the greatest agency for good or evil in this country. Its columns are read eagerly by the people every day. It largely molds and directs the opinion of the people. It should be careful of its influence. In season and out of season it should teach the principles of our Government and urge their observance, and it should condemn without qualification any nonobservance of them.

Some of our greatest papers, however, seem to forget the foundation stones upon which this Republic rests. They are intolerant and misleading. They misrepresent men and falsify measures to sustain their views. This was the policy of some of them before we got into the war. They recognized no room for patriotic differences of opinion and denounced as traitors those who disagreed with them and discredited them with the public by deliberately misrepresenting their acts and views. Some of these papers are now showing their real character. They are justifying the suspicion that they or their columns were and are dominated by selfish, financial, and corrupt interests, and they are doing more to promote bolshevism and undermine genuine Americanism than any other agency in the land. They aid and abet defiance of the law, promote anarchy, and incite riot. This is a severe indictment to make, but there is clear proof of it now.

Certain great papers opposed prohibition. That was their right. They may have been honest in this opposition. I concede that. The time for argument, however, on war-time prohibition and on the constitutional amendment is passed. They were both adopted. One is the law and the other is a part of the supreme law of the land. The issue now is not prohibition but the enforcement of law. That is vital to the very life of the Republic. There is no room now for a difference of opinion on this issue. One is for law enforcement or one is against it. These papers are for enforcement or they are against it; they are for law or they are for anarchy; they are American or they are un-American. What are they? By their words and their acts they are defiers of law, breeders of revolution, teachers of bolshevism, un-American, and unpatriotic. They do not urge and they have not urged the law's enforcement. On the contrary, they incite and encourage resistance to it.

The New York World is a great paper. It is doubtless a patriotic paper, even if it does show its patriotism in a most peculiar way. It condemns bolshevism and pro-Germanism with great vigor. It viciously attacked as traitors those who did not follow the course it mapped out as patriotic prior to the war, and yet, while the war was going on, it joined with the ultra pro-Germans and proven disloyal German-American Alliance in fighting prohibition. It had the right to oppose prohibition before the verdict was rendered. It could do so and still be patriotic. It has not ceased its intolerant opposition, however. It continues this fight now. Its columns are used not to uphold but to discredit the Constitution and bring the laws of the land into contempt. This is unpatriotic, dangerous to the Republic, un-American, and the worst kind of bolshevism.

On January 16, the day the amendment was ratified, the World said in an editorial:

REVOLUTION BY AMENDMENT.

As the liquor traffic, like all other social affairs, falls properly under the power, the proposed amendment will embody in the National Constitution a principle in conflict with the basic theory of our Federal system. It is a most emphatic denial of local self-government. One important result of such a departure, amounting to revolution, will be the enforcement of vexatious and sumptuary laws upon resisting peoples, not by their own officers but by informers and prosecutors from a distance. It was resistance to some such measures that awakened the spirit of seventy-six. No less certain is the prospect that one successful invasion of the rights of the States by sectarian and centralizing influences will be followed by many others designed still further to regulate or suppress customs, diversions, occupations, domestic relations, forms of public worship, perhaps matters of faith and opinion. Thus the States, speaking through intimidated, bigoted, or reckless legislatures in many cases, are doing much more than ratifying a measure suggested as a sure cure for the admitted evils of intemperance. They are opening the door to a consolidated autocracy at Washington which eventually will overthrow the Republic as we have known it, and they are welcoming this monster in the name of God.

On the same page was a cartoon representing a beautiful woman, called "Personal liberty," being made to walk the plank by an old man called "Prohibition."

On January 23 a letter appeared on the editorial page of the World, headed "The lynching of liberty." On January 21, on the editorial page, appeared a letter, signed "Al Rehm," in which it is said:

The people of this country will never submit to any laws that may be passed by a minority that has usurped the rights of the majority through political trickery and fraud.

On January 26, another letter appeared on the editorial page, signed "W. V. Hirsh," in which it was said:

Still another method to arouse the public is to call mass meetings. Let the people know that docile submission to national prohibition will inevitably make them the victims of all the puritanical laws the militant church can jam down our throats.

On January 17, in an editorial under the title "The lynching of Jeffersonism," the World said:

In supporting this amendment the South has wrecked the whole structure of State rights, obliterated the police powers of the States, without which they have no political excuse for existence, and destroyed the personal liberty which has hitherto been a bulwark of American freedom.

On January 19, in an editorial headed "Moral forces that are immoral," the World condemned the Evening Post for urging that "good citizenship now requires unquestioning obedience" to laws that may be enacted to carry out the prohibition amendment. In this editorial it is said:

National prohibition is not a people's achievement but a politicians' achievement. It was put through by professional politicians who believed that the prohibition lobby and the so-called church vote, organized by that lobby, held the balance of power, and that it was part of political wisdom to submit. Back of it all, of course, were certain great corporation and financial interests that were convinced that labor could be made more profitable and productive if put on a prohibition basis; and these interests, looking to dividends, helped to finance the movement.

The vast majority of the Members of Congress and of State legislatures who have written this amendment into the Constitution do not practice prohibition themselves and do not believe in it for themselves. They lent themselves to the lobby to protect their own political skins, but for the most part they are cowards and hypocrites and know they are cowards and hypocrites.

* * * * * * *

The fact of the matter is that the prohibition amendment has been carried through in defiance of the fundamental principles of the American Republic, and in defiance also of all the political traditions of the American people. The lobby bent all its energies to the work of ratifications, because it did not dare wait until the troops had returned home from France, and the American people had had an opportunity to consider the question calmly and deliberately. It was a snap proceeding; and in spite of all the bleating about moral forces the action has no moral status whatever, because it is at war with all true political morality, which gives due consideration to the rights of both majorities and minorities.

There have been many shameful chapters in American history, but no other chapter which was written in such infamous disregard of the spirit of American institutions.

Then I have here an editorial of two or three days ago, from the same paper, headed:

MAKE CONGRESS REPEAL THE LAW.

The labor unions and the labor leaders who are threatening a general strike July 1 on a "no beer, no work" issue might infinitely better devote their organizations and their efforts to forcing the repeal of the war-time prohibition law which goes into full effect June 30 and which is the basis of their immediate grievance.

This is something practical that can be done in a legitimate way without tying up the industries of the country or punishing the innocent for the offenses of the guilty.

The war-time prohibition act is a statutory lie and a statutory fraud. It was conceived in false pretenses and enacted in false pretenses. Framed by the agents of the Anti-Saloon League, it was driven through a subservient Congress by the league's lobby, and became a legislative fact only because it was attached as a rider to the highly important bill to stimulate food production.

Then it goes on in this editorial and points out the objections to it—objections that were all submitted before it was enacted into law; objections that were all passed upon by Congress itself—and yet it suggests, in this editorial, that these great labor organizations that are threatening to strike against the prohibition amendment should change their object and force Congress to repeal this legislation. What can that excite men to except revolution?

Now, Mr. President, as an index or an indication of what is animating the New York World in presenting and reiterating, day after day, all the stock arguments of the distillers, and the brewers, and the pro-German German-American Alliance, and all the forces arrayed against prohibition, I desire to call the Senate's attention to a statement in the World of January 8, 1918, headed as follows:

DISTILLERS PLEDGE $1,000,000,000 TO BEAT BONE DRY ACT.

This is a "special" to the World from Chicago, dated January 7. The World's representative knew what was going on. He knew what this organization represented. He knew what it proposed to do. He knew what it was willing to do and what it was willing to pay. How did he know it? I leave you to judge. This is what this dispatch says:

CHICAGO, January 7.

A billion dollars has been pledged and 300 distillers, the pledgers, are going to fight Uncle Sam to the last ditch before they submit to the annihilation of their business by the bone-dry amendment. This was the ultimatum that wound up a two days' meeting of the Nation's distillers here to-day.

The Supreme Court has been chosen as their battle ground, and the constitutionality of the amendment itself will be attacked, they say. Levy Mayer, a Chicago attorney, has been chosen as chief counsel and will sally forth to battle with practically carte blanche and a $1,000,000,000 fund.

Levy Mayer going out with carte blanche! Where did he go? He went to New York, where the World is published, and here is what the World said again:

LEVY MAYER SAYS FIRST MEETING WILL BE HELD HERE NEXT TUESDAY—$1,000,000 IS ALREADY PLEDGED.

WASHINGTON, January 24.

American distilling interests representing a capital investment of a billion dollars will hold a preliminary meeting in New York next Tuesday to plan a campaign of protection against the effect of the prohibition amendment. They have pledged a $1,000,000 fund with which to fight an enactment of the national prohibition measure, it is understood here.

Ah, Mr. President, the World knew first of the meeting in Chicago, where the fight was planned by the $1,000,000,000 interest. It has kept track of it since. It knows how to get a share of the $1,000,000 fund recently set aside. It is doing the work this sum was set aside to have done. It will get its pay. It will accomplish nothing, but the harm it will do among the people will be beyond computation.

Mr. President, I say, and I say it deliberately, from the editorials and articles in the World regarding war-time prohibition and the constitutional amendment that the man in the World office who is responsible for those articles, those editorials, and the news appearing in those columns is a liquor hireling, a pro-German propagandist, a Bolshevist, a lunatic, or an idiot, and there is abundance of proof to sustain any conclusion that you desire or that you may reach.

Such words and sentiments spoken by a poor, starving, struggling, humble citizen against some law he does not like would be denounced by the world as inciting revolution and anarchy. How much more dangerous and inexcusable are they when uttered by a great, powerful, and educated leader of American thought. In this paper and in others of high standing under large headlines are published all sorts of stories regarding these measures. We are told that this law and this amendment are to be annulled in one way or another; that the people's verdict is to be nullified and set aside; that great lawyers are going to prostitute their talents to defeat the people's will; that personal liberty is to be taken away; that legislatures are going to disregard the sentiment of the people that this outlaw traffic may continue to reap its profits; that labor proposes to strike as a method of resisting this law; that our very system of government is being undermined; that revolution is at hand; and that all we hold dear is threatened by fanaticism.

Interviews by prominent men suggesting revolution are given prominent places in great newspapers. A few days ago the Washington Post printed an interview with Judge W. M. Hough, of St. Louis. Under the black-type heading, "Drys breeding revolution," he is quoted as saying:

Whenever a minority can rule a majority there is danger of revolution, and in the submission and ratification of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution a minority has triumphed over a majority. * * * In my judgment, the prohibitionists are treading on dangerous ground. They are breeding a revolution.

Judge Hough is a lawyer. He is supposed to be an intelligent American citizen. He knows that his suggestion that a minority ruling a majority breeds revolution is baseless as applied to the present situation. He knows that this amendment is a part of the fundamental law of the land, and that it was adopted in the duly constituted and orderly way. He knows that it has behind it a stronger and more general public sentiment than any constitutional amendment ever had. He knows that its adoption by States, large and small, was as general as the adoption of the Constitution itself, and he knows that it expresses the sentiments of an overwhelming majority of the people of this country. He has sworn to uphold the law of the land and the Constitution of his country. Is he doing it? On the contrary, he is inciting rebellion to it. He may be a man of high character and great learning and ability, but he is not a good American and he is not patriotic. He is, in effect, disloyal, a lawbreaker, a friend of anarchy, and the enemy of the Republic. When I say that he has been, and probably now is, the attorney for large distillery interests, his attitude is very easily understood. If there is one thing that has distinguished the liquor interests and their supporters it is defiance of the law and a lack of real Americanism.

What good purpose can the Washington Post and these other papers hope to serve by giving publicity to these things? They may be doing it unintentionally, but they are lending their columns to the propagation of un-Americanism. What should these papers do? What should every real American do? Get behind the law and this amendment and its effective enforcement until repealed. That is the essence of genuine Americanism. That is the attitude of Mr. Taft, who opposed the prohibition amendment, and who now says that the legal objections made to it are pure "moonshine," and that it is the duty of every patriotic citizen to uphold and see to its enforcement. He says:

This is a democratic Government, and the voice of the people, expressed through the machinery provided by the Constitution for its expression and by constitutional majorities, is supreme. Every loyal citizen must obey. This is the fundamental principle of free government. It is the principle which the Bolsheviki are fighting with wholesale assassinations and starvation of their fellow citizens. One who, in the matter of national prohibition, holds his personal opinion and his claim of personal liberty to be of higher sanction than this overwhelming constitutional expression of the people is a disciple of bolshevism. Those who oppose passage of practical measures to enforce the amendment, which itself declares the law and gives to Congress the power and duty to enforce it, promote the nonenforcement of this law and the consequent demoralization of all law.

This was the evil result opponents of the amendment prophesied, and they are thus doing all they can to vindicate their view. Such a course is unpatriotic and is not playing the game of self-government fairly.

These are the words of a patriotic and genuine American. This is the spirit that should animate every American and control every loyal publication. What a splendid influence and example of Americanism would it be if every interview given out, and the editorial page of every newspaper in the land, would urge the full and complete enforcement of the law.

These self-proclaimed, extra-loyal newspapers gave special notice a few days ago to an alleged labor movement against the enforcement of the war-time prohibition and the constitutional amendment. They point out that a campaign is begun under the slogan "No beer, no work," if the "bone-dry prohibition law is really enforced on July 1." This movement, it is said, is being engineered by Ernest Bohm. There may be no significance in the name, but I have no doubt that the influences behind him are the interests that were behind the German-American Alliance. Then, it is stated that one Emmanuel Kavaliski is to be in charge of spreading the movement to other cities and other States. Is any comment necessary in view of the seditious propagandists at work in this country? This is the same element that sought revolution in Seattle. It is the same element that was allied with the German-American Alliance. It should receive, and I believe will receive, the condemnation of every real American citizen. If newspapers are to print such items they should at least denounce such conduct in their editorials.

These people propose to appeal to the American Federation of Labor to aid them. I hope they will do so. That organization is composed largely of American citizens, who, while organized for the purpose of bettering their condition and securing justice for themselves and their associates, are above all law-abiding, liberty loving citizens. They know that this Government, with all its faults, gives the poor man more chance for progress, comfort, enjoyment of life, and happiness than any other government on earth; that it insures him better protection under the law and more liberty of action than any other. This organization and its great leader will welcome this opportunity to show their loyalty and genuine Americanism, and in my judgment will declare themselves in no uncertain way for the supremacy of the law. Sam Gompers was openly and frankly opposed to prohibition, but he is a genuine American citizen, and now that the people have spoken he will surely accept their verdict and will be found exerting his great influence for the efficient enforcement of the law. He could do nothing less as an American citizen, and to take any other stand would be to discredit his great organization and destroy its influence. The American Federation of Labor stood by the Government in the prosecution of the war. It will now stand by law and against revolutionists and lawbreakers, who have in some way gained a position of leadership. I will be greatly disappointed in Mr. Gompers's Americanism if he does not come out squarely against such opposition to the law's enforcement.

American labor must purge itself. If it would hold the respect and favor of loyal citizens, it must purge its ranks of those who defy our laws and advocate revolution. They are taking the right course at Seattle and here in Washington City, and they will do so everywhere.

In the Christian Science Monitor of February 14 is a special dispatch from Seattle, as follows:

LABOR MAY EXPEL RADICAL ELEMENT—SEATTLE COUNCIL TO RID ITSELF OF ALLEGED ADVOCATES OF BOLSHEVISM AND THE I. W. W.—BREACH OF FAITH ADMITTED.

[Special to the Monitor.]

SEATTLE.

Measures for the immediate expulsion of the radical element were taken by the labor council on Wednesday when B. F. Naumann, chairman of the executive committee of the general strike committee of last week, said the time had come for organized labor to stop the preaching of bolshevism or the propaganda of the I. W. W. on the floor of the council. "We have tolerated them too long, and the finish is here," he said.

His denunciation was followed by other speeches and was adopted as a committee report. Members last week were howled down on similar motions and discussions. "If you want to change your form of government," said Mr. Naumann—

I want to call the attention of the New York World to this language—

"the way is with the ballot. Our Constitution provides the regular means whereby this can be accomplished. When we struck we violated all the laws of the American Federation of Labor. Nearly every union in the city had contracts with employers, which were broken."

In the Washington Post of February 17 the following is quoted as a resolution adopted by the Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, of Washington City:

I commend this resolution not only to the New York World but to all the labor unions throughout the country as one that could be well followed to promote Americanism and law-abiding citizenship:

Resolved, That Columbia Typographical Union, No. 101, believing that such a strike—

Referring to the strike planned for July 1 of this year—would be unwarranted and unjustifiable and detrimental to the best interests of the whole country and of all honest workers, whether organized or unorganized; that law and order should be maintained under all circumstances; and that the rightful demands of the working classes of the country for justice can be more surely and effectively brought about by peaceful and lawful means—through agitation, education, organization, and the ballot—rather than by cowardly and uncivilized use of dynamite or other unlawful methods, unreservedly condemns and repudiates any and all persons who encourage or resort to violence and the destruction of life or property during labor troubles, or at any other time, and believes that the maximum penalty should be inflicted upon all those who so violate the laws of the land.

This is the great opportunity for American labor to assert itself as law-abiding Americans.

The news dispatches tell us that the New York Legislature is giving way to this lawless element. Compromising with rebellion is ruin. The people can not be fooled. They know what they have done. They will not be cheated out of it by craven and faithless legislators. They know the cunning, tricky, lawless, and traitorous element with which they are dealing, and the legislative or executive official who yields to its threats will be replaced by one who will stand by law rather than by treason. These dispatches say that action on a bill by the New York Legislature which would practically defy the war-time prohibition act and the constitutional amendment "was determined upon to-day following confidential reports from leaders in Washington that Congress would not define 'intoxicating liquor.'" Who is it that assumes to speak for Congress? What leaders took such a message to Albany? Has any Senator assumed to do so? Surely not. Has any Senator so far forgotten his oath to support the laws of the land and the Constitution as to encourage its nullification by evasion? Surely not. Senators may make mistakes, but they will not violate their oaths or conspire with lawbreakers to defeat the people's will.

Congress has a pressing and plain duty to perform. The constitutional amendment is not self-executing. Open defiance of the war-time prohibition act is proposed. That is revolution. There should be no compromise with it by Executive or legislator. We should provide for its full enforcement. If we neglect to do this in the spirit in which the one was adopted and the other passed, the people will hold us strictly to account, as they ought to do. We have put our hand to the plow. We can not turn back if we would. Will Congress be turned from its duty by the threats of the lawless element and that interest which has been shown to be disloyal and whose dastardly methods are known to all? Surely not. It will not even place itself in a suspicious position. The friends of prohibition ask nothing extreme. They do know, as everybody knows, the character of those who would defeat the law and the methods they will employ. They want legislation that will insure an honest and fair enforcement of the amendment and the law. This is all the people want. Anything short of this will cause distrust and resentment and is unworthy of the servants of the people.

Mr. President, the enemies of prohibition prate of personal liberty. Editorials are written appealing to the passions of the people and especially of the laborer on the ground that his personal liberty is to be taken away. Personal liberty is the attribute of autocracies but not of democracies. The Kaiser and the Czar claimed and exercised the right of personal liberty and everyone knows what their end has been. Those who bewail the loss of personal liberty have not learned one of the essentials of a democracy. They should know that no one has the personal liberty in a Republic to do what the majority has properly declared shall not be done. Till they learn that they can not become good Americans.

Mr. President, this is a time for a searching of hearts. There should be no parleying with lawlessness or revolution. The liberties we enjoy and the rights we prize can not be preserved by cowardice. We are for the country and behind its laws or we are not. There is no halfway ground. We are for law and order or we are against it. We are Americans or we are un-American. We believe our Government to be the best on earth. Let us sustain our beliefs by our acts. It has come down to us through bloodshed and tears, through sacrifice and death. Its principles are uplifting all peoples. Its life is in the law and the maintenance of the law, and every true American citizen will place above all—above property, life, family, and home—the sacredness of the law and the observance of the principles of the Republic.

This Nation of ours is the richest product of centuries of struggle between the weak and the strong. Its scheme of government is the best and most perfect ever devised by the wit and wisdom of man to promote the happiness and secure the liberties of the people. Under it complaints and grievances can be rectified without violence or disorder. All are equal before the law and injustice can be removed in an orderly way. There is no excuse for threats, bloodshed, or anarchy, because the people rule and the majority make the laws. The great mass of our people are real Americans, who believe that grievances should be redressed and unwise or unjust laws repealed in an orderly way, and those who do not should be made to do so or leave the country. This is no school for novices to be taught anarchy and bolshevism by foreign propagandists.

This country belongs to the poorest citizen as well as to the most opulent. Its principles and its laws are not perfect, but the more closely they are administered the more nearly will they do justice and give protection to the weak and to the strong. We believe this. Let us do all in our power to prove it. The vast majority of our people are law-abiding Americans and believe in the law's enforcement, and if they openly and boldly stand by these convictions and principles lawlessness and bolshevism can not thrive in this fair land of ours. I appeal, I pray in this hour of internationalism, for a real, genuine, undiluted Americanism.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat of February 19 I find an editorial entitled "The Republicans and the League." It is an editorial in favor of the league of nations. I consider it quite apropos to-day as a reply to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], because it is one of the two greatest newspapers in the chief city of his State; and quite apropos also in reply to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] in the remarks that he made on yesterday, because this is perhaps the most stalwart Republican newspaper—I started to say in any part of the country—but in its own section, at any rate. I ask that this editorial be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Without objection, leave will be granted. The Chair hears none.

The editorial referred to is as follows:

THE REPUBLICANS AND THE LEAGUE.

After the election last November, Theodore Roosevelt, speaking as a Republican, said the result ought to be considered not so much a victory as an opportunity. He never spoke words of truer wisdom. The Republican Party, placed in control of Congress by that election, has a great opportunity before it. Will it use it constructively or destructively? Will it seek to build upon a broad platform of national welfare, or will it be guided by party interest or party advantage? The future of the Republican Party is dependent upon the course taken by the incoming Congress. It has been restored to a place of power in the National Government. There is vast work for it to do, work that will demand all of the energy and all of the capacity and all of the patriotism of the party. The opportunity has been given it. If it uses it wisely, constructively, and with unreserved loyalty to the Nation it will be rewarded by the confidence and support of the people.

And at the very beginning it is to be confronted by the greatest question that has ever come before the Nation or before the world. The treaty of peace, involving the creation of a league of nations, with the United States as a leading member, must be ratified by the Senate or it will fail in its application to America, and if it fails with us it fails in its entirety. What is to be the attitude of the Republican Party toward this great project? We put the question because there is now discernible a disposition on the part of some Republicans who have influence in the party councils to make it a party issue and to array the party against it. Judging from the tenor of the speeches and the statements that have been made by most of these, their opposition is based primarily on the fact that it has been advocated and largely achieved by a Democratic President. This, we would assert with all emphasis, is much too great a matter to be viewed through the darkened glasses of personal or partisan animosity. It must be considered on its merits, without regard to personalities or parties, and in the consideration of its merits account must be taken of the conditions, the circumstances, and the tendencies of the times in which we live.

The world has moved forward a long distance since 1914. It has moved forward, not backward, and it has left the status quo ante far behind. It has made new relations among the nations; it has established new standards of international ethics; it has given the peoples of the earth a new outlook upon life as well as upon government. Mankind has gone through a seething furnace, and out of the crucible has come the league of nations as the expression of the hope and confidence of a new world. Senator BORAH said the other day that if Christ himself should come to earth and advocate a league of nations, he would oppose it, which is equivalent to saying that if he knew God to be for it he would be against it. This outburst of childish spleen would be unworthy of notice were it not that it illustrates the utter blindness of some who are unable to realize that they are antediluvians; that they have somehow missed the train and been left behind at some way station of the receding past. The United States of America can not be held back by such as these. It can not be held back by any human force whatsoever. It is going forward, and woe to the man or the party who gets in the way of its progress. The league of nations is the sign and symbol of the world's advancement. It is the concrete evidence that it has advanced an immeasurable distance. It is tangible proof that the awful lessons of the last four years have been well learned by humanity. All the nations have learned them. America has learned them, and Columbia sits in the pilot house of the league guiding its destinies and the destinies of mankind. America is essential to the world's progress and the world is essential to ours. We must go forward, and go forward in association with the other nations of civilization, and any party that attempts to impede us does so at its peril.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Johnson, Cal.	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Smith, S. C.
Beckham	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Smoot
Calder	Kellogg	Nugent	Spencer
Chamberlain	Kendrick	Overman	Sutherland
Curtis	Kenyon	Page	Swanson
Dillingham	King	Pittman	Thomas
Fletcher	Kirby	Pollock	Townsend
France	La Follette	Reed	Trammell
Gay	Lodge	Robinson	Underwood
Gore	McCumber	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Hale	McKellar	Shafroth	Walsh
Harding	McNary	Sheppard	Warren
Hardwick	Martin, Ky.	Shields	Weeks
Henderson	Myers	Simmons	Williams

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] to proceed to the consideration of the conference report named by him.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I very much dislike to oppose the motion of the Senator from Nevada, but some of the regular supply bills of the Government which have been reported from the Committee on Appropriations have not yet received consideration in the Senate at all. Unless they are considered we might just as well abandon the effort to finish the necessary business of the session. I therefore hope that the motion of the Senator from Nevada will not prevail, and that the Senate may proceed to the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and then to the consideration of the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill. I make this request on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I hope the Senator from Georgia will not oppose the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator will not make any headway by insisting on its consideration now.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The truth is that all of these appropriation bills, if they are not passed at this session, will be passed at the extra session, whereas it is almost impossible to get an agreement upon these general leasing bills. We have had six years of it, Mr. President, and everybody concedes that something——

Mr. PITTMAN. I suggest the point of order that the motion is not debatable.

Mr. HARDWICK. After 2 o'clock the motion is debatable.

Mr. PITTMAN. I refer to Rule XXVII.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls attention to Rule XXVII. He invites the attention of the Senator from Georgia to that rule and invites his construction of that rule. The Chair, in examining the precedents, anticipating the point of order, has found no exact precedent. Rule XXVII reads:

> The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except when the Journal is being read or a question of order or a motion to adjourn is pending, or while the Senate is dividing; and when received the question of proceeding to the consideration of the report, if raised, shall be immediately put, and shall be determined without debate.

The question is whether the latter clause, "when received the question of proceeding to the consideration of the report, if raised, shall be immediately put and shall be determined without debate," relates only to the time when the conference report is received, and the Chair rules that, under the present parliamentary status, the motion is debatable.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I desire to occupy just a moment to say a word to the Senator from Colorado, who has raised this question. A conference report has been presented; the conferees have agreed; the bill has passed both Houses, and only needs the final action of this body to become a law. The Senator can not expect that the regular supply bills of the Government, which have not yet passed this body and have not gone to conference at all, shall at this late hour in the session be laid aside for a proposition of this sort that can come up after all chance of passing the supply bills has vanished.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is the most important bill——

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, a lot of us do not think it is.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That has been considered perhaps in six years, because without it a large section of the country will be tied up in such a way that there can be no development there.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am in sympathy with the Senator in his troubles, and I am not particularly opposed to this bill; in fact, I presume, it having been reported by a committee that has carefully investigated the subject, I will support it; but, on behalf of the Appropriations Committee, I am bound to insist that it not be made the unfinished business of the Senate, and that we proceed to the consideration of the bills I have named, reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the Senator will bear in mind that, after the conference report becomes the unfinished business, it will probably get through soon, and then the general appropriation bills can be considered.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the regular supply bills do not pass very soon, there will be no need even to send them to conference. The Appropriations Committee is of the opinion that it owes a duty to the Senate to present that question squarely, so that we may know what our future conduct will be, not only in reference to the two bills they have already reported, but in reference to other great supply bills which they hope to report at an early day. If conference reports shall be allowed to take precedence of and stand as a buffer to the supply bills and all the regular work of the session, I do not see any need of trying to do anything.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, if this conference report does not pass at this time it may be that our natural resources will be locked up for six years longer, as they have been for the past 10 years. As to the appropriation bills, every one of them will either be passed in the closing hours or at the extra session that is bound to come. I have seen supply bills put through the Senate in a very short time. On one occasion I saw six great supply bills put through in one day. That can be done.

If the Senate makes the conference report the unfinished business, we will not have much discussion upon it, because those interested in the supply bills will be urging every Senator not to spend a long time and not to make speeches outside of the question. Then, of course, we will get a vote upon it. All we ask is a vote, with opportunity for legitimate discussion upon it. But if we do not insist upon the consideration of the report now, we are not going to have the measure become a law at this session, and we will probably not have it for another six years.

Everybody has conceded something in order to reach an agreement. The oil people who came here are getting but a fraction of what they at first demanded. The departments have made certain requests, and the Navy Department has been yielded to entirely, the Interior Department has been yielded to, and unless the present opportunity is embraced the chances are that probably no agreement can be reached again, because there are so many conflicting ideas amongst individual members of the committees.

Mr. President, if we do not get this conference report through now it seems to me there will be no possibility of getting an agreement, and great injury will be done. The failure to pass the supply bills now may delay for a short time the payment of money to some person in the Government service, but that is insignificant as compared to the fact that we have millions of acres of land locked up on which no kind of an entry can be made in connection with certain great natural resources located upon them. By reason of that I submit that the conference report ought to be made the unfinished business.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, with the greatest respect and with much deference I beg most respectfully to record my dissent from the ruling of the Chair. The present occupant of the chair, the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], I regard as one of the most able parliamentarians in this body, but for fear the ruling might become a precedent I wish to say that I do not believe—and I do not want to be heard on it at all—that a motion to proceed to the consideration of a conference report is debatable. So much for that. I say that, I repeat, with the greatest respect, because there is no Senator in this body for whose judgment in parliamentary and other matters I have a higher respect than that of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. President, the Indian appropriation bill is the unfinished business. I said last night, and I reiterate, that while it is not the most important of the supply bills, it is not the least important, and I hope it will be passed. It is a bill that deals with Indian tribes on one hundred and sixty-odd reservations; it contains appropriations of $15,000,000, affects $2,000,000,000 of property, and ought to pass. I am willing at any time, so far as I have any power or authority, to give way to any Senator who has any bill that he feels that might be imperiled by not being considered at this time. That is my attitude. I will yield to the Senator from Alabama in order to have the conference report on the Post Office appropriation bill considered; I will yield to the Senator from Nevada to allow him to have the conference report on the leasing bill considered; I will yield to any Senator for any purpose; but I do not want the Indian bill displaced.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I merely desire to say a word in regard to the point of order. A conference report is privileged; that is, it can be presented to the Senate at any time, no matter what is going on; but its privilege is exhausted when the conference report is presented. If at the time of the presentation—that is, when the conference report is received—the question of consideration is raised, the vote must be taken without debate; but after the conference report has been before the Senate for several days I myself think that a motion to take it up is open to debate, because I think the privilege relative to cutting off debate on the question of consideration expires unless it is raised at the time of the presentation of the report. I think the ruling of the Chair, as I understand it, is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Touching the point of order, the Chair desires to state that it has been universally held that conference reports, after they have been received, lose their privilege. The Senator in charge of a conference report may at any time move to proceed to the consideration of that report; but that is an entirely different parliamentary procedure from raising the question of consideration.

When a conference report is presented to the Senate, it is in order at that time to raise the question of consideration—not to move formally to proceed to the consideration of the conference report, but the language used would be, "I raise the question of the consideration of the report presented"; and when that is done, under Rule XXVII it must be determined without debate. But after the conference report has been received, when at any subsequent time a motion is made to proceed to its consideration, the Chair still thinks, notwithstanding the observations of the Senator from Arizona, that that motion to displace the unfinished business is debatable.

The Senator from Arizona, of course, knows that he is at liberty to appeal from the decision of the Chair if he desires to do so.

Mr. ASHURST. Oh, Mr. President, I would not appeal from any decision that the present occupant of the chair might make, because he is so much more skilled and learned in parliamentary law than I am that it would be absurd for me to appeal from one of his decisions. I simply felt that the motion to proceed with the consideration of the conference report, under my view of the rule, was not debatable, that is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thanks the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] has on two or three occasions called the attention of the Senate to the fact that this legislation has been before the Senate for six years. I have not had time to look up the RECORD, but I have no doubt but that if it were examined it would show that the Senator from Colorado has taken twice as many hours as any other Senator in this Chamber in trying to defeat just such legislation. Why the change? What has come over the spirit of the Senator from Colorado, that we shall now move quickly and immediately so that this legislation shall pass, and that it is very much more important than the great supply bills? There ought to be some reason assigned for it. If it is taken up this afternoon, then I shall want to occupy a very few moments of the time of the Senate.

The charge that is made by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] that I am trying to hold up this report is unfounded. When it was first presented here the Senator from Nevada took one hour and a quarter. I occupied 45 minutes. The next day I had 5 minutes, making 50 minutes that I have occupied in stating my position—not how I was going to vote, but my position, and why I would not sign the conference report. To-day the Senator from Nevada takes 45 minutes more of the time of the Senate and others have had no time whatever to discuss it.

Now, these things look rather strange, Mr. President—they do, at least, to me. I can not see why the charge is made, and I do not know what object there is in it.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PITTMAN. I want to say that if the Senator will assure the Senate that he has not had any intention of delaying a vote on this matter and has not made any efforts, either directly or indirectly, to delay a vote on this matter, and has not any intention now of doing so, I simply apologize for my misinterpretation of his actions.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have no power to assure the Senator what will become of the report; but I do say to the Senator that if the "Senator from Utah" had been treated as a gentleman in the conference he perhaps would have gone on and considered the bill in conference and said what he had to say in the conference. But I never was treated in a conference as I have been treated in the one considering the report, and that is one reason why I did not sign the report. I am not going to bring in any personal questions at this time. I simply said, when I first rose to speak upon it, that I desired to state why I had not signed the conference report, and then I started to state why, and I had, as I stated, 45 minutes then, and yesterday I had five minutes.

I want to say to the Senator now that I had no intention, and I have told the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] I do not know how many times, that I had no intention of trying to talk this measure to death. The Senator from Colorado knows that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Why, certainly; the Senator has told me that a number of times, Mr. President, and I have no doubt of it.

Mr. SMOOT. Therefore, Mr. President, I can not understand why there is this attitude of the Senator reporting the conference.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Not on my part.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I do not understand the Senator yet.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, never mind. I am not going to take up the time to explain to the Senator if he does not already understand my attitude.

Now, Mr. President, I want to say that if the time of the Senate is to be taken up in discussion for the few days that are left of this session, it ought to be taken up upon those matters that are vital to the country. I am perfectly willing to remain here in this Chamber from early morning, if necessary, until late at night; I am perfectly willing to put in as many hours as any other Senator for the balance of the session; but I do not think any headway is going to be made by trying to force things at this time in the Senate. I have never seen any time gained in that way since I have been in the Senate. I know that all Senators are reasonable, and I know that if they are approached in even a spirit of common decency there will be no objection whatever to trying to get through with the legislation that we have to act upon.

I have never seen the situation as congested at the close of a session as it is to-day. I think it is impossible to get through with the supply bills. There are, however, some supply bills that carry appropriations for immediate needs; the appropriations are made immediately available; and, of course, if some of those appropriation bills are not passed, it will be a detriment to the departments interested in them.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Will the Senator permit me to present a conference report?

Mr. SMOOT. I shall be through in just a minute, I will say to the Senator. I have not any extended speech to make. I intend, Mr. President, to vote against taking up this matter and displacing an appropriation bill at any time.

UNIFORMS OF SOLDIERS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I present a conference report on House bill 13366, and I ask that it be considered.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. PITTMAN. Is the presentation of a conference report in order while a motion is pending?

Mr. SHAFROTH. A motion to take up another conference report?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is in order.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, if Senators desire to have an explanation of the measure, I shall be glad to give it.

Mr. JONES of Washington and Mr. SMOOT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon raise the question of the consideration of the report?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report? That question is not debatable. [Putting the question.] The ayes have it. The Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13366) permitting any person who served in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps in the present war to retain his uniform and personal equipment, and to wear the same under certain conditions, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 2.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment, insert the following:

"SEC. 3. That section 126 of the act entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 3, 1916, be amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 126. That an enlisted man honorably discharged from the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, since November 11, 1918, or who may hereafter be honorably discharged, shall receive 5 cents per mile from the place of his discharge to his actual bona fide home or residence, or original muster into the service, at his option: Provided, That for sea travel on discharge, transportation and subsistence only shall be furnished to enlisted men: Provided, That Naval Reservists duly enrolled who have been honorably released from active service since November 11, 1918, or who may hereafter be honorably released from active service shall be entitled likewise to receive mileage as aforesaid.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment, insert the figure "4"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, the bill as it passed the House originally was simply a bill to give to the soldiers discharged from the Army their uniforms and overcoats and some equipment. That bill came to the Senate, and that part of it was passed by the Senate practically unchanged, except that two amendments were added to the bill. One was to allow these returning soldiers mileage to their homes or places of enlistment, and it also had a provision granting them one month's pay. The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], I believe, introduced that amendment. The committee broadened it somewhat and allowed 5 cents a mile either to their homes or to their places of enlistment, and allowed marines and men in the Navy the same rate of pay; so it broadens the bill to that extent, and gives a man the option of receiving mileage either to his home or to his place of enlistment.

The other amendment which the Senate added, and which the Senate conferees have agreed upon, was the one which allowed the soldier $30, one month's pay. We omitted that from the conference report because it is provided for in the revenue bill, and $60 was allowed instead of $30, as was contained in the original bill.

Mr. SMOOT. What is amendment No. 2? The Senate yielded on that amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have called the attention of the Senate to the fact that that is the amendment that provided pay.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, No. 1 was agreed to with an amendment?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. With an amendment. We changed somewhat the amendment which was added to the bill by the House, enlarging its scope somewhat.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

ENLISTMENTS IN THE ARMY.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present another conference report, on Senate bill 5279, relating to voluntary enlistments in the Regular Army.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon submits another conference report, which will be read.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 5279) to authorize the resumption of voluntary enlistments in the Regular Army, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the amendment of the House insert the following:

"Provided, That from and after the approval of this act, one-third of the enlistments in the Regular Army of the United States shall be for a period of one year, and the remaining two-thirds thereof shall be for the period of three years. Any person enlisting under the provisions of this act shall not be required to serve with the reserves. The pay of the men enlisted hereunder shall be the same as that provided by the act entitled 'An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States,' approved May 18, 1917: Provided further, That after the expiration of one year those enlisting for the period of three years may be discharged in the discretion of the Secretary of War under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by him after one year of service."

And the House agree to the same.

GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN,
G. M. HITCHCOCK,
F. E. WARREN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
S. H. DENT, Jr.,
W. J. FIELDS,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I will state to the Senate with reference to the report that the Senate passed a bill which removed all restrictions against volunteering in the Army of the United States. That would have opened the door for enlistments for the term heretofore provided by law. The House amended that bill by requiring an enlistment for only one year, and after serving the one-year enlistment the men were to be discharged absolutely from the service and would not go into the reserves. There was a good deal of warm discussion on the subject in the House, and the House conferees were quite insistent that their amendment should prevail. We finally compromised by putting one-third of the volunteer enlisted force in for a year, two-thirds for three years, and not requiring them upon discharge to serve in the reserves. That is practically the substance of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the atttention of the Senator from Oregon to the fact that he is informed the papers in this case are not in the Senate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It may be that I am anticipating a little in presenting the report. The House has the first right to act upon it, and the chairman thought they would act on it this afternoon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator that he let the report lie on the table for the present.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will let it lie on the table, although I am sure it has passed the House by this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, leave will be granted. The Chair hears no objection.

OIL AND GAS LANDS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] to proceed to the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2812) to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, and sodium on the public domain.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] stated that I have discussed this question on this very bill many hours, perhaps more so than any other Member of the Senate. I wish to say to the Senator that while I have discussed this bill to some extent, he has gotten confused as to the subjects that were before the Senate when I did discuss the question. The water-power bill was the bill that I made the longest speech on, and also I spoke on the Alaskan bill. When those two bills were up I did take a good deal of time, and I think facts have demonstrated that it was time that was very properly taken, because the coal-leasing law for Alaska which passed Congress has proved an absolute failure. There has been no development whatever in that Territory regarding the mining of coal under the leasing system. There is a letter which we have from Secretary Lane which states that only four applications have been made for coal leases in Alaska in the last four years and a half, and that in that time two of them fell down because they could not be financed, and the other two were of a limited nature.

Mr. President, I did discuss that bill, and I tried to demonstrate to the Members of the Senate that it would prove a failure, for any person who knows the facts must know that capital will not lend money on a lease, and he ought to know that it never can be a success. Whenever the proposition comes up of lending money for the purpose of opening a coal mine or building a railroad to a coal mine they ask, "What is the title that you offer?" and when you say that you have a lease, they ask, "Can it be forfeited?" and you have to say, "Yes." Then they will say that is no security whatever to us. That is the reason why they are turned down, and that is going to be the case in every leasing system, in my judgment. Now, on the question of water power it is the same way.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Before the Senator proceeds with that branch I wish to ask him if that letter from Secretary Lane has been put in the RECORD? I do not doubt the statement of the Senator, but I should like to have the letter in the RECORD.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will say that I have a copy of it in my pocket.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If it has not gone in the RECORD, I should like to have it appear there.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think it was placed in the RECORD the other day.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Very well.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator from Utah wanted to know why I was so anxious to get a settlement now when I was not so anxious to get one before.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator candidly that my position was because there was in the bill no alternative whatever, but it was a leasing proposition. It provided only for leasing, and that meant no development whatever to the western territory in my judgment. That being the case, it was natural that we should oppose those things; but we never got to the stage of a conference report. We never got to the stage even of passing the bill in the Senate, except the last one presented, which was a compromise bill, and that compromise bill was made under these circumstances, because it seems to me there ought to be some attention paid to that.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] was formerly Assistant Secretary of the Interior, and when he came to the Senate he asked why we could not agree upon a bill with relation to coal and other matters contained in this bill. I said, "We can if we give fair treatment." He said, "The Senator from Montana has a leasing bill solely and purely. You have an entry bill. Why can you not pass both the bills by consolidating them and give the option to the person who makes the entry or who applies for the lease? " We got together. We presented the arguments both ways and we reached a conclusion on a bill and submitted it to the Committee on Public Lands.

I want to say to the Senator from Utah that during all those negotiations I went to him—not once, but I went to him ten or twenty times—as to the matter that we were compromising on, and the Senator came to the committee when he was engaged in the consideration of the revenue bill, I think, and said that it was impossible for him to attend the meeting of the Committee on Public Lands, and authorized me to vote him; but he said if it was to be a straight-out leasing bill he would not consent to it under any circumstances.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Or if it was to be used as a means of getting it into conference by reason of that fact, so as to stifle our ideas that were contained in the bill, he did not want even to take up or consider the bill. Now, then, that was all right. That suited me, and I am with the Senator right now on this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will yield for a question.

Mr. SMOOT. What the Senator has just stated happened over a year ago. It was not what happened in the conference on this bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that the bill we agreed to and the bill I authorized him to vote me for when I was engaged in the Appropriations Committee was not this bill at all. The alternative system, the sale or the lease of coal, is in this bill, but the way the conferees have it written it does not make a particle of difference in existing conditions. The Senator must admit that it is entirely in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior. But that is not what I rose to say. I simply wanted the Senator's statement not to carry the impression that I authorized him to vote me for this conference report.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I do not intend to do that.

Mr. SMOOT. What I am against is the conference report, that has been changed from the Senate bill in many particulars. One of the fundamental principles is that of all royalties to be collected under the Senate bill one-half would go to the States for schools and the building of roads, and that has been eliminated.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I will not take the time of the Senator now, but I could go on and enumerate the others.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I want to conclude in a few words. It is true, as the Senator says, that there were several changes. Conferences are had for the very purpose of trying to get an agreement between the two Houses. It is true we had to strike out of the bill reported to the conferees the clause that the States should get one-half of the proceeds from the sale of coal over and above the minimum price which was prescribed. It is true we had to strike out also the provision that one-half should go to the States on the oil proposition.

But, Mr. President, the Senator is perfectly at liberty to vote against the bill by reason of that provision if he has any doubt about it. There are some other particulars that we agreed upon with relation to the bill that I had to yield on. I was as anxious as the Senator possibly could be to maintain an entry system, as we have developed in this country heretofore, but we could not get everything that we wanted. We have the very best measure that we could get. We fought the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Attorney General on the demands they made and we have at last got something that we did agree upon. It seems to me that after we have been for years and years reaching this agreement and have gotten a conference report which has been agreed to by the House, we ought to be permitted to make it the unfinished business, so that it can be disposed of, and when that is done you will find that the Senators who are interested in passing the supply bills through the Senate will not want the consideration to be long upon this conference report.

Mr. President, this is the most important measure that I have had any direct connection with, and it does seem to me that we ought to have a vote upon the conference report.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word, and that in the nature of an appeal to the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Georgia and my associates on this side of the Chamber and Senators upon the other side who are familiar with this measure, to let us come to a vote upon it.

I recognize the devotion of Senators to their duties in pressing for the consideration of the appropriation bills, but I trust they will recognize the situation that confronts us now. It is peculiar and extraordinary. The vast interests that the people of the West have in this bill, I am sure, they can not possibly appreciate, or they would recognize that after four years of discussion and unfortunate division among ourselves a bill has finally been presented by the conference committee that represents the judgment of the conferees of both Houses, and I venture to say has the overwhelming concurrence of the department.

The differences we have confronted were most unfortunate; but, as has been said by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH], we have all yielded much of our positions about what the bill ought to be to the opinions of others. Each has surrendered something with respect to the matter and now after all these years we have a bill. Of course, its fate depends very largely, if not wholly, upon the vote we are about to take.

I can not believe, Mr. President, that the discussion of this conference report can possibly occupy more than a couple of hours at the outside. It is proper to say in this connection that the delay about the bill has been very largely due to what is known as the relief provisions to take care of persons who have developed oil properties in the West. Everybody who was directly interested has given away something. The oil men, who asked for considerably more than they get in the bill, are reasonably satisfied to take what is provided for them here. The department officials who were interested in the matter have waived much of their contentions, and we have a bill that represents the judgment of both Houses, I think.

I hope very sincerely that we may be able to get the conference report before the Senate, and I think we ought to have a vote upon it after a few hours of discussion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I think the time has come, which I think comes in every legislative body, when it has got to find and to map out a program of what it is going to do. That is always the case with the House and the Senate in the closing weeks of a Congress. We have got to determine what program is going to be pursued or we shall accomplish nothing.

I am in entire sympathy with the efforts of these gentlemen to get up the conference report, and, as a matter of fact, in the beginning I tried to cooperate with them. I realize the situation. I realize the importance of the bill to a large number of people in the United States, and I realize that after contesting here for years they have reached a conclusion and they are anxious to register a vote on it.

The bill has been here off and on for two days. If there was any absolute assurance that it could be disposed of in the next hour or hour and a half, for one I would be glad to get out of the way, but there is no assurance to that effect. The indications are, on the other hand, that a very considerable debate will go on.

Now, there are 14 great supply bills that are necessary to run this Government. Not one of them has been finally passed to a conclusion. The most of them have not been considered by the Senate. We have seven legislative days left in this Congress before it expires by law. The District appropriation bill is on the calendar of the Senate, the Diplomatic and Consluar appropriation bill is on the calendar of the Senate, the Indian appropriation bill is on the calendar, and the fortifications appropriation bill is on the calendar. Two of those bills were reported before this conference report came here. The naval appropriation bill and the Army appropriation bill and the Agricultural appropriation bill are in the Senate. The first two have not been reported. The sundry civil appropriation bill has not yet passed the House; neither has the general deficiency bill.

We might just as well take stock and realize where we are. If we are going to deliberately scrap these bills, we might as well recognize it and let everybody who has important business here get it out and go along, and let the supply bills take care of themselves. It is true that at an extra session of Congress you can take care of most of them, but some of them you can not take care of. You can not let the general deficiency bill go down with this session of Congress without seriously injuring some of the functions of the Government, because the deficiencies are to take care of matters resting between now and the 1st of July. There are appropriations in almost all these bills that need immediate consideration.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is it not a fact that ninety-nine one hundredths of the matters that are contained in this bill do not become operative until the end of the fiscal year, and therefore if an extra session is called it seems to be inevitable that they can be taken care of without any trouble; but if this bill fails it is gone forever?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not see why this bill could not be taken care of at an extra session, as well as the supply bills. An agreement has been reached now, and an agreement can be reached at an extra session. I am not saying that against this bill, because I am not against it, but I think the time has come for the Senate to either determine to put the supply bills to the front and keep them there to the exclusion of everything else that is contested—of course, there are many uncontested matters that can be considered—but to keep them to the exclusion of other contested matters or determine that we are not going to do it, and let the calendar take care of itself "and the devil take the hindmost."

I think, therefore, we ought to have a decisive vote on this question. I hope we can have a record vote and determine whether or not we are going to take up the supply bills. If this conference report is voted down, I take it the Senate will determine to take up the supply bills and keep them as the unfinished business until we dispose of them. If we are not going to take up those bills, then, of course, we might as well recognize the fact that most of the supply bills are going down.

I hope we can have a decisive vote on a roll call and determine what we are going to do.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Alabama that there should be a determination of policy, and that is the exact reason why I did not ask the Senator in charge of the unfinished business, the Indian appropriation bill, to agree to temporarily lay it aside so that we might go on with the conference report. I think the policy should be established. This is completed legislation, and we owe a duty to the other branch of Congress. The District appropriation bill has not been passed by this body. It is not legislation that is ready to be placed in conference now. It seems to me as a matter of policy conference reports should have precedence in all cases, because we are not only dealing with legislation which we initiate, but we are dealing with legislation that has been perfected by both Houses.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the Senator state whether he thinks the supply bills should come here a week before the session ends?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not desire to criticize anyone, but I do not think the supply bills ought to have come in a week before adjournment.

Mr. HARDWICK. There are two supply bills that ought to be taken up which came in long before the conference report.

Mr. PITTMAN. Then I should like to have had Senators press them at an earlier day.

Mr. HARDWICK. They could not be pressed.

Mr. PITTMAN. But the policy must be determined as to whether or not the Senate is going to recognize the priority of conference reports. In the House, as I am informed—I was so informed to-day—precedence is given to conference reports over everything else.

It was undoubtedly the intention of the rule established by this body that conference reports should be given precedence here. The language of the rule is unfortunate in that it may be construed that if a conference report is not voted on immediately when presented it loses its right of precedence; but the reason for its precedence exists just the same to-day as it did on the day it was presented. The only reason a vote was not demanded on the day that it was presented was out of respect for some of the Senators, and particularly the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], in order that they might have an opportunity of examining the report. I announced that day that I was going to ask for immediate action on it, but Senators here, including the Senator from Utah, suggested that they would object if it were intended to take it up immediately.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Nevada is wrong in that statement. It may be that some other Senator made that objection. I do not really remember making any objection to the report. I do think, however, the Senator is perfectly correct in the statement he makes that when he presented the report he stated that he presented it and wanted it printed in the RECORD in order that Senators might examine it and see what the report contained. I do not remember any Senator objecting at that time, I will say to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, my memory may be incorrect, but I had thought the Senator from Utah stated he would object. However, whether that is so or not, I stated that I had no intention in the way of attempting to take advantage of any Senator reading the conference report.

As a matter of fact, the same reason exists now for giving the conference report precedence as existed on the day I presented it. The reason for the rule was that it was perfectly proper that completed legislation, which had been acted upon by the other House and by this body and came back as conference reports, should be acted on without delay. Now we are asked to allow a bill which has never gone into conference to be taken up and passed by this body, then go into conference, then come back to this body as a conference report. If that is to be the procedure of this body, we might as well know it.

I want a decisive vote on it. The question I want to determine in this matter is whether, when a bill has reached the completed state of a conference report, we are going to act on it or whether we are going to take up other bills that have never gone into conference.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, it is essential that the conference report on the bill for the Fourteenth Decennial Census shall be agreed to by the Senate before this session expires. The proper preparation for the next census must be taken at an early day, if the census is to be properly and effectively taken. I would not, therefore, by my vote against this conference report desire to preclude the consideration of the conference report on the census bill or to give consent to a policy which would preclude a consideration of conference reports.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the Senator from Texas yield to me?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is no proposal at all to cut out conference reports on other bills or on supply bills where there is not a contest and where they may be disposed of within a reasonable time. That is always done.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have heard some Senator say that he wanted to have the Senate establish the policy as to whether it would pass on supply bills or whether conference reports should be considered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, no. What I said was that I hoped the Senate would determine on a policy as to whether they are going to take up the supply bills and finish them, to the exclusion of every other contested proposition. Of course, it does not apply to matters that are merely pro forma or which ordinarily go through; but if we do not adopt a policy and determine to take up the supply bills as a matter of policy and as a regular rule for the remaining days of the session, we can not possibly dispose of them.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, just a word. The Democratic majority determined upon a policy about two weeks ago at a caucus. That policy was to keep the Senate in session day and night for the transaction of business upon the calendar. With the exception of two nights, we have paid no attention to our caucus agreement; and frequently there have been more Senators belonging to the minority here when roll calls were demanded than those who agreed among themselves to stay here and see that the business of the Senate was transacted. I want to see a policy established, but my experience is that we make policies by our votes and then abandon them by our actions. The chances are that the next seven days will be devoted, for the most part, no matter what bills are up, to the consideration of the league of nations and a discussion of matters which are entirely foreign to the business upon the docket. If we will stay here day and night, we can dispose of the conference reports and also the supply bills, provided that we will attend to the business of the Senate and let the discussion of these other matters go until they become concrete subjects of Senate consideration.

MEMORIAL SERVICES ON FORMER SENATOR HUSTING AND REPRESENTATIVE DAVIDSON.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I understand that it is probable that there will be a very late session of the Senate to-night, and at the request of a number of Senators who expected to take part in the memorial exercises which it had been planned to hold to-morrow in commemoration of the life, character, and services of the late Senator HUSTING and of the late Representative DAVIDSON, both of Wisconsin, I want to ask unanimous consent that the Senate hold a session beginning at 1 o'clock on the 2d of March to be devoted to the exercises that were expected to have been held to-morrow. I do this, I repeat, at the request of a number of Senators who had expected to take part in the exercises to-morrow. I have conferred with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] respecting the matter and also with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], who was present, and who rather approved of that action.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask the Senator from Wisconsin why we can not go on with those exercises to-morrow?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. For the reason that if we are to have, as the Senator himself has suggested, a very late session to-night it will interfere with the proposed memorial services to-morrow.

Mr. THOMAS. It should not interfere with them.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It will interfere with the preparation of a number of Senators who had expected to have made preparations this evening for the exercises to-morrow.

Mr. THOMAS. I have no doubt that there will be a later session of the Senate on the night of the 1st of March than there will be to-night. I do not object to the arrangement, but I am afraid the Senator will not gain anything by it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I submit the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the Senate convene on Sunday, March 2, for the purpose of holding memorial ceremonies in connection with the lives and services of the late Senator HUSTING, of Wisconsin, and the late Representative DAVIDSON, of that State, in lieu of the arrangement heretofore effective for to-morrow. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, may I inquire if it is necessary to have a roll call before the request is finally passed upon?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks not. The rule which the Senator has in mind does not apply to an order of the character which has just been directed to be entered.

OIL AND GAS LANDS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I now ask for a vote on my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll, and Mr. ASHURST responded in the negative.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Chair will state—the Chair attempted to do so before ordering the roll call—that the question is on the motion of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the so-called leasing bill. As many as favor the motion of the Senator from Nevada will vote "yea"; those who are opposed will vote "nay." The Secretary will resume the calling of the roll.

The Secretary resumed the calling of the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). He has not.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2812) to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, and sodium on the public domain.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, of course, I do not complain of the action which the Senate has taken. The Senate is the master. That, of course, displaces the Indian appropriation bill. It is no longer the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the understanding of the Chair. The conference report is laid before the Senate as the matter for consideration.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask for a vote, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the conference report on the leasing bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I want to make a point of order which, I believe, lies against the conference report, and that is that the report contains new matter not acted upon by either branch of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under what particular rule does the Senator raise the point?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Under Rule XXVII, the second paragraph, on page 35 of the rules. It is a new rule, I believe. I will read the rule. It is as follows:

> Conferees shall not insert in their report matter not committed to them by either House, nor shall they strike from the bill matter agreed to by both Houses.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Not just at present. I should like to state my position first.

Mr. PITTMAN. I could not hear the Senator, by reason of the confusion. I thought he was debating the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin raises the point of order that the conference report violates paragraph 2 of Rule XXVII.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I do not know whether we would waive anything; but the rule is well and clearly established that after debate has begun on a conference report, no point of order can be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say to the Senator that the Senator from Wisconsin has the floor, and he was recognized first after the report was laid before the Senate. He has the floor.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If my right to object is preserved, it is all right.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I should like without further interruption to get before the Senate the point of order that I desire to present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will proceed in order. He has the floor.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And I decline to yield until I have made the statement.

I cite, Mr. President, Rule XXVII, second section, page 35, which is as follows:

> Conferees shall not insert in their report matter not committed to them by either House, nor shall they strike from the bill matter agreed to by both Houses. If new matter is inserted in the report, or if matter which was agreed to by both Houses is stricken from the bill, a point of order may be made against the report, and if the point of order is sustained the report shall be recommitted to the committee of conference.

Mr. President, when the bill passed the Senate the section providing for the leasing of coal lands excluded from its scope coal lands in the Territory of Alaska. The House took similar action, so that, as a matter of fact, the House and the Senate were in agreement that this legislation should not apply to coal lands in Alaska. The conferees, in section 3, on page 2, of the conference report, absolutely and actually reversed the action of both Houses; and in the fourth line of section 3, on page 2, as the Chair will see, they changed the whole action of the two Houses by including the Territory of Alaska within the leasing provisions of this measure.

That states, I think, in a fairly plain way, the action of the conferees, and that action was directly in violation of this rule.

The whole purpose of the rule was to divest conferees from the power, which they frequently exercised, of going beyond the matter committed to them; namely, to adjust the differences and the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. Conferees had fallen into the habit of reporting to the Senate and to the House of Representatives new matter that had not been passed upon by either branch of Congress; and this rule, which is a comparatively recent addition to the Rules of the Senate, was designed to put an end to that practice.

It seems to me, if I correctly understand it, this is altogether the rankest violation of the rule which could be conceived. The conferees have not only introduced new matter into this bill, because neither of the bills was applicable to the Territory of Alaska, so far as coal lands were concerned——

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I will take issue with that in a few minutes, and I want to call the Senator's attention to that fact.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator will have an opportunity to take issue with the entire matter that I am presenting in a few moments. The conferees have actually reversed the action of both Houses upon this matter. Each House specifically excluded coal lands in Alaska from the leasing provisions contained in section 3, so, as to that matter, both Houses were in perfect agreement. There was no difference to be adjusted. Notwithstanding this perfect agreement between the House and Senate bills, the conference committee bring in a bill that reverses the action of both Houses and subjects Alaska coal lands to lease under the terms of this bill.

I submit, Mr. President, that the point of order should be sustained, the conference report should be rejected, and the bill be recommitted to the conference committee.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the Senator has urged that neither bill dealt with the sale of coal lands in Alaska. I call the attention of the Chair to page 2 of the comparative print of the Senate bill and the House bill. The House bill, found in the first column, does not attempt to deal with the disposal of coal lands in Alaska. In the next column the Senate bill reads as follows:

> That any citizen or any association composed of persons severally qualified by law to enter coal lands, or any corporation incorporated under and by virtue of the laws of any State or Territory, or any municipality of any State or Territory, shall, upon application to the register of the proper land office, have the right to enter by legal subdivisions any quantity of vacant coal lands of the United States within any State or Territory of the Union not otherwise appropriated by competent authority, not exceeding 2,560 acres, upon payment to the receiver of not less than $10 per acre—

And so forth. There was a clear grant of that. Now, let me tell you why there was a clear grant of that in the Senate bill.

In the first place, section 1 of the Senate bill reads as follows:

That deposits of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, or sodium in land owned by the United States and not otherwise reserved shall be subject to disposition in the form and manner provided by this act to citizens of the United States—

That is section 1 of the Senate bill. That is on page 1 of the comparative print. The very first section of the bill provides for the sale and disposal under this bill of coal in the public lands of the United States. It goes on further and says:

Or to any association of such persons, or to any corporation organized under the laws of the United States, or of any State or Territory thereof.

Take that into consideration in connection with the coal provision of the Senate bill. If you take that into consideration, you will find that the Senate intended to apply the sale provision of coal to Alaska. Why? Because there was a law already in existence which provided for the leasing of coal in Alaska, but there was no law providing for the sale of coal in Alaska. It was the intention of the committee to give this optional provision of sale in all public lands owned by the United States.

When we came into conference this was the situation: The House had opposed the sale of coal lands under any consideration. They were willing, however, to extend the sale provision except with regard to Alaska; but the Secretary of the Interior wrote a letter to Mr. SCOTT FERRIS, the chairman of the Public Lands Committee of the House and the chairman of the House conferees, asking him to allow the Senate provisions that did extend to Alaska to continue to extend to Alaska. There was nothing to it except that the Senate provisions were adopted, and that is the situation as it stands to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will ask the Senator if there is any significance to the words "and not otherwise reserved," on line 4, page 1, of the Senate bill, the clause reading:

Oil, gas, or sodium, in land owned by the United States and not otherwise reserved.

Mr. PITTMAN. The only land in Alaska that is reserved consists of naval reserves, oil reserves, and timber reserves. All other public lands of the United States were thrown open to the action of this bill by the provision of the Senate bill itself. There is, of course, a distinction between lands that are withdrawn from the operation of the law and lands that are reserved. There are 44,000,000 acres of coal land that have been withdrawn from the operation of existing law and 6,000,000 acres of oil land; and that was the reason of the necessity of this bill, to open up those lands. Those lands are withdrawn lands, but not reserved lands.

There are coal lands in Alaska that are not reserved, that are subject to sale under the provisions of the Senate bill; and the Secretary of the Treasury recognized that fact when he wrote the letter that has been placed in the RECORD, stating that he favored the sale provision as far as Alaska was concerned, as the leasing provision had so far been a failure.

As the situation stands, the whole question is this, and there is but one question: It is whether or not the language "vacant coal lands of the United States within any State or Territory of the Union" covers all of the public lands of the United States, as described in section 1 of the act. Section 1 of the act states that deposits of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, or sodium in land owned by the United States shall be subject to disposition under this act. In the next section we expressly provide for the sale of coal lands in the United States within any State or Territory of the Union. Now, if there is any question as to what the word "Territory" means it must have had some meaning on the part of Congress, because there is no Territory in the United States proper; but there is a Territory in the Union, and that Territory is the District of Alaska—a Territory with a legislature, with a governor, and with a Territorial form of government. It is the Territory referred to in the act passed by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will ask the Senator, before he finishes the discussion, if the expression "land owned by the United States" includes lands in Alaska, what is the purpose of putting in the words "including Alaska" in this conference report?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will state that very thing—because it was urged that a court might raise the question as to whether or not the Senate meant by "Territory of the Union" the District of Alaska; and while it was contended by the Members of the Senate committee that it could not mean anything else but Alaska, it was considered that there was no harm in putting in words that meant exactly the same thing if anybody wanted them put it.

Mr. WALSH and Mr. LENROOT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator from Montana attracted my attention first. I will yield to him, and then to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. WALSH. I rose to inquire whether or not Hawaii is a Territory?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In order that the Senator may have this whole matter before him, the Chair calls attention to page 4 of the comparative print, where both the Senate bill and the House bill expressly declare "outside of the Territory of Alaska."

Mr. PITTMAN. That is not in the sale provision of the bill. That is in regard to the leasing provision of the bill. I now yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. I wish to ask if the conference report in the leasing provision does not read "including the Territory of Alaska," instead of "outside the Territory of Alaska," being exactly contrary to what both Houses had agreed upon as to the leasing of coal.

Mr. PITTMAN. I want to get through with one question at a time. Of course, I anticipated that that would be an objection, and I am going to present my view of it. I think in so far as the sale provision of coal is concerned that is plain. Now, then, coming down to the leasing of coal lands in Alaska, if the Senate bill provided for the sale of coal in Alaska and the House bill had no provision with regard to the disposal of coal in Alaska, then what is the situation? The situation is, may the Senate bill be modified? That is the status. The Senate bill provided for the passing of the title to coal lands in Alaska. The House bill did not provide for the passing of any title in Alaska, and a compromise was reached granting a lesser title than the Senate bill called for. Let me call attention to a provision of the Constitution of the United States touching that point. In Article IV of the Constitution we have this language:

The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the Territory or other property belonging to the United States.

"Power to dispose of." When the proposition to lease public lands for coal or oil was first urged in this country those who were opposed to the leasing system questioned the authority of Congress under the Constitution to lease lands under the term "right to dispose of." They never questioned the right to sell but the right to lease. It was held, however, by the courts that the power to grant the greater title necessarily carried with it the power to grant a lesser title. The Senate bill, in dealing with coal in Alaska, provided for the conveyance of the highest title, a patent. The House had no provision on the subject. The House conferees said, "We will agree that you may have your sale power provided we have our conveyance of a lease power which is a lesser right." The whole subject matter was certainly in conference between the two Houses.

Now, what was the subject matter submitted to the conferees? It was whether or not the Secretary of the Interior should have the right to dispose of coal lands in Alaska. This body has said he should have the right to dispose of it by patent. The House had no provision. The subject matter under consideration by the conferees was the provision authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to pass title to coal lands in Alaska. The House conferees said, "We will not accept that provision in toto, but we will accept that provision for the sale of coal lands in Alaska provided that the Secretary of the Interior may grant a lesser title if he sees fit."

I think I have made my position clear. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], in my opinion, was in error in his description of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is ready to rule, but does not wish to do so if there is any other Senator who cares to discuss the matter.

It is the opinion of the Chair that when the two bills specifically provide for leasing land and each one of them says "outside the Territory of Alaska," that that would exclude the conference committee from including a provision in the report relating to the leasing of lands including the Territory of Alaska. That is the idea of the Chair. In answer to the suggestion that the greater power to sell would include the power to lease, it could have no relation to this question, because these are separately dealt with in the bill.

Mr. WALSH. If the Chair has not made up his mind conclusively about the matter, I think after due consideration the Chair might change his opinion and adopt another view.

I do not believe, Mr. President, that it is possible to extract an item like this out of a bill of this character and make it subject to a point of order under Rule XXVII. So far as the sale provisions are concerned I think there is really no answer to be made. The House bill expressly excludes Alaska from the provisions of the bill and the Senate bill clearly provides for the disposition of coal lands in any State or Territory in the Union. Alaska is undoubtedly a Territory of the Union, so that Alaska was included within the sale provision of the Senate bill and excluded from the sale provision of the House bill. I think there can be no controversy about that. Accordingly, Mr. President, it seems to me that there is no question about the bill being invulnerable so far as the sale provision is concerned.

Now, I turn to the leasing provision. There were very radical differences between the House bill and the Senate bill evidencing wide differences in policy concerning the disposition of these public lands. The House conferees gave way practically to the Senate conferees with reference to the sale provision; and you will observe that the Senate conferees gave way practically to the House conferees in relation to the leasing of the land as provided in section 3. The Senate conferees might very easily say, "We will not assent to the House provision in relation to leasing unless the provision extends to Alaska also."

Mr. President, why does not that come within the power of the conferees? Suppose a plan proposed by the House for the disposition of all lands except those in the State of Montana and a totally different provision in a Senate bill concerning the disposition of all lands except in the State of Montana. The conferees get together and they devise a system that is not wholly in accord with the ideas of the Senate or of the House. For instance, the side that gives in says, "We will not assent to it unless it is made general for the Union."

So we have that situation here, Mr. President. The Senate conferees practically assented to the leasing provision in the House bill. The Senate conferees were willing to exclude Alaska from the operation of the bill, which they proposed if their bill should become a law. They were quite willing that the coal lands of Alaska should remain subject to disposition under the special laws in relation to Alaska. but they said in substance that as the House provision is going to be adopted concerning the disposition of coal lands within the United States we insist that it shall be extended over Alaska. Now, why is not that entirely proper? Why is not that a proper compromise for the conferees to make?

I submit, Mr. President, that it falls within the general subject.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator how he contends that the matter of leasing in Alaska was submitted to the conferees at all when it had been expressly excluded in both bills?

Mr. WALSH. There was submitted to the conferees the subject of the disposition of coal lands throughout the Union, the Senate conferees agreeing that if their bill should become a law they were willing it should not extend to Alaska; but they said, "If the House bill is to become a law, we shall insist that the law shall extend over all of the public lands of the United States." Now, what is wrong with that?

Mr. LENROOT. If the Senate should pass a leasing bill with relation to Alaska, and the House should pass no leasing bill with reference to Alaska, but a bill of a different kind, does the Senator contend if that bill went into conference the conferees would have the authority to extend the bill to the United States?

Mr. WALSH. That is a different question.

Mr. LENROOT. It is exactly the same question.

Mr. WALSH. It is a different question; it is a question between the substance of the bill and the exception.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, having proposed this amendment to the rule, I have taken considerable interest in its enforcement, and I want to call the attention of the Chair to the language that, it seems to me, makes this conference report subject to a point of order. In section 3 of the House bill, as pointed out by the Chair, the leasing provision provides "owned by the United States outside of the Territory of Alaska." Identically the same language is used in section 3 of the Senate bill. In section 3 of the conference report the language is "including the Territory of Alaska."

I desire to call the attention of the Chair to a decision made April 18, 1918, by Vice President MARSHALL on a point of order which I raised against the Indian appropriation bill. The Indian appropriation bill as it passed the Senate used the words "including oil and gas leases." In conference the word "including" was changed to "except," and the Vice President, upon the point of order raised by me, held that the conferees had exceeded their authority, because they had changed the entire situation.

It seems to me that in section 3 the conferees did exactly the opposite of what was voted in the House and voted in the Senate, and I think the point of order is well taken.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I wish to call attention to the time when a point of order can be raised. I read from Hinds' Precedents at section 6440:

A point of order as to a conference report should be made before the consideration of the report has begun.

This report has been discussed for three days; and if the speeches that were made upon it really did not relate to it, they were still considered as being on the conference report.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Is that a citation from a House precedent or a Senate precedent?

Mr. SHAFROTH. From a House precedent.

Mr. NORRIS. Does not the Senator know that the rule in the House and in the Senate is entirely different; that in the House that precedent is good, but in the Senate one can make a point of order at any time?

Mr. SHAFROTH. But there is every reason in favor of it. Is it possible that you can discuss a measure and use up the time of the Senate for days and days and then raise a point of order that would make all the discussion immaterial?

I wish to read this:

On March 3, 1899, the House was considering the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the river and harbor appropriation bill.

The statement of the conferees was read, and the reading of the report was dispensed with by unanimous consent, except as to certain portions, which were read.

Debate having begun, Mr. William P. Hepburn, of Iowa, proposed to raise a point of order against the portion of the report relating to the Nicaraugua Canal.

Mr. Theodore E. Burton, of Ohio, raised the point of order that the point of order of the gentleman from Iowa came too late.

The Speaker said:

"The Chair thinks the point of order was not taken at the proper time. Nothing is better settled than that a point of order must be raised prior to discussion."

Mr. President, it is true there is in this bill, with relation to leasing, a proposition not including Alaska because Alaska had a leasing law, but it must be remembered that when the Senate passed its bill it went over to the House and the House struck out all the provisions of the bill and adopted the provisions of a separate bill in entirely different language.

Mr. NORRIS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator contend that the rule of the House on this point is applicable to the Senate?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not see anything to the contrary.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator let me read Rule XX of the Senate?

Mr. SHAFROTH. All right.

Mr. NORRIS. Rule XX of the Senate reads:

A question of order may be raised at any stage of the proceedings, except when the Senate is dividing, and, unless submitted to the Senate, shall be decided by the Presiding Officer without debate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It seems to me that is not on this point.

Mr. NORRIS. That is one of the Senate rules.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The question of order there relates to whether you are not going to take one bill up or another, and that it could not be discussed at certain stages. It relates to the order of the Senate with relation to its calendar. It does not relate to the question of raising a point of order in this case, because it is absurd to let a discussion occur for three days upon a measure and then let a Senator raise a point of order against it and knock the entire measure out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. NORRIS. Does not the Senator know that that has been the practice of the Senate, that it is continually done, and that a point of order can be made after debate has gone on for two or three days?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not think that can be done. It has not come under my observation.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to read just one decision. This question was raised before Vice President MARSHALL May 19, 1914, and the Vice President in deciding the question said a point of order could be raised at any time and so held. I read:

Mr. MCCUMBER submitted an amendment to the Agricultural appropriation bill, and, while occupying the floor, Mr. REED made a point of order.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I have not yielded, and I do not think in the middle of another Senator's address the Senator can raise the point of order. I raise the point of order that the Senator can not be recognized for that purpose without my consent.

Mr. REED. A point of order is always in order.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator can rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT (Mr. MARSHALL). The rules of the Senate are to the effect that a question of order may be raised at any stage of the proceedings. The Chair will read the rule:

"A question of order may be raised at any stage of the proceedings, except when the Senate is dividing."

So the Senator from Missouri, if he desires to make a point of order, has the right to do so now.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, it does seem to me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not care to hear any more discussion on that particular point. The Chair takes this view——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Then let me present my view on the other point, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has the Senator's view on the other point; and upon the other point, if the Chair assumed that the precedent which the Senator cited was of weight or ought to have weight here, he would not rule in favor of the Senator's contention on that point. Until this matter was taken up it would not have been in order to have raised the point of order. There is no use of a Senator getting up and making a point of order against a conference report that may or may not be taken up. After this conference report had been declared to be the unfinished business and had been taken up, the first thing which was done was the making of a point of order by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; the Chair must remember that this conference report was taken up three days ago; it was again taken up two days ago and passed over by the Senate, and it was discussed. There is no doubt about that, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was taken up at that time for adoption and declared to be the unfinished business.

Mr. SHAFROTH. And the other was also taken up for adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not know that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, yes; there is no doubt about that. The motion was made by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was only assuming that under that state of case the point of order is in time. The Chair has no disposition, however, to insist that he is absolutely correct about it; and if any Senator is disposed to disagree with the Chair on that point, an appeal will lie to the Senate. On the other point, unless some other Senator cares to discuss the matter, the Chair will say that his mind is made up.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, let me discuss this matter a little further, for the situation with reference to this bill is somewhat different from that which relates to conference reports on many other bills. This bill is really made up of two bills. The Senate passed a bill which provided for the title to the land being passed, the contention being made in the Senate that there would be no development unless the title should be passed. It is true that, so far as Alaska is concerned, a leasing system applies there already, and so it was not thought necessary to include Alaska in the House bill.

When the House came to consider the matter they did not want any title to pass at all to the coal lands. When the theory was accepted that the coal lands might be disposed of by sale, that evidently carried with it any subordinate title. It is similar to the greater including the less.

Now, I want to call attention to a letter which was written by Secretary Lane while this matter was being considered by the conferees:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 1, 1919.

MY DEAR MR. FERRIS: On December 10, 1917, you transmitted a copy of resolutions passed by the Cordova (Alaska) Chamber of Commerce with reference to the pending general leasing bill and particularly with reference to deposits of coal and oil. One of the matters urged was that the pending bill be modified so as to make its provisions relating to the sale of coal lands applicable to Alaska. In my reply of January 4, 1918, I advised you, in effect, that the reason this provision was not included was that there is now a special leasing law applicable to that Territory, enacted October 20, 1914 (38 Stat., 741), and that this law had not been in operation long enough for the department to determine whether it will be successful and adapted to the development of Alaska's coal resources.

Since the above letter was written there has been further opportunity to learn whether the Alaska coal-leasing bill is suitable to conditions in the Territory, and I have concluded that it is not entirely so. There has been but little inquiry for these lands and only limited development. Four leases were granted under the present law, and but two of these were able to finance the small operations thus far begun.

After further study of the situation I have come to the conclusion that perhaps the field would be more inviting to coal operators if title were granted as in the States, especially since Alaskan operations are so far away from the bases of labor and supply.

I therefore recommend that Alaska be placed on the same footing as the States in the pending bill, and that operators in that field have the same choice of lease and purchase as accorded elsewhere. Otherwise, Alaska coal lands will remain in a disadvantageous position.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I decline to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado declines to yield.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The letter continues:

The Territory of Alaska is now included in the oil provision of the bill, thus giving it the same law as the States, which will be an advantage in the administration of the law, because the same rulings would apply to both the States and the Territories and will obviate the necessity of administering and construing two different laws on the same subject.

I am therefore of the opinion that not only would it be in the interest of the development of the Alaska coal lands to have the provision of the pending bill made applicable to Alaska, but that it would also be conducive to good administration of the laws.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS,
Chairman Public Lands Committee,
House of Representatives, United States.

Mr. President, it can readily be seen, there being in the House bill nothing with relation to the disposition of land, except as to leasing it, that whenever there is introduced and allowed, as was done in the Senate bill, the sale of lands, it becomes a subject of proper consideration between the House and the Senate as to whether or not this provision does modify the situation so far as it requires, in the interest of good administration and in the interest of beneficial laws, that that situation should prevail.

Mr. President, we know that when one House passes a bill and the other House strikes out the provisions of that bill and inserts another bill, very liberal latitude is given to conferees. I call attention to the fact that that is the general rule. I read from Hinds' Precedents the following:

SEC. 6421. Where one House strikes out all of the bill of the other after the enacting clause and inserts a new text and the differences over this substitute are referred to conference, the managers have a wide discretion in incorporating germane matters, and may even report a new bill on the subject. On March 3, 1865, Mr. Robert C. Schenck, of Ohio, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 51) entitled "An act to establish a bureau of freedmen's affairs," reported that the Senate had receded from their amendment, which was a substitute, and the committee had agreed upon, as a substitute, a new bill entitled "An act to establish a bureau for the relief of freedmen and refugees."

As soon as the report had been read, Mr. William S. Holman, of Indiana, made the point that the report did not come within the scope of the conference committee.

The Speaker said:

"The Chair understands that the Senate adopted a substitute for the House bill. If the two Houses had agreed upon any particular language, or any part of a section, the committee of conference could not change that; but the Senate having stricken out the bill of the House and inserted another one, the committee of conference have the right to strike out that and report a substitute in its stead. Two separate bills have been referred to the committee, and they can take either one of them, or a new bill entirely, or a bill embracing parts of either. They have a right to report any bill that is germane to the bills referred to them."

That latitude has been generally allowed. This new provision comes. It does refer to some other matter, but it can readily be seen that when the Senate passes a bill which provides for the disposition by sale—a higher title than a leasehold, as provided in the House bill—and the measure goes to conference that changes the situation entirely; and, as the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has stated, it is a proper subject of dispute between the two Houses; and if it is a proper subject of dispute as to what is best to be done, in view of the agreement on that part of the Senate bill which relates to the sale of land, it is a subject which properly comes within the scope of the conferees.

Mr. President, this is a very important matter, for if the point of order is sustained it practically disposes of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator will desist, the Chair's mind is made up on that point, and a precedent that was established some years ago could hardly be of weight now in view of the new rule which provides expressly what shall be done.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I wish to restate one point. The first clause of the Senate bill provides:

That deposits of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, and sodium in land owned by the United States—

This land is owned by the United States—and not otherwise reserved—

It is not applicable to that which is reserved—

shall be subject to disposition in the form and manner provided by this act to citizens of the United States, or to any association of such persons, or to any corporation organized under the laws of the United States, or of any State or Territory thereof, and in the case of coal oil, or gas to qualified municipalities.

Alaska, of course, is a Territory.

Mr. President, the House bill provided:

That deposits of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, or gas, owned by the United States, including those in national forests, the Grand Canyon national monument, and the Mount Olympus national monument, but excluding those in national parks, and in lands withdrawn or reserved for military or naval uses or purposes, except as hereinafter provided, shall be subject to disposition in the form and manner provided by this act to citizens of the United States, or to any association of such persons, or to any corporation organized under the laws of the United States, or of any State or Territory thereof, and in the case of coal, oil, oil shale, or gas, to municipalities.

Not only was there a reference to Territories, but in the Senate bill, under the caption of "Coal," the provision is found—

That any citizen or any association composed of persons severally qualified by law to enter coal lands, or any corporation incorporated under and by virtue of the laws of any State or Territory, or any municipality of any State or Territory, shall, upon application to the register of the proper land office, have the right to enter by legal subdivisions any quantity of vacant coal lands of the United States within any State or Territory of the Union not otherwise appropriated by competent authority—

That makes a disposition of the land. The conferees came together, and the Senate conferees said, "We want that provision to remain, and we want a provision by which the Alaskan lands can be included under the provisions of the bill, as the Secretary of the Interior desires, and be administered under the same law." That makes a different situation, and because of that different situation, and under the liberal rules governing the action of conference committees when the entire bill passed by one House is stricken out and a substitute is inserted by the other House, it seems to me that the provision with reference to Alaska is relevant, and that, therefore, the point of order is not well taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that, under Rule XX, the point of order is made in time, and that under the second section of Rule XXVII the point of order should be sustained. The language of the sections of the House bill and of the Senate bill, as printed in parallel columns, shows that only that portion of the public domain outside of the Territory of Alaska was included, and that, so far as can be gathered from the provisions of the bills passed by both Houses, the matter as affecting Alaska was not intended to be submitted to conference. So the conference report on that point is beyond the authority of the conferees; and the Chair rules that the point is well taken and sustains it.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. What further action is to be taken?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that the point is well taken, and he therefore sustains the point of order and recommits the report to the conference committee, unless some other order is made. That is what the rule provides.

Mr. PITTMAN. It is recommitted to the same conferees?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is recommitted to the same conferees. Unless there is an appeal from the decision of the Chair, it will stand.

Mr. McKELLAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4637.

Mr. PITTMAN. Just a moment, Mr. President. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Has the conference report been recommitted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report is recommitted to the conference committee under the provisions of the rule, which reads, in part, as follows:

A point of order may be made against the report, and if the point of order is sustained, the report shall be recommitted to the committee of conference.

The point is sustained, and the report is directed to be recommitted to the committee of conference.

RETIREMENT OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES.

Mr. McKELLAR. I move that the Senate proceed to consideration of the bill (S. 4637) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I have the floor, and have made a motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I had supposed we were going on with the appropriation bills. There was no notice given that this measure was to be taken up at this time; and, more than that, when it does come up I shall ask the privilege of being heard at length upon it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection to the Senator being heard on my motion, but I ask the Senate to pass upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is debatable.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator from Washington desires me to yield to him, I will do so; but I should like to make a statement concerning the motion I have made.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will tell the Senator what I want to do.

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, this is the birthday of George Washington. Our thoughts all go back to his patriotic services for the country, especially at this time, and I think it would be extremely appropriate for the Senate to adjourn out of respect to his memory.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like to say to the Senator that all I ask is that this bill be made the unfinished business. If it is, I shall not ask to proceed with its consideration to-night, but will yield to the Senator to make his motion to adjourn.

Mr. President, the bill which I have asked the Senate to take up has been read and considered. There is no reason in the world why the Senate should not pass upon it, and all I ask is that the Senate pass upon it finally. It ought not to take any time at all. Senators certainly are willing to vote on this measure, and that is all I ask, that it be finally voted on. I hope that we may make it the unfinished business, and proceed with it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, this is the retirement bill——

Mr. McKELLAR. It is the retirement bill, and I hope the Senator will not object, but will permit it to come to a vote.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; I will object to its coming up at this particular time. I do not think it is quite fair to call this bill up when it was understood that an appropriation bill was to be taken up. It is true that the Indian appropriation bill was displaced by the conference report; but after the conference report was acted upon, it was understood that one of the appropriation bills was to be presented to the Senate, and now in the very closing hours of the session the Senator is trying to force upon this Government a system which is going to cost this Government no man knows what.

I am entirely in sympathy with the idea of a retirement bill; I have been working to that end for several years; but I do not believe that an attempt should be made now, when there are only a few Senators present, to bring up a matter of this kind, which is involved in character and which no man can understand unless he carefully studies it.

I have taken pains to collect some data upon this subject, and I want to present at length the information I have when we get to a time when we can possibly get our minds down to this subject.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say to the Senator that the Senator has been making that same statement to the Senate for months—not for weeks, but for months—and he made it so successfully that he even got his bill substituted. Surely if the Senator is in favor of any kind of a retirement bill, he is willing for the Senate to vote on it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have a right to hope that the Senator will state the situation accurately.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator will certainly admit that I held back the vote on this bill time after time to allow him to get a chance to get his data together so as to speak upon it.

Mr. POMERENE. No, Mr. President; that is only a part of the story. It is true that for several days it was held back until I could get certain data together. I presented them to the Senate, with the result that my substitute bill was adopted, and it is now on the calendar. After it was adopted the Senator refused to allow it to be further considered.

Mr. McKELLAR. Not at all. I am asking that that very bill be considered now. I am trying to get a consideration of the Senator's own substitute. The Senator is here talking against his own substitute.

Mr. POMERENE. No, Mr. President; I am not talking against my substitute, but I do not know what the plans are about this matter. There is not a quorum present here, and probably——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). The Chair will ask who holds the floor, as the present occupant of the chair has but recently taken it?

Mr. McKELLAR. I think I hold the floor.

Mr. POMERENE. If so, I will surrender the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. But I yield to my friend from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would like to know who is in control of the floor, having been so recognized by the previous occupant of the chair. Does the Senator from Tennessee contend that he has the floor by virtue of recognition by the predecessor of the present occupant of the chair?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes, sir; and I have yielded to the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair then recognizes that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] holds the floor by virtue of previous recognition, and he yields now to the Senator from Ohio, and the Chair recognizes the Senator from Ohio. Does the Senator desire to address the Senate?

Mr. McKELLAR. Let us have a vote on the subject.

Mr. POMERENE. No, Mr. President; I will not consent to a vote being taken to-night upon this subject, and I want to appeal to the Senators who are here. The statement has been made throughout the length and breadth of this land that this was a so-called half-and-half bill; that is, that the employees were to pay half and the Government was to pay half of the expense of these annuities. A greater misrepresentation than that has never been made to the public about any bill that has been before the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator certainly knows that the Senate has already substituted the Senator's own bill for the half-and-half plan that was reported by the committee. Is the Senator unwilling that his own substitute shall be voted on?

Mr. POMERENE. No, sir; I am not; but——

Mr. McKELLAR. Then why does the Senator take this course?

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator will permit me, I will tell him in a few words. After the substitute was adopted, the Senator from Tennessee refused to allow it to come to a vote when the Senators were here who were reasonably well-advised with regard to it; and now, when there are only a few Senators here, he insists on foisting it upon the Senate.

But I was discussing another branch of this subject.

A lot of these young girls and young boys in the service have been led to believe that if the so-called McKellar bill was adopted the Government would pay one-half of the expense, and they would be charged only one-half of the expense, and that would be 2½ per cent of their salaries. They have not been advised, however, that the 2½ per cent will pay almost the entire cost of their annuity, and that if they should be fortunate enough to go along to a point where their salaries are increased above the average, and they should get a salary of $2,500, they will be paying twice the cost of an annuity which they could go out in the open market and buy, and that if they should get to a point where they were paid a salary of $5,000 they would be required to pay three or four times the cost of an annuity bought in the open market.

When this matter was up before, and the statement was made that this bill met the approval of all of the employees of the Government, I challenged that statement. There was a committee of lobbyists in the galleries here at the time, and I may say that most of them were men 45, 50, and 55 years of age, and that committee would have been benefited by their scheme at the expense of the young boys and the young girls that are in the service. Now, I want an opportunity to demonstrate this fact to the Senate, and I will demonstrate it, without any question whatever.

Mr. President, I do not feel that it is fair to the Government; I do not feel that it is fair to the boys and girls who are in the service, that this matter should be taken up at this late hour in the session. Why, Mr. President, for an annuity of only $600, 2½ per cent paid on the boy's or the girl's salary when he or she is only getting $1,000 a year means $25 a year. If they get to the point where they get $2,000, it means $50 a year. In other words, these young boys and girls will be compelled to pay the expense of the annuities which are received by others.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Washington to propound a parliamentary inquiry. The Chair will entertain it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to know who has the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has heretofore stated the position as he understands it. The Chair understands that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] has the floor, and that he has yielded to the Senator from Ohio. The Senator from Ohio is being recognized through the yielding of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not like to make any point of order against it; but, of course, under the rule the Senator from Tennessee can not yield indefinitely.

Mr. McKELLAR. I would not care to yield indefinitely, Mr. President.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I just wanted to say this——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Ohio says he will not let this matter come to a vote to-night; so I wanted to ask the Senator from Tennessee if he would not yield for us to make a motion to adjourn out of respect to the memory of George Washington?

Mr. McKELLAR. After the Senate votes upon the question of whether or not this bill shall be made the unfinished business, I shall be delighted to yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will say to the Senator that I do not like to do that, but that is one reason why I rose awhile ago. I understood the Senator from Ohio to state that he would not permit a vote to-night.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am sure that the Senator from Ohio would not object to a vote on it if the Senate desires to vote, and I think it desires to vote on this bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I just heard the statement awhile ago; that is all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. McKELLAR. I will.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Unquestionably there is not a quorum here. We can not proceed with this matter now. If the Senator insists upon taking up this bill as the unfinished business of the Senate, it can be determined when we next meet and have a quorum; and I suggest that the Senator yield for a motion to adjourn.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be willing to yield for that purpose if we have an agreement that we can take it up.

Mr. SMOOT. Not an agreement that we can take it up; an agreement that the Senator can make a motion to take it up.

Mr. McKELLAR. Well, I am willing——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator understands that the point of no quorum can be made, and at the end of the roll call we will have to adjourn?

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Very well; then why not yield for an adjournment now?

Mr. McKELLAR. For this reason: The bill has been before the Senate, and every word of it has been considered. The bill has been read in full. It is in the Senate. It is ready for a final vote, and a final vote has been prevented by just such tactics as are being pursued this evening against the bill. Now, I am not in a position where I think I would be fair to the bill or to the committee which I represent in reporting the bill if I yielded again.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But the Senator understands that he will have to yield the floor before a vote can come, and when he does yield the floor a motion to adjourn will be made.

Mr. McKELLAR. Well, I know; and I am appealing to the Senate to let us make it the unfinished business. It will not take 10 minutes to do it, and surely Senators are not unwilling to vote. Here is one Senator who says that he is unwilling to vote upon the bill when it is his own bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is the Senator willing to take a vote now as to whether this shall be the unfinished business, without a roll call?

Mr. McKELLAR. I am.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Let us have that, then.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let us vote on whether or not it shall be taken up. I will ask for a division, but I will not ask for a roll call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall Senate bill 4637 be made the unfinished business—a bill the nature of which has been explained by the colloquy and the debate of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I call for a division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All those in favor of making Senate bill 4637 the unfinished business will rise and be counted. [A pause.]

Mr. KING. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must ask the Senator from Utah whether that suggestion can be made in the midst of a division?

Mr. KING. Then I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. McKELLAR. Surely the Senator will not do that, especially after the agreement has been made as to a vote. He will not go back on the agreement that was made here in the open Senate.

Mr. KING. There was no agreement. I moved to adjourn before the motion was put.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator was present here when the inquiry was made if we should vote on it by a division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will have to ask the Senator to let the division be concluded. Those who are opposed to making this bill the unfinished business will rise and be counted. [A pause.] The motion is lost.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I move that the District of Columbia appropriation bill, H. R. 13277, be made the unfinished business of the Senate, for the purpose of establishing it as such, and then adjourning.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I merely wish to state that upon the conclusion of the consideration of this bill I shall make another effort to have the conference report on the census bill considered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. This bill will not interfere with that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H. R. 13277, the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield for just a moment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like to state to the Senator that there is a bill here which I think is absolutely unopposed, in which other Senators and the House are very greatly interested, about allotments. It has been unanimously reported by our committee. I have not the report of the committees before me, but in the administration of the war-risk insurance act allotments that were made by soldiers and were paid up until July 15, 1918, were discontinued, and discontinued without authority and without excuse of authority.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator that if this motion prevails it is the purpose to move an adjournment as soon as the bill is made the unfinished business, and the Senator can take up the bill to which he refers in the morning hour on Monday.

Mr. McKELLAR. It will take but a moment to take it up and pass it now.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will permit this bill to pass. It is unanimously reported.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is unanimously reported. I do not think there is any objection to it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator will allow the District bill to be made the unfinished business, I will then lay it aside.

Mr. McKELLAR. And yield to me? That will be entirely satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is the motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] that H. R. 13277, being the District of Columbia appropriation bill, shall be made the unfinished business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 13277) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I now ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

PAY OF ENLISTED MEN.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13306) to authorize the payment of allotments out of the pay of enlisted men in certain cases in which these payments have been discontinued.

Mr. SMOOT. Is that the bill to which the Senator called my attention last evening?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H. R. 13306. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, line 12, after the word "written," to strike out "rescision" and insert "rescission," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in all of those cases in which an authority of allotment by an enlisted man directing the payment of an indicated amount to a designated beneficiary is on file in the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and payments pursuant to this authority had been made by said bureau prior to July 1, 1918, but which payments were discontinued as of that date, the War and Navy Departments are directed to resume the payments of allotments in these cases, pursuant to the authority on file as aforesaid, pending the receipt of a new authority, or of a written rescission of the old authority from the enlisted man. In those cases in which pending the receipt of the new authority, the military authorities, beginning with July 1, 1918, have reserved from month to month out of the soldier's monthly accruing pay the amount directed to be paid by the original authority of allotment, the War and Navy Departments, upon resuming the payment of allotments in such cases, under the authority of this act, shall pay all arrearages out of these respective reservations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was stricken out.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Out of respect to the memory of George Washington, I move that the Senate adjourn until 11 o'clock on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 24, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 22, 1919.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal and everliving God, our Heavenly Father, we bless Thee for that spirit of patriotism and profound gratitude which moves the people throughout our Nation, yea, throughout the world, to hold in sacred memory the birth of him whom we delight to call the Father of his Country.

We thank Thee for the mentality which enabled him to grasp and solve great problems; for the divination which enabled him to penetrate the future and predict results; for the splendid personality which enabled him to command men and lead them to victory; for the fervor of his religious convictions which enabled him to rely upon Thee for strength and support and which brought him to his knees at Valley Forge—the darkest hour in that struggle for liberty, right, and justice.

Long may his memory live in the hearts of his countrymen and longer yet his deeds inspire men to truer, nobler life.

We are shocked by the news from oversea, that a Member of this House, ever active and conspicuous for his work, has passed to the beyond. Comfort his friends and admirers, his bereaved wife, and those to whom he was near and dear, with the blessed hope of the immortality of the soul through Him who died and rose again. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

An act (S. 5627) to fix the time of holding court in the Amarillo division of the northern district of Texas; and

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 13366) permitting any person who has served in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps in the present war to retain his uniform and personal equipment and to wear the same under certain conditions, had agreed to the conference asked by the House, and had appointed Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. HITCHCOCK, and Mr. WARREN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, had requested a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. HITCHCOCK, and Mr. WARREN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below.

An act (S. 29) to reimburse W. B. Graham, late postmaster at Ely, Nev., for money expended for clerical assistance; to the Committee on Claims.

BRIDGE ACROSS ROANOKE RIVER, N. C.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 15950) granting the consent of Congress to the county of Halifax, in the State of North Carolina, to construct a bridge across the Roanoke River.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bridge bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object to the request—I would like to know from the majority side of the House whether it is the intention to abandon the custom that has been followed for many years in this House of having read, February 22, the anniversary of the birth of George Washington, the Farewell Address of President Washington, first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen.

The SPEAKER. No; the custom is not going to be abandoned, and the Chair has asked the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] to read it, taking it for granted that nobody would object to its being read.

Mr. MANN. I am delighted to know that the Chair has done so.

Mr. KITCHIN. I would say in that connection that heretofore, since I have been in the House, some gentleman has always asked beforehand to read it. I think it ought to be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest that the gentleman now make that request, in order to keep up the form.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] read President Washington's Farewell Address.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that President Washington's Farewell Address be read by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill H. R. 15950?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the county of Halifax, in the State of North Carolina, and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Roanoke River at any point suitable to the interests of navigation between Hills Ferry, near the town of Palmyra, in the county of Halifax, in the State of North Carolina, and the ferry near the town of Halifax, in the county of Halifax, in the State of North Carolina, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] will read Gen. Washington's Farewell Address. [Applause.]

Mr. DIES read Washington's Farewell Address, as follows:

To the people of the United States.

FRIENDS AND FELLOW CITIZENS: The period for a new election of a citizen to administer the executive Government of the United States being not far distant, and the time actually arrived when your thoughts must be employed in designating the person who is to be clothed with that important trust, it appears to me proper, especially as it may conduce to a more distinct expression of the public voice, that I should now apprise you of the resolution I have formed to decline being considered among the number of those out of whom a choice is to be made.

I beg you at the same time to do me the justice to be assured that this resolution has not been taken without a strict regard to all the considerations appertaining to the relation which binds a dutiful citizen to his country; and that, in withdrawing the tender of service which silence in my situation might imply, I am influenced by no diminution of zeal for your future interest, no deficiency of grateful respect for your past kindness, but am supported by a full conviction that the step is compatible with both.

The acceptance of and continuance hitherto in the office to which your suffrages have twice called me have been a uniform sacrifice of inclination to the opinion of duty and to a deference for what appeared to be your desire. I constantly hoped that it would have been much earlier in my power, consistently with motives which I was not at liberty to disregard, to return to that retirement from which I had been reluctantly drawn. The strength of my inclination to do this, previous to the last election, had even led to the preparation of an address to declare it to you; but mature reflection of the then perplexed and critical posture of our affairs with foreign nations and the unanimous advice of persons entitled to my confidence impelled me to abandon the idea.

I rejoice that the state of your concerns, external as well as internal, no longer renders the pursuit of inclination incompatible with the sentiment of duty or propriety, and am persuaded, whatever partiality may be retained for my services, that in the present circumstances of our country you will not disapprove my determination to retire.

The impressions with which I first undertook the arduous trust were explained on the proper occasion. In the discharge of this trust I will only say that I have, with good intentions, contributed toward the organization and administration of the Government the best exertions of which a very fallible judgment was capable. Not unconscious in the outset of the inferiority of my qualifications, experience, in my own eyes, perhaps still more in the eyes of others, has strengthened the motives to diffidence of myself, and every day the increasing weight of years admonishes me more and more that the shade of retirement is as necessary to me as it will be welcome. Satisfied that if any circumstances have given peculiar value to my services they were temporary, I have the consolation to believe that while choice and prudence invite me to quit the political scene, patriotism does not forbid it.

In looking forward to the moment which is to terminate the career of my political life my feelings do not permit me to suspend the deep acknowledgment of that debt of gratitude which I owe to my beloved country for the many honors it has conferred upon me; still more for the steadfast confidence with which it has supported me, and for the opportunities I have thence enjoyed of manifesting my inviolable attachment by services faithful and persevering, though in usefulness unequal to my zeal. If benefits have resulted to our country from these services, let it always be remembered to your praise, and as an instructive example in our annals, that under circumstances in which the passions, agitated in every direction, were liable to mislead amidst appearances sometimes dubious, vicissitudes of fortune often discouraging—in situations in which not unfrequently want of success has countenanced the spirit of criticism—the constancy of your support was the essential prop of the efforts and a guaranty of the plans by which they were effected. Profoundly penetrated with this idea, I shall carry it with me to my grave as a strong incitement to unceasing vows that Heaven may continue to you the choicest tokens of its beneficence—that your union and brotherly affection may be perpetual; that the free Constitution, which is the work of your hands, may be sacredly maintained; that its administration in every department may be stamped with wisdom and virtue; that, in fine, the happiness of the people of these States, under the auspices of liberty, may be made complete by so careful a preservation and so prudent a use of this blessing as will acquire to them the glory of recommending it to the applause, the affection, and adoption of every nation which is yet a stranger to it.

Here, perhaps, I ought to stop. But a solicitude for your welfare, which can not end but with my life, and the apprehension of danger, natural to that solicitude, urge me, on an occasion like the present, to offer to your solemn contemplation, and to recommend to your frequent review, some sentiments which are the result of much reflection, of no inconsiderable observation, and which appear to me all important to the permanency of your felicity as a people. These will be offered to you with the more freedom, as you can only see in them the disinterested warnings of a parting friend, who can possibly have no personal motive to bias his counsel. Nor can I forget, as an encouragement to it, your indulgent reception of my sentiments on a former and not dissimilar occasion.

Interwoven as is the love of liberty with every ligament of your hearts, no recommendation of mine is necessary to fortify or confirm the attachment.

The unity of government which constitutes you one people is also now dear to you. It is justly so, for it is a main pillar in the edifice of your real independence, the support of your tranquillity at home, your peace abroad, of your safety, of your prosperity, of that very liberty which you so highly prize. But as it is easy to foresee that from different causes and from different quarters much pains will be taken, many artifices employed to weaken in your minds the conviction of this truth, as this is the point in your political fortress against which the batteries of internal and external enemies will be most constantly and actively (though often covertly and insidiously) directed, it is of infinite moment that you should properly estimate the immense value of your national union to your collective and individual happiness; that you should cherish a cordial, habitual, and immovable attachment to it, accustoming yourselves to think and speak of it as of the palladium of your political safety and prosperity, watching for its preservation with jealous anxiety, discountenancing whatever may suggest even a suspicion that it can in any event be abandoned, and indignantly frowning upon the first dawning of every attempt to alienate any portion of our country from the rest or to enfeeble the sacred ties which now link together the various parts.

For this you have every inducement of sympathy and interest. Citizens by birth or choice of a common country, that country has a right to concentrate your affections. The name of American, which belongs to you in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of patriotism more than any appellation derived from local discriminations. With slight shades of difference you have the same religion, manners, habits, and political principles. You have, in a common cause, fought and triumphed together; the independence and liberty you possess are the work of joint counsels and joint efforts, of common dangers, sufferings, and successes.

But these considerations, however powerfully they address themselves to your sensibility, are greatly outweighed by those which apply more immediately to your interest. Here every portion of our country finds the most commanding motives for carefully guarding and preserving the union of the whole.

The North, in an unrestrained intercourse with the South, protected by the equal laws of a common government, finds in the productions of the latter great additional resources of maritime and commercial enterprise and precious materials of manufacturing industry. The South in the same intercourse, benefiting by the same agency of the North, sees its agriculture grow and its commerce expand. Turning partly into its own channels the seamen of the North it finds its particular navigation invigorated, and while it contributes in different ways to nourish and increase the general mass of the national navigation it looks forward to the protection of a maritime strength to which itself is unequally adapted. The East in a like intercourse with the West already finds, and in the progressive improvement of interior communications by land and water will more and more find a valuable vent for the commodities which it brings from abroad or manufactures at home. The West derives from the East supplies requisite to its growth and comfort, and what is perhaps of still greater consequence it must of necessity owe the secure enjoyment of indispensable outlets for its own productions to the weight, influence, and the future maritime strength of the Atlantic side of the Union directed by an indissoluble community of interest as one Nation. Any other tenure by which the West can hold this essential advantage, whether derived from its own separate strength or from an apostate and unnatural connection with any foreign power, must be intrinsically precarious.

While then every part of our country thus feels an immediate and particular interest in union, all the parts combined can not fail to find in the united mass of means and efforts greater strength, greater resource, proportionately greater security from external danger a less frequent interruption of their peace by foreign nations, and what is of inestimable value they must derive from union an exemption from those broils and wars between themselves which so frequently afflict neighboring countries not tied together by the same government; which their own rivalship alone would be sufficient to produce, but which opposite foreign alliances, attachments, and intrigues would stimulate and embitter. Hence, likewise, they will avoid the necessity of those overgrown military establishments, which under any form of government are inauspicious to liberty and which are to be regarded as particularly hostile to republican liberty. [Applause.] In this sense it is that your Union ought to be considered as a main prop of your liberty and that the love of the one ought to endear to you the preservation of the other.

These considerations speak a persuasive language to every reflecting and virtuous mind and exhibit the continuance of the Union as a primary object of patriotic desire. Is there a doubt whether a common government can embrace so large a sphere? Let experience solve it. To listen to mere speculation in such a case were criminal. We are authorized to hope that a proper organization of the whole, with the auxiliary agency of governments for the respective subdivisions, will afford a happy issue to the experiment. It is well worth a fair and full experiment. With such powerful and obvious motives to union, affecting all parts of our country, while experience shall not have demonstrated its impracticability, there will always be reason to distrust the patriotism of those who, in any quarter, may endeavor to weaken its hands.

In contemplating the causes which may disturb our Union, it occurs as matter of serious concern that any ground should have been furnished for characterizing parties by geographical discriminations—Northern and Southern, Atlantic and Western—whence designing men may endeavor to excite a belief that there is a real difference of local interests and views. One of the expedients of party to acquire influence within particular districts is to misrepresent the opinions and aims of other districts. You can not shield yourselves too much against the jealousies and heartburnings which spring from these misrepresentations; they tend to render alien to each other those who ought to be bound together by fraternal affection. The inhabitants of our western country have lately had a useful lesson on this head; they have seen, in the negotiation by the Executive and in the unanimous ratification by the Senate of the treaty with Spain, and in the universal satisfaction at the event throughout the United States, a decisive proof how unfounded were the suspicions propagated among them of a policy in the General Government and in the Atlantic States unfriendly to their interests in regard to the Mississippi. They have been witnesses to the formation of two treaties, that with Great Britain and that with Spain, which secure to them everything they could desire, in respect to our foreign relations, toward confirming their prosperity. Will it not be their wisdom to rely for the preservation of these advantages on the Union by which they were procured? Will they not henceforth be deaf to those advisers, if such they are, who would sever them from their brethren and connect them with aliens?

To the efficacy and permanency of your Union a government for the whole is indispensable. No alliances, however strict, between the parts can be an adequate substitute; they must inevitably experience the infractions and interruptions which all alliances in all times have experienced. Sensible of this momentous truth, you have improved upon your first essay by the adoption of a constitution of government better calculated than your former for an intimate union and for the efficacious management of your common concerns. This Government, the offspring of our own choice, uninfluenced and unawed, adopted upon full investigation and mature deliberation, completely free in its principles, in the distribution of its powers, uniting security with energy, and containing within itself a provision for its own amendment, has a just claim to your confidence and your support. Respect for its authority, compliance with its laws, acquiescence in its measures, are duties enjoined by the fundamental maxims of true liberty. The basis of our political systems is the right of the people to make and to alter their constitutions of government. But the constitution which at any time exists, until changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people, is sacredly obligatory upon all. [Applause.] The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government.

All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberations and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle and of fatal tendency. They serve to organize faction, to give it an artificial and extraordinary force, to put in the place of the delegated will of the Nation the will of party, often a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community; and, according to the alternate triumphs of different parties, to make the public administration the mirror of the ill-concerted and incongruous projects of faction, rather than the organ of consistent and wholesome plans digested by common councils and modified by mutual interests.

However combinations or associations of the above description may now and then answer the popular ends, they are likely, in the course of time and things, to become potent engines, by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men will be enabled to subvert the power of the people and to usurp for themselves the reins of government, destroying afterwards the very engines which have lifted them to unjust dominion.

Toward the preservation of your Government and the permanency of your present happy state, it is requisite not only that you steadily discountenance irregular opposition to its acknowledged authority, but also that you resist with care the spirit of innovation upon its principles, however specious the pretext. One method of assault may be to effect, in the form of the Constitution, alterations which will impair the energy of the system, and thus to undermine what can not be directly overthrown. In all the changes to which you may be invited, remember that time and habit are at least as necessary to fix the true character of Governments as of other human institutions; that experience is the surest standard by which to test the real tendency of the existing constitution of a country; that facility in changes, upon the credit of mere hypothesis and opinion, exposes to perpetual change from the endless variety of hypothesis and opinion; and, remember especially, that for the efficient management of your common interests in a country so extensive as ours a Government of as much vigor as is consistent with the perfect security of liberty is indispensable. Liberty itself will find in such a Government, with powers properly distributed and adjusted, its surest guardian. It is, indeed, little else than a name, where the Government is too feeble to withstand the enterprises of faction, to confine each member of the society within the limits prescribed by the laws, and to maintain all in the secure and tranquil enjoyment of the rights of persons and property.

I have already intimated to you the danger of parties in the state, with particular references to the founding them on geographical discrimination. Let me now take a more comprehensive view and warn you in the most solemn manner against the baneful effects of the spirit of party generally.

This spirit unfortunately is inseparable from our nature, having its root in the strongest passions of the human mind. It exists under different shapes in all governments, more or less stifled, controlled, or repressed; but in those of the popular form it is seen in its greatest rankness, and is truly their worst enemy.

The alternate domination of one faction over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge natural to party dissension, which in different ages and countries has perpetrated the most horrid enormities, is itself a frightful despotism. But this leads at length to a more formal and permanent despotism. The disorders and miseries which result gradually incline the minds of men to seek security and repose in the absolute power of an individual, and sooner or later the chief of some prevailing faction, more able or more fortunate than his competitors, turns this disposition to the purpose of his own elevation on the ruins of public liberty.

Without looking forward to an extremity of this kind—which nevertheless ought not to be entirely out of sight—the common and continual mischiefs of the spirit of party are sufficient to make it the interest and duty of a wise people to discourage and restrain it.

It serves always to distract the public councils and enfeeble the public administration. It agitates the community with ill-founded jealousies and false alarms, kindles the animosity of one part against another, foments occasional riot and insurrection. It opens the door to foreign influence and corruption, which finds a facilitated access to the Government itself through the channels of party passions. Thus the policy and the will of one country are subjected to the policy and will of another.

There is an opinion that parties in free countries are useful checks upon the administration of the government and serve to keep alive the spirit of liberty. This within certain limits is probably true; and in governments of a monarchial cast patriotism may look with indulgence, if not with favor, upon the spirit of party. But in those of the popular character, in governments purely elective, it is a spirit not to be encouraged. From their natural tendency it is certain there will always be enough of that spirit for every salutary purpose. And there being constant danger of excess, the effort ought to be, by force of public opinion, to mitigate and assuage it. A fire not to be quenched, it demands a uniform vigilance to prevent it bursting into a flame, lest instead of warming it should consume.

It is important likewise that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration, to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department to encroach upon another. [Applause.] The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. [Applause.] A just estimate of that love of power and proneness to abuse it which predominate in the human heart is sufficient to satisfy us of the truth of this position. The necessity of reciprocal checks in the exercise of political power, by dividing and distributing it into different depositories and constituting each the guardian of the public weal against invasions of the others, has been evinced by experiments ancient and modern, some of them in our country and under our own eyes. To preserve them must be as necessary as to institute them. If, in the opinion of the people, the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the Constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation, for though this in one instance may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. [Applause.] The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.

Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness, these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and to cherish them. A volume could not trace all their connections with private and public felicity. Let it simply be asked, Where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in courts of justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle.

It is substantially true that virtue or morality is a necessary spring of popular government. The rule, indeed, extends with more or less force to every species of free government. Who that is a sincere friend to it can look with indifference upon attempts to shake the foundation of the fabric?

Promote, then, as an object of primary importance institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion it should be enlightened.

As a very important source of strength and security, cherish public credit. One method of preserving it is to use it as sparingly as possible [applause], avoiding occasions of expense by cultivating peace, but remembering also that timely disbursements to prepare for danger frequently prevent much greater disbursements to repel it [applause]; avoiding likewise the accumulation of debt, not only by shunning occasions of expense but by vigorous exertions in time of peace to discharge the debts which unavoidable wars may have occasioned [applause], not ungenerously throwing upon posterity the burden which we ourselves ought to bear. The execution of these maxims belongs to your representatives, but it is necessary that public opinion should cooperate. To facilitate to them the performance of their duty, it is essential that you should practically bear in mind that toward the payment of debts there must be revenue; that to have revenue there must be taxes; that no taxes can be devised which are not more or less inconvenient and unpleasant [applause]; that the intrinsic embarrassment inseparable from the selection of the proper object—which is always a choice of difficulties—ought to be a decisive motive for a candid construction of the conduct of the government in making it and for a spirit of acquiescence in the measures for obtaining revenue which the public exigencies may at any time dictate.

Observe good faith and justice toward all nations; cultivate peace and harmony with all. Religion and morality enjoin this conduct, and can it be that good policy does not equally enjoin it? It will be worthy of a free, enlightened, and, at no distant period, a great nation, to give to mankind the magnanimous and too novel example of a people always guided by an exalted justice and benevolence. [Applause.] Who can doubt but in the course of time and things the fruits of such a plan would richly repay any temporary advantages which might be lost by a steady adherence to it; can it be that Providence has not connected the permanent felicity of a nation with its virtue? The experiment, at least, is recommended by every sentiment which ennobles human nature. Alas! is it rendered impossible by its vices?

In the execution of such a plan nothing is more essential than that permanent, inveterate antipathies against particular nations and passionate attachments for others should be excluded, and that in place of them just and amicable feelings toward all should be cultivated. The nation which indulges toward another an habitual hatred or an habitual fondness is in some degree a slave. It is a slave to its animosity or to its affection, either of which is sufficient to lead it astray from its duty and its interest. [Applause.] Antipathy in one nation against another disposes each more readily to offer insult and injury to lay hold of slight causes of umbrage and to be haughty and intractable when accidental or trifling occasions of dispute occur. Hence, frequent, collisions, obstinate, envenomed, and bloody contests. The nation, prompted by ill will and resentment, sometimes impels to war the government, contrary to the best calculations of policy. The government sometimes participates in the national propensity and adopts through passion what reason would reject; at other times it makes the animosity of the nation subservient to projects of hostility, instigated by pride, ambition, and other sinister and pernicious motives. The peace often, sometimes, perhaps, the liberty, of nations has been the victim.

So, likewise, a passionate attachment of one nation for another produces a variety of evils. Sympathy for the favorite nation, facilitating the illusion of an imaginary common interest, in cases where no real common interest exists, and infusing into one the enmities of the other, betrays the former into a participation in the quarrels and wars of the latter without adequate inducements or justification. It leads also to concessions to the favorite nation of privileges denied to others, which is apt doubly to injure the nation making the concession by unnecessarily parting with what ought to have been retained, and by exciting jealousy, ill will, and a disposition to retaliate in the parties from whom equal privileges are withheld; and it gives to ambitious, corrupted, or deluded citizens who devote themselves to the favorite nation facility to betray or sacrifice the interests of their own country, without odium, sometimes even with popularity; gilding with the appearances of a virtuous sense of obligation a commendable deference for public opinion, or a laudable zeal for public good, the base or foolish compliances of ambition, corruption, or infatuation.

As avenues to foreign influence in innumerable ways, such attachments are particularly alarming to the truly enlightened and independent patriot. How many opportunities do they afford to tamper with domestic factions, to practice the arts of seduction, to mislead public opinion, to influence or awe the public councils! Such an attachment of a small or weak toward a great and powerful nation dooms the former to be the satellite of the latter.

Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence—I conjure you to believe me, fellow citizens—the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake [applause], since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government. But that jealousy, to be useful, must be impartial, else it becomes the instrument of the very influence to be avoided instead of a defense against it. Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike for another cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side, and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other. Real patriots, who may resist the intrigues of the favorite, are liable to become suspected and odious, while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people to surrender their interests.

The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. [Applause.] So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect food faith—here let us stop.

Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none or a very remote relation. Hence, she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves, by artificial ties, in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities. [Applause.]

Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. If we remain one people, under an efficient Government, the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annoyance; when we may take such an attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve upon to be scrupulously respected; when belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not lightly hazard the giving us provocation, when we may choose peace or war, as our interest, guided by justice, shall counsel.

Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? [Applause.] Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? [Applause.] Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice? [Applause.]

It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliance with any portion of the foreign world; so far, I mean, as we are now at liberty to do it; for let me not be understood as capable of patronizing infidelity to existing engagements. I hold the maxim no less applicable to public than private affairs, that honesty is always the best policy. I repeat it, therefore, let those engagements be observed in their genuine sense. But in my opinion it is unnecessary and would be unwise to extend them.

Taking care always to keep ourselves, by suitable establishments, on a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies.

Harmony and a liberal intercourse with all nations are recommended by policy, humanity, and interest. But even our commercial policy should hold an equal and impartial hand, neither seeking nor granting exclusive favors or preferences, consulting the natural course of things, diffusing and diversifying by gentle means the streams of commerce, but forcing nothing; establishing with powers so disposed, in order to give trade a stable course, to define the rights of our merchants and to enable the Government to support them, conventional rules of intercourse, the best that present circumstances and mutual opinion will permit, but temporary, and liable to be from time to time abandoned or varied as experience and circumstances shall dictate; constantly keeping in view that it is folly in one nation to look for disinterested favors from another [applause]; that it must pay with a portion of its independence for whatever it may accept under that character [applause]; that by such acceptance it may place itself in the condition of having given equivalents for nominal favors and yet of being reproached with ingratitude for not giving more. There can be no greater error than to expect or calculate upon real favors from nation to nation. It is an illusion which experience must cure, which a just pride ought to discard.

In offering to you, my countrymen, these counsels of an old and affectionate friend, I dare not hope they will make the strong and lasting impression I could wish; that they will control the usual current of the passions or prevent our Nation from running the course which has hitherto marked the destiny of nations, but if I may even flatter myself that they may be productive of some partial benefit, some occasional good; that they may now and then recur to moderate the fury of party spirit, to warn against the mischiefs of foreign intrigues, to guard against the impostures of pretended patriotism, this hope will be a full recompense for the solicitude for your welfare by which they have been dictated.

How far, in the discharge of my official duties, I have been guided by the principles which have been delineated, the public records and other evidences of my conduct must witness to you and to the world. To myself the assurance of my own conscience is that I have at least believed myself to be guided by them.

In relation to the still subsisting war in Europe, my proclamation of the 22d of April, 1793, is the index to my plan. Sanctioned by your approving voice and by that of your Representatives in both Houses of Congress, the spirit of that measure has continually governed me, uninfluenced by any attempts to deter or divert me from it.

After deliberate examination, with the aid of the best lights I could obtain, I was well satisfied that our country, under all the circumstances of the case, had a right to take, and was bound in duty and interest to take, a neutral position. Having taken it, I determined, as far as should depend upon me to maintain it with moderation, perseverance, and firmness.

The considerations which respect the right to hold this conduct it is not necessary on this occasion to detail. I will only observe that, according to my understanding of the matter, that right, so far from being denied by any of the belligerent powers, has been virtually admitted by all.

The duty of holding a neutral conduct may be inferred, without anything more, from the obligation which justice and humanity impose on every nation, in cases in which it is free to act, to maintain inviolate the relations of peace and amity toward other nations.

The inducements of interest for observing that conduct will best be referred to your own reflections and experience. With me a predominant motive has been to endeavor to gain time to our country to settle and mature its yet recent institutions, and to progress, without interruption, to that degree of strength and consistency which is necessary to give it, humanly speaking, the command of its own fortunes.

Though in reviewing the incidents of my administration I am unconscious of intentional error, I am nevertheless too sensible of my defects not to think it probable that I may have committed many errors. Whatever they may be, I fervently beseech the Almighty to avert or mitigate the evils to which they may tend. I shall also carry with me the hope that my country will never cease to view them with indulgence; and that, after 45 years of my life dedicated to its service, with an upright zeal, the faults of incompetent abilities will be consigned to oblivion, as myself must soon be to the mansions of rest.

Relying on its kindness in this as in other things, and actuated by that fervent love toward it which is so natural to a man who views in it the native soil of himself and his progenitors for several generations, I anticipate with pleasing expectation that retreat in which I promise myself to realize, without alloy, the sweet enjoyment of partaking, in the midst of my fellow citizens, the benign influence of good laws under a free government—the ever favorite object of my heart, and the happy reward, as I trust, of our mutual cares, labors, and dangers.

GEO. WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES, 17th September, 1796.

[Loud applause.]

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 16104.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 16104, the sundry civil bill.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, pending that motion I would like to ask the gentleman from Wyoming whether we can at this time agree on time for general debate.

Mr. MONDELL. I have comparatively few requests for time, I will say to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman agree to a unanimous-consent request that general debate be limited to an hour on each side? I have no requests.

Mr. MONDELL. As I am now advised, I think if the gentleman can extend that to an hour and a quarter on each side we will probably be able to comply with all the requests for time.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] if that means the debate shall be confined to the subject matter of the bill?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. We can not limit that. I ask unanimous consent that the general debate be limited to two hours and one-half, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that general debate on the bill shall not exceed two hours and a half, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] will please take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16104) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, with Mr. GARNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 16104, the sundry civil appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 16104) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, can the gentleman give us any information as to how long the House will remain in session to-day?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. My intention was that I would confer with the minority leader and see if we could not make some agreement later on.

Mr. MANN. Very well. I shall not object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the membership of the House will agree with me that in the history of the House we have seldom had a Member who was possessed of greater ability and greater industry than the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. But there is a limit to the activities of all men, and at this session of Congress the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, burdened as he was with the preparation of what is known as the second deficiency appropriation bill for 1919, the railroad bill, and the general deficiency bill, has, much to the regret of the sundry civil subcommittee, been unable to be present at most of the hearings before that subcommittee, and therefore I have been directed to report to this House the sundry civil bill.

In doing so I intend only to make a short statement as to the general character of the provisions of the bill, and I shall then be glad to answer, in so far as I am able, any questions that may be asked of me.

The estimates as submitted by the departments, as gentlemen will notice by reference to page 1 of the committee report, amount to $1,122,919,735.52. Of that amount $760,574,000 was estimated for the conduct of the Emergency Fleet Corporation and Shipping Board. For all other services there was estimated $362,345,735.52. The appropriations carried in this bill for the Emergency Fleet Corporation amount to $660,903,234 and for all other services of the Government $189,863,000, making a total of $850,000,000, or $272,919,735.52 less than the estimates. This reduction in appropriations is made possible because of the attitude of the committee that, now that the war is over, the Government, in so far as it is possible, should return to its prewar activities. By reference to the report, gentlemen will find on page 5 a statement of the appropriations repealed, and on page 4 a statement is made of the increases and decreases in this bill, which will give ample information as to the cuts that have been made.

I wish first to call the attention of gentlemen to the repeal of appropriations to the Bureau of Mines for the enforcement of the explosive act, amounting to $143,000. That was purely a war emergency appropriation, and now, even though the proclamation of peace is for a time withheld, certainly there is no justification for the continuance of the expenditures under this explosive act.

The repeal of the appropriation of $143,000 means solely that the inspectors of explosives in the various States will have their services dispensed with after the passage of this bill. The bill provides a sufficient amount to pay all salaries up to March 4 and then to furnish an ample amount to pay the obligations of the bureau that have been incurred under the act. From the Capital Issues Committee we repeal $265,000 and from the Committee on Public Information $200,000.

The Committee on Public Information is continuing its activities to a limited extent. When Mr. Creel, who is head of the bureau, left for Europe he wrote a letter to the chairman of the committee in which he expressed the opinion that the services of the committee could be dispensed with on January 1; but they have not discontinued their activities. A service bureau is located in the city of Washington in what was formerly the Pennsylvania Railroad ticket office. It is an expensive building; the rent is $7,500 a year. The Committee on Public Information is also continuing the publication of the Official Bulletin. In addition to the repeal of this appropriation, specific legislation is recommended in the bill providing that on April 1 the service bureau shall be closed and that the Official Bulletin shall be dispensed with.

In passing, I want to say that the expense of printing the Bulletin for the last month was $68,000 and for the previous month $73,000. There is no likelihood that this expense will be greatly decreased. As a matter of fact, the Public Printer has complained about the size of the Bulletin.

The Council of National Defense was established prior to our entrance into the war, and therefore, while a war activity, it has specific duties provided by legislation in the collection of statistics as to the manufactures of the country, a duty which can well be continued, in the opinion of the committee; and therefore we recommend, and this bill carries, an appropriation of $50,000 for the continuance of that work.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. What has the Council of National Defense to do in the future?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. What they want to do is, through what they call a highway department, to advise the people of the country of the wisdom of improving public roads and encourage road development and various other activities along that line, for which they ask an appropriation of $250,000 or $300,000. The precise figures I have not carried in my mind. The opinion of the committee was that the Office of Public Roads now established in the Department of Agriculture could certainly furnish ample information to the States and municipalities as to the wisdom of improving public roads, if they need education along that line, and consequently there is no necessity for the continuance of the Council of National Defense except for such purposes as it was originally intended they should accomplish. The committee believed that the statistics which the council and the Ordnance Department gathered during the war can be kept up to date, and there is no necessity for a larger expenditure than that recommended—$50,000. So, presuming that all of our efforts fail, and that there shall in the future occur a war in which we are engaged, we will have on hand the information which was so sorely needed at the beginning of this war.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Does the Council of National Defense exist as a permanent bureau or as a temporary organization?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It was not one of the temporary war organizations. It was created in the Army act of 1916, prior to our entrance into the war.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. As a permanent bureau?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is my understanding. That is the explanation of the action of the committee with regard to the Council of National Defense.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman was speaking of their gathering statistics with reference to manufactures. Why can not that be done by the Census Bureau, and are they not gathering statistics along the same line? I have understood that the primary purpose of the Council of National Defense was to consider policies with reference to obtaining information, and not the gathering of statistics. It looks to me as though they were running parallel and duplicating the work of the Census Bureau.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will say to the gentleman that the committee inquired as to that very matter, and we ascertained the fact that the Census Bureau does not gather statistics similar to those collected by the council. The Council of National Defense was instructed and directed to gather information as to the possible output of every factory, and its equipment, and the possibility of converting that equipment into other uses, information which the Census Bureau does not gather. It was because of this that in the Army act of 1916 the Congress created the Council of National Defense.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LONDON. The Council of National Defense was to gather information in regard to possible war necessities. The war being now over, what is the necessity of maintaining a separate bureau to do such work, which is within the province really of the War Department or of the State Department or of other bureaus? It has a very pretentious name. That is also a serious objection—the Council of National Defense.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The duties of the Council of National Defense were to coordinate the activities of the various bureaus and to investigate economic and industrial activities, and its functions were intended to be exercised in time of peace and not alone in time of war. It was established by Congress in 1916 for the purpose of securing information which would be of use in time of war.

Mr. LONDON. What is the necessity of retaining the organization now?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. On the theory that if wars have not been permanently and definitely abolished from the earth, this organization should in time of peace function as Congress intended it to.

Mr. ESCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. ESCH. I understand that the Official Bulletin is to be discontinued on April 1.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. ESCH. I understand that they abolished their free list some time ago and that they make a charge for this publication. Does the gentleman know how much revenue they are deriving from subscribers?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I do not recall the exact amount of the revenue, though the hearings will disclose it. I think the information of the committee was that the free list was not dispensed with, but that there were 80,000 free copies and about 15,000 that were paid for. At least that was the condition about a month or six weeks ago. The principal argument made in behalf of its continuance, I will say in justice to the gentlemen who favor its continuance and who have appealed for this appropriation, was that it was now publishing the casualty lists and that it should be continued for that purpose. The opinion of the committee, however, was that if that was sufficient ground for its continuance, so long as our boys are on foreign soil there will be some deaths in hospitals, and there never will be a time when it can be discontinued; and I am frank to say that the committee had this opinion, that if the Government is to resume its peace status, the only way to do it is to resume right now; that if we continue, there will always be found some excuse for carrying on as permanent activities of the Government those things which were established under the press of necessity during war times, which, in fact, were urged upon the Congress as necessary for the successful prosecution of the war.

Mr. ESCH. I agree with the gentleman; but I did not know but that the publication of the Official Bulletin might be justified if from the subscriptions they could meet the expenses.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The suggestion has been made that there is a proposition to carry it on under private control and to continue the publication of a bulletin of that character. The fact is that now it is nearly all free list, whereas if under private control that condition would not prevail.

Mr. LONDON. Does not the gentleman believe, as a matter of policy, that it is desirable to have an official bulletin in which a résumé of the activities of the various departments shall be given to the people?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. So far as I am concerned, if it were possible to publish a bulletin which gave to the people what they wanted to know, and not what the department wanted the people to know, I believe it could perform a good service. But the Congress can provide for that, if they think it is wise, and I believe it is unwise to continue this publication at the present time, at an expense for printing alone of $70,000 a month.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The primary purpose of the Official Bulletin was propaganda. Now, does not the gentleman think it is very dangerous to allow any departmental officer or any Government officer to publish at the public expense, for circulation among the people, a propaganda sheet?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will say to the gentleman that the committee has expressed its opinion in the recommendation contained in the bill, that it be discontinued on April 1, and I gather from the gentleman's question that he approves of that action, and I am glad of it.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I approve of that most heartily, and I think we ought to do away with this Council of National Defense, too. I am tired of that.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The lump sum appropriation for the Federal Trade Commission was given last year because of the inability of the commission even to guess intelligently as to what its expenses would be or what would be the cost of the investigations which the commission had been directed to make for the War and Navy Departments. I must say that the Federal Trade Commission has made a report to the Congress which is a full and complete one, which shows that it has had due regard to the necessities of the Treasury, that it has safeguarded its funds, and it has turned back of the lump sum given it $300,000.

As to the Food Administration we repealed $3,500,000, because we believe that there is no further reason for their activities after July 1. I will say that all of the activities of the Food Administration were limited to the time of the issuance of the President's proclamation of peace; but as there is no reason for the existence of the Food Administration the committee have taken the position that this bureau should cease its activities on July 1. If thereafter there are any outstanding bills the comptroller and auditor can take care of them, and the President, by this bill, is directed to authorize such departments as he deems wise to take charge of the files of the war bureaus which are discontinued by this bill.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. It is contemplated, then, by the committee that the administration of the act that we passed this morning, the wheat-control act, shall be handled by a new organization or a different organization from the Food Administration?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. My understanding of that bill was that it was to be administered through the Secretary of Agriculture. Certainly there is carried in this bill nothing that has anything to do with it. By the terms of this bill the Food Administration will cease to exist on July 1 unless there is some money provided.

With regard to the War Industries Board we provide that on and after July 1 they shall have no funds to continue business.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am informed that no appropriation is carried for the Employment Bureau in the Department of Labor.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I was coming to that, but I will get to it now, inasmuch as the gentleman has asked the question. The gentleman will notice in the report under war services omitted that among them is the Employment Service in the Department of Labor. During the war the Appropriations Committee quite frequently brought into the House appropriation bills with legislation which was frankly presented to the House as being new legislation and having no place on appropriation bills, with the statement to the House that it was done solely because it was necessary to prosecute the war, and under that statement the House very generally refrained from making any point of order on the legislation.

Last year when the sundry civil bill was brought up the head of the Labor Department presented to the sundry civil subcommittee a proposition to establish in the bureau what might be called a reorganization, and it was presented in a most attractive and forcible way by Mr. Marshall, of the Chicago University, and Mr. Hale. It was presented solely as a war emergency, and the language of the appropriation so indicates. Under that language appropriations were made for a number of services in the bureau, and I think the appropriation made was ample as to all of them; but the Employment Bureau has incurred a deficiency, and there is now pending, as the hearings will disclose, an estimate for a deficiency. The House originally provided for this service about $1,500,000. It went to the Senate and they increased it to about $7,000,000. In conference it was cut to $5,500,000. The deficiency estimate now is for $2,900,000. While the subcommittee had to inquire how the funds appropriated had been spent, it, of course, did not function on the deficiency. The deficiency committee is to-day in session, and it happens that this very bureau of the Labor Department is before the committee presenting an estimate for a deficiency for the sum mentioned.

While I am in no way authorized to make any statement as to the action of the deficiency committee, my opinion, as the gentleman has asked it, is that the deficiency committee is certain to recommend that the deficiency be granted, if not for the total amount certainly for a sufficient amount to carry the bureau to the end of the fiscal year, because it was the intention of Congress that it should be continued for this fiscal year. I shall certainly advocate such a deficiency appropriation.

Now, if the gentleman will permit me, as to the continuance of that bureau for the next fiscal year, the situation is this: The Labor Department presented a request that Congress establish a permanent bureau of the Government for the purpose of carrying on this work. The language of the present act was for the prosecution of the war, and therefore it is necessary that Congress should enact legislation for the permanent existence of this and other bureaus if they are to be continued. The Appropriations Committee is not a legislative committee. Time after time the Members of the House have criticized the Appropriations Committee for usurping the jurisdiction of other committees of the House, and wisely so.

The only way in which we can legislate in an orderly manner is for legislative committees having jurisdiction of certain subjects to take up these matters, consider them, and if they believe them wise, recommend legislation. If they believe a new bureau should be created, the proper legislative committee should prescribe its duties and also its organization, instead of having the departments asking the Committee on Appropriations to appropriate lump sums, without any restriction as to activities or limit as to expenditures. Of course, legislation of that kind is always subject to a point of order, and regardless of what was done during the war the Appropriations Committee is of the opinion that it should not now bring into the House propositions clearly subject to a point of order, thus usurping functions of other legislative committees of the House. Therefore, as to all of these bureaus not established by law they have no appropriations in this bill for the next fiscal year. The Committee on Appropriations expresses no opinion as to the wisdom or the merits of the proposition, but it does believe that the legislative committees that have control of these matters, if they desire to establish this bureau or any other bureau, should establish it in an orderly way, just as was established the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the Bureau of Immigration, the Children's Bureau, and every other bureau of the Government, and that the Committee on Appropriations should not bring in legislation that is subject to a point of order.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Of course, the gentleman will not leave an impression that there was not a difference of opinion in the committee as to whether this appropriation for the Employment Service is subject to a point of order. Some of us believe that it is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Oh, I am only too glad to do that. I am expressing the views of the majority of the committee.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. It is my impression that the organic law which created the Labor Department provides that one of the functions of the Labor Department shall be to increase opportunities for employment. Therefore it would be in order to legislate for the creation of a national network of employment bureaus, so as to increase the opportunities for employment.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I would say to the gentleman that no such duty is prescribed in the organic act. There is such a statement in the declaration of purposes, but discussion of that question would involve a discussion that necessarily must be had at the proper time when the bill is under consideration under the five-minute rule, and while I differ with the gentleman, I know that he is so well informed about it that he will make an interesting argument at the proper time.

Mr. LONDON. I thank the gentleman, if it will only do any good.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question as to the substantive side of the matter?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman referred to the fact that this appropriation was made in prior legislation reported by his committee on the basis of its being a strictly emergency matter.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes; and clearly so stated.

Mr. ROGERS. There are different kinds of emergencies arising out of the war. The munitions emergency would end on November 11; but does not the gentleman think that this is the kind of emergency legislation that does not reach its full height until after the war is over, until the great problems of demobilizing these men and getting them back into their original peaceful vocations have been solved? In other words, is not the emergency right upon us for the next six months or a year?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will say that, as a rule, no proposition is presented unless the proposer of the proposition believes there is an emergency to warrant it, but I said it was established as a war emergency, and the bill so provided. The Committee on Appropriations has not attempted to respond to every emergency, but during the war it did respond, and no gentleman made the point of order, and now that the war is over the committee does not feel that it should violate the rules and bring in legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. ROGERS. The demobilizing emergency is a war emergency.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman would be one of the first to advise the committee that the war is over and the Appropriations Committee should no longer bring in legislation creating new bureaus in violation of the rules. Personally I would favor legislation providing assistance of this kind for soldiers and sailors during the period of demobilization, but such legislation should be reported from the Committee on Labor, as provided by the rules.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman again yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I just want to say something to my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] to the effect that the minority report covers just the ground he takes, and the minority Members signing that report agree with my distinguished colleague from Massachusetts that the real emergency now exists.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Let me say this in passing, that there are two distinct propositions. The sentiment expressed by my good friend from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] involves one proposition, but it is entirely different from the sentiment expressed by his colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS]. When demobilization is over the emergency to which reference is made would no longer exist and this bureau would cease to exist. The proposal of the department before the committee is to make a permanent bureau of the Government, with an appropriation of $10,000,000, and with the establishment of an increased number of offices, which will mean a larger appropriation next year, in the opinion of the director, who made a very clear statement along that line, and he always presents a matter clearly and frankly. He presents this proposal not for the demobilization period but as a permanent bureau, and the Committee on Labor should function on it.

Mr. GALLIVAN. But the request for this appropriation is only for the next fiscal year, and there is nothing said about a permanent appropriation.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Oh, yes. The gentleman is mistaken; the proposition presented by the department is for a change of language, and the desire, frankly stated, is to make this a permanent bureau.

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. LARSEN. I would like to inquire whether the committee gave any consideration, under the head of "Public service," to the question of Spanish influenza?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Does the gentleman mean the Public Health Service?

Mr. LARSEN. Yes. I notice that under this head you have appropriated $7,206,000, and I notice the following paragraph, occurring on page 32 of the bill:

> Prevention of epidemics: To enable the President, in case only of threatened or actual epidemic of cholera, typhus fever, yellow fever, smallpox, bubonic plague, Chinese plague or black death, trachoma, or infantile paralysis, to aid State and local boards, or otherwise, in his discretion, in preventing and suppressing the spread of the same, and in such emergency in the execution of any quarantine laws which may be then in force, $400,000.

You make an appropriation of $400,000 to be used in the execution of any quarantine laws which may then be in force.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. In the deficiency bill reported in October an appropriation of $1,000,000 was granted for that purpose. There is no estimate from the department for any additional appropriation for this purpose.

Mr. LARSEN. If the gentleman will permit, I have that resolution before me. If I understand, it does not meet the requirements concerning which I make the inquiry.

The matter the gentleman speaks of is the joint resolution passed October 1, 1918, which made an appropriation of $1,000,000 to enable the Public Health Service to combat and suppress Spanish influenza and other communicable diseases by aiding State and local boards of health or otherwise. On February 18 I introduced a bill, which is now pending before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, providing for an appropriation of $500,000, not for that purpose alone but also for the purpose of conducting investigations and experimental work in the United States and its territory with a view of ascertaining the causes of, a cure for, and the mode of transmission of such diseases. I am advised by the Chief of the Bureau of Public Health Service that Spanish influenza has existed in the United States since 1916 and that beyond any doubt we will have it for three or four years longer. He also informed me that European nations contended that we did not get it from Europe, but that we carried it there in a virulent form. Be that as it may, it occurs to me the committee might with considerable propriety consider the advisability of changing the phraseology of the bill, on page 32, so as to include Spanish influenza and permit investigational work along that line.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will say to the gentleman I can answer some of the questions he has asked, but——

Mr. LARSEN. In this connection may I also suggest to the gentleman that I am advised by the Chief of the Bureau of Public Health Service that the appropriation of $1,000,000 which was made last year has been nearly expended, and that there is not in the hands of the bureau at this time a sufficient amount to carry on that branch of the work during the present fiscal year. In view of that, does not the gentleman think it would be a good idea to amend and make this $400,000 available for that purpose also?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman, as a Member of the House, doubtless voted to establish a hygienic laboratory for the purpose of making experimental investigations of all kinds, and this bill carries an appropriation for that purpose. If the gentleman will turn to the next page of the bill he will find that under the head of "Diseases of man" there is an appropriation given, and if there is anything broader than the term "Diseases of man" it is difficult to conceive of it. There is nothing to prevent them from using any of that appropriation for the treatment of Spanish influenza, if they see fit to do so. I can state to the gentleman the Public Health Service is not a bashful service. They did not ask for this particularly, made no estimate, and did not ask any appropriation for it; but under the head of "Diseases of man," if the gentleman can convince them that is a disease of man that is worthy of their attention, they have full power to spend every cent of that appropriation for the investigation of Spanish influenza.

Mr. LARSEN. Has the gentleman paid careful attention to the verbiage of this particular portion of the bill?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Is the gentleman talking of the epidemic fund, where there is a restriction?

Mr. LARSEN. No; I am talking about communicable and other diseases. The paragraph to which the gentleman refers, while including diseases of man, also includes sewage, pollution of streams, and so forth, and is only for $300,000. Again, it is for field investigation, not laboratory work.

Mr BYRNES of South Carolina. I will tell the gentleman what the Public Health Service want to do under that paragraph. They want to investigate tuberculosis, infant mortality, and the care of children; they want to investigate what weight a woman can safely lift; they want to investigate spinal meningitis and every other disease that was ever known; and if the gentleman would sit down and read the hearings he can read for five hours this afternoon and find out the Public Health Service under this paragraph has authority to investigate everything, and he can find out whether or not they are discriminating against the "flu."

Mr. LARSEN. The Public Health Service may have that idea, but they never suggested it to me, because I went there to seek information myself. At the present time Spanish influenza exists throughout the United States. It is the most dreadful thing that ever existed in the history of the world since the appearance of the bubonic plague.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will.

Mr. FOSTER. This paragraph to which the gentleman from Georgia refers is an emergency fund.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I have explained that, and it is clearly restricted to epidemics subject to quarantine by the President. It is current law, and it has been carried for years; and what the gentleman speaks of does not refer to this at all, and it is another section, and I would be glad after a while to tell the gentleman about it.

I want to make a few references before concluding my remarks about the appropriation for the Shipping Board of $660,000,000. Regardless of the views of Members of Congress about the wisdom of the Government in embarking in the construction of ships, as in the case of railroads and many other things, we did embark in the building of ships. We did it at a time when we thought it was necessary to win the war, and from every housetop we were told that the only way we could win the war was to build a bridge of ships across the Atlantic Ocean. We went ahead, and we authorized the expenditure of about $4,000,000,000. The situation with regard to it is simply this: In the last Congress, because of an emergency, when Germany had taken Mount Kimmel and was apparently going to take the channel ports and Paris, and the world was afraid of German success, the Shipping Board came before us and we increased the authorizations and appropriations to such an extent that we had ships building in this country from one end to the other, and we put more men into shipbuilding than we ever dreamed we could do in so short a time. As a result 578 ships have been delivered and we have put millions of dollars in yards in this country. Unfortunately, forced as we were to build ships to take care of an emergency, we built them without the refinements that would make them possible competitors under peace conditions with ships that are constructed with a view to engage in a certain line of trade.

As a result we are bound to suffer loss. We know it. In the yards, if we can salvage one-third we will be doing good. Wooden ships we know that we can not use to any great extent unless we find a new trade. They tell me they can be used in the Pacific and Hawaiian trade successfully, and are now being so used. But, regardless of the loss, Congress is faced with this problem, that we are obligated to finish so many of these ships as in the opinion of the Shipping Board should be finished if the Government is to avoid losing millions of dollars. There comes a time in the construction of a ship when it is in the interest of economy to finish it and sell it instead of to scrap it and stand the loss. And that time is not determined by the percentage of construction of the hull of the ship, but is determined in the greater majority of cases by the percentage of construction of the machinery or of the plates that are being fabricated before they are assembled; and the best thought of the Shipping Board has been applied to that problem. They have canceled more than 500 contracts. They are still continuing to cancel them, but they believe that they will have to finish so large a number of ships that they will need the large appropriation of $660,000,000.

They are going out of the business of housing, and I am glad to say that the gentleman who is in charge of the housing proposition of the shipping corporation has shown considerable executive ability in his handling of the proposition since the signing of the armstice.

This bill carries a repeal of $8,000,000 from the transportation fund and a repeal of more than $5,000,000 from the housing fund. I must repeat that the Appropriations Committee has nothing to do with the shipping policy of the Government, so far as the merchant marine is concerned. That is a policy for the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. LONDON. What is that policy?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will say to the gentleman that, so far as I have been able a learn, there is no policy; but I will say, too, that I believe the solemn duty of the Congress is to shape some policy, because we are on our way and we do not know where we are going. We know, and the gentlemen in charge of the construction of ships know, it is a wise policy now to change from the construction of ships as originally intended, which had in mind the development of boats to perform certain jobs. Those ships, mostly tramps, can not successfully engage in competition in world trade with ships built in foreign yards, which are built for certain purposes and with certain refinements. There is an opening for ships now that will go to South America with coal and bring back manganese, but we have no ships specially suited to the purpose.

The Shipping Board can not sell its ships. It would love to sell some of them in order to engage in the construction of different types of ships which could go into certain channels of trade in which they are needed and would give us a well-balanced fleet of ships. But no business man is going to buy a ship, because he does not know whether he is going to be in competition with the Government-owned Emergency Fleet Corporation or what the situation is going to be. The uncertainty of the situation makes him stay out of the business, and until Congress itself develops some policy we can only recommend that this amount be appropriated and that the ships we can not avoid finishing be finished and be turned over to the Government. And hence the large appropriation carried in this bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. As a member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, I think it fair to say that a policy has to be formulated, and it is a very difficult problem, in view of our international situation, to do that with any degree of intelligence under the present conditions.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will say to the gentleman that I recognize the problem. There is no greater one. We know that there are 10,000,000 dead-weight tons less in existence to-day than in 1914. We have 10,000,000 tons in process of construction in this country and about 5,000,000 abroad. That apparently would make a surplus, but, as a matter of fact, when we make an allowance for the natural increase in trade there is no surplus and will be none in 1921. If we continue the construction of these ships it does not necessarily mean that the Government is going to stand to lose by their operation, because the testimony here will show that while there is an apparent loss in the operation of ships, as a matter of fact it is due to the extraordinarily large percentage that is charged up to depreciation and amortization.

So far as our construction is concerned we may as well face the facts. Take our wooden ships, for instance. To-day we are able to charter them at high rates, but just as soon as we return to normal conditions, in 10 or 12 months, and the rates are reduced the wood ships will be too expensive to operate when steel ships can be used. Consequently the only wise thing to do is to sell some of the many wooden ships we have built, and, in the opinion of the Director of the Fleet Corporation, it would be wise to mark them down as much as $100,000 below cost in order to sell them. It is wiser to do this than to suffer total loss.

Then take our yards. The Hog Island yard can not be converted into a profitable shipyard. The Hog Island shipyard was constructed, as was the Ford automobile plant, to turn out one type of ship. It is an assembling plant. It purchases everything finished before it is placed in the ship. It would always be dependent upon outside shipyards. It has no shops for fabricating, and in ordinary times, when domestic and commercial business is good, the outside shops can not be depended upon. Just as the Ford shop can turn out but one automobile, the Hog Island yard can turn out but one type of ship. In the shipping business a yard must be able to build a ship that will suit a particular trade. To be successful, in the opinion of the Director of the Fleet Corporation, it will have to be reduced from a 50-way yard to a 10-way yard, and as the side tracks have been placed for a larger yard, we must make up our minds to stand a great loss before we can expect it to turn out ships at a price that will enable them to compete.

A reading of the testimony taken before the committee will convince Members of the necessity of the Government at the earliest possible moment determining its policy with regard to the merchant marine, and in the meantime it requires but little thought to reach the conclusion that it is our duty to make this appropriation in order that we may complete those ships now under construction and which it is more economical to complete than to scrap.

Now, unless some gentleman wishes to ask me a question about the bill I shall conclude my remarks and reserve the balance of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, after a committee has spent three months, most of the time all day, frequently evenings, and often Sundays, disregarding union rules as to hours of labor and taking 2,500 pages of testimony, and finally reaching a conclusion on a bill involving an estimated expenditure of $1,250,000,000 reduced to $850,000,000, it is very pleasing and satisfactory to the committee when it presents its finished product to the House to be greeted by so large and enthusiastic an audience. [Applause.]

The sundry civil bill is the one appropriation bill under the flag that has in it not only a good deal of sentiment, but a considerable amount of romance, for it touches every quarter of the globe where Uncle Sam has placed his footsteps, where the flag has been planted, where Federal activities are carried on. The Virgin Islands and Panama, the Philippines, Hawaii, and Alaska, and all the regions in between have items in this bill. The formulation of a bill of this character necessarily involves a great deal of labor, much of it trying, dull, and drab in character, but much of it highly interesting and appealing, for there is human interest in every item in this bill.

There is this further fact which differentiates the sundry civil bill from other appropriation bills. While the committee in reporting it must always bear in mind that it is an appropriating and not a legislative committee, and must therefore, if it is to protect the House and observe the obligations of the members of the committee under their oath and the rules, bring in only items that are provided for or justified by legislation, still within those limits there is a certain broad discretion, and the committee by its recommendations within legislative limits may very largely influence the policy of the Government by recommending an increase or reduction of appropriations for activities authorized by law. There is therefore a great responsibility upon the committee at all times.

There was an especial and peculiar responsibility upon the committee at this time, for we have for the last two years been appropriating under conditions of war. Speaking now of the activities provided by law and not of those which have been carried as war emergencies, the conditions of war have tremendously affected these appropriations, in some instances necessitating an increase and in other instances justifying a decrease of the appropriations, as there was an increase or a decrease of the particular activity during the period of the war.

Now, in regard to these various activities it became the duty of the committee in reporting this bill to determine what the policy should be with regard to those activities. Where they have been increased as purely war activities, the duty of the committee, we thought, was to bring those appropriations, as far as we could in reason and with propriety, back to, or somewhere near, the prewar basis. As regards those activities that had been neglected or curtailed during the period of war, it seemed the duty of the committee to consider them with a view of restoring, if conditions justified, the agencies and activities to a prewar basis. That was the view of the subcommittee in the preparatiton of the bill and the view of the committee in reporting it.

Now, there was another unusual situation presented to the committee, the most trying presented in the consideration of the bill. At the beginning of the war we established certain war emergency activities, activities undertaken by reason of war, to take care of conditions produced by war, activities urged solely because of the war, provided for as war emergency measures, so labeled, and so held and considered. They were subject to a point of order when presented, but they were adopted, as was much legislation and as were numerous appropriations, during the period of war because of war necessity. When we came to consider the items that go to make up this bill, which does not go into effect until the 1st of next July, beyond the probable date of the signing of the treaty of peace, we were met with demands not only to continue a number of these activities but to enlarge them beyond their present plan and scope. In this situation it became our duty to examine each and all of them with a view of determining what our authority was under the law and our obligation under the rules. The committee came to the conclusion that I think any like number of Members of the House would come to placed in a like position of responsibility. We could not accept or take upon ourselves the responsibility of presenting to the House a long list of proposed expenditures, running into the millions, proposing and contemplating in time of peace the continuation of activities begun to meet war conditions—we could not accept the responsibility of presenting them to the House without their having been passed upon by some legislative committee of the House. To have done so would have violated every rule that ought to guide and that does guide the Committee on Appropriations. They would all have been subject to the point of order that they were not authorized by law, and no doubt the point would have been made.

That necessitated the reporting of the bill without various items of appropriation carried in the current bill, as follows: The national security and defense fund, the appropriation for the National Capital Issues Committee, the appropriation for the Committee on Public Information, the appropriation for the Food Administration, the appropriation for the Fuel Administration, the appropriation for the War Industries Board, the appropriation for the War Trade Board, and appropriations for various activities of the Department of Labor.

Now, if the House believes that any or all of these funds and activities should be continued, it is for the House to say and determine in some way provided for by the votes. Seventy-six million dollars was involved in appropriations for those activities in the current sundry civil bill, but the estimates for a number of the same activities as presented for the next fiscal year amounted to very much more than the amount carried in current law.

The question was, Was this committee justified in presenting to the House a large number of items, every one of them subject to a point of order, providing for the continuation and enlargement in time of peace of activities undertaken as war activities, activities which the legislative committees of this House had never sanctioned? Of course, we were not justified in doing that, and having established that as the proper rule of conduct, we were compelled to adhere to it throughout the bill. We followed it, with just one exception; and there is generally some one exception that proves the rule.

Among the activities provided for under the Bureau of Labor was an activity for which an appropriation of $40,000 was made under the title of "Woman in industry." It virtually established for the time being a woman's bureau in the Department of Labor; and I want to say with regard to that bureau and the work it did that it was a bright and shining example of how good work can be done in a helpful field. That work was carried on intelligently, faithfully, energetically, and, in my opinion, it accomplished much good. But the committee would not have been justified in excepting that particular activity from all the other activities unless there had been surrounding it some peculiar condition which differentiated it from all others; for I want to make it very clear that, so far as the committee is concerned, in not appropriating for these various activities we are expressing no opinion with regard to them.

That is a matter for the House to determine. We did not provide for them, for the reason that we had no authority to provide for their continuation in the next fiscal year. But there was this peculiar condition with regard to the activities of the woman's bureau, or the bureau having to do with woman in industry, that while there are in the Department of Labor bureaus that can in a way and to a certain extent carry on practically all of the activities which have been carried on in a larger way by the various bureaus temporarily provided for as war emergencies, there is no bureau of the Department of Labor that is so organized that it can in a thorough and effective and satisfactory way carry on this particular work, and that fact differentiates this work in a way from the work of the other bureaus. Furthermore, there is a condition affecting women in industry that is rather more acute now than it was during the period of the war. Then the women were sought for in industrial activities. Now there are said to be some men so inconsiderate of the superior claims of the so-called weaker sex as to insist that they, the men, get back the jobs they abandoned and which women took. To a very considerable extent there must be a diminution of the activity of women in certain industries. There must be a readjustment, and there is great need for intelligent work along that line now, as there will be in the future; and it is my opinion that this work is organized in a way to justify us in believing that intelligent and efficient work will be done.

It is by reason of these facts, differentiating this activity from all of the others, that we felt justified in presenting this item to the House—not in the sum asked for, $150,000, but in the sum of $40,000, which is the present appropriation.

We present it to the House for its consideration. It is subject to a point of order. It was the one item in which we departed from the general rule that we felt must guide us in the making up of our bill. The size of the appropriation is a matter for the House to decide. There is some question as to whether even this very important and essential work should be greatly expanded at this time. Of course there is no limit to the possible expansion of work of this kind. By going into the field and establishing local branches you could build up a very great bureau, employing a very great number of people and costing a great deal of money. Our committee did not feel warranted in recommending that extension. We did believe we were justified in providing for the bureau as now organized, which is largely an investigating, advising, and coordinating bureau, providing for cooperation between the various agencies of the Government and the various agencies of the States relative to the work of women.

Mr. Chairman, of this bill, carrying approximately $850,000,000, $660,000,000 is to carry on our shipping program and only $190,000,000 to provide for the usual activities of the Government carried on under items provided for in the sundry civil bill. This $660,000,000, when appropriated for the Shipping Board, will bring the total appropriations for the Shipping Board and Emergency Fleet Corporation to $3,507,604,254.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. Has the gentleman any figures to show what part of that $3,500,000,000 is now an asset of the United States Government?

Mr. MONDELL. I was going to express some opinion relative to that matter when the gentleman interrupted me. The appropriations up to this time, including the sums in this bill, are as follows:

Emergency shipping fund.

	Authorized.	Heretofore appropriated.	Appropriated in this bill.	Total appropriations, including those heretofore appropriated and in this bill.	Remaining to be appropriated.
Construction of ships, etc	$2,884,000,000	$1,938,451,000	$549,653,254	$2,488,104,254	$395,895,746

[2] $8,787,172.93 of the transportation appropriation repealed by this bill.

The present program is for 2,532 ships, constructed or to be constructed by the Emergency Fleet Corporation, with a total tonnage of 14,578,111 gross tons, of which 578, with a gross tonnage of 3,313,386, have been delivered, and 391 requisitioned ships, of a dead-weight tonnage of 2,725,441, of which 298, with a dead-weight tonnage of 1,931,061, have been delivered. The appropriations now made will not, however, fully pay for this program.

The gentleman asks me what, in my opinion, we will have after the program is finished—what we could cash in. My opinion is that the loss from our shipping investment will be somewhere about 50 per cent, somewhere between $1,500,000,000 and $2,000,000,000. I hope it may be less. I trust it will not be more.

In the first place, we must strike from all of our shipping practically 35 per cent in order to get down to a cost under which we can operate even at this time, and then as ocean freights are lowered and readjusted to peace conditions we will probably have to strike off another 15 per cent to get down to the peace value of some of the ships, and the percentage of loss may be even greater than that on some of the wooden ships.

Then we come to the question of fabricating yards. Mr. Piez, of the Shipping Board, says that our $65,000,000 Hog Island yard has no future, and no one is in a better position to judge of that than Mr. Piez. I do not know just how much the scrap that will remain at Hog Island after it is all over will bring. It may bring 25 per cent of the $65,000,000 that it will have cost. I shall be surprised if it can be cashed in for more than 25 per cent of the cost, and probably it will not bring that much. The loss on yards and yard extension will be heavy, as will be the loss on housing, on dry docks, and other facilities.

Then we are spending a very large sum of money training our men for the merchant ships—approximately $10,000,000 a year. Of course this will not be a loss if we can operate the ships at a profit, and we have been operating some of the ships at a fair profit up to this time, and there may be reasonable ground for hope that we may continue to operate some of them at a profit, at least for some little time to come. But we might just as well make up our minds now that the American people will pocket a loss of at least $1,500,000,000 or $1,750,000,000 in this venture on the building, requisitioning, and operating of ships. I do not mean to say that we were at fault in undertaking the plan. There was much to commend it at the time. There have been great difficulties to meet, but there has been a very great amount of gross mismanagement. Fortunately things are running better now, but nothing that can be done now can atone for the mistakes of the past.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman has answered my question very fully and very satisfactorily, and I should like to ask him this question: Under that answer, then, we would be led to believe that out of this $600,000,000 that we are now appropriating we are going to get 50 per cent value; that is, that we will have a 50 per cent asset when we get through?

Mr. MONDELL. The situation with regard to the future is this: The Shipping Board are completing where, in their opinion, the least loss will result from completing and disposing of the vessels.

Whenever, in their opinion, the loss which will result from the cancellation of the contract will be less than it would be by completing the ship, then the contract is canceled. That is the policy they are following. They are not carrying out all contracts on the theory that there is an obligation that must be met; they are canceling or not, depending on which policy will, in their opinion, result in the least loss.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman will see what I am trying to bring out, and that is that the whole $600,000,000 will not be lost.

Mr. MONDELL. No; the whole $600,000,000 will not be a loss. As a matter of fact, if we did not appropriate this sum the loss would probably be much more than $600,000,000. In other words, we must appropriate the money, notwithstanding the unfortunate conditions. To complete the ships we are building now will not cost as much as ships were costing some time ago, because there is no overtime or Sunday work, with increased pay and tremendously increased expense. So we are building the ships cheaper than when we were going on under whip and spur of war conditions.

Mr. SNYDER. I would like to ask the gentleman another question. The chairman of the committee in his statement said that many of the ships we were now building would not be suitable for trade after we get back to the ordinary economic trade period. This money we are now appropriating is for the continuance of that policy—that is, only building ships for the merchant trade and not constructing ships for use under the ordinary, economic period which we hope will come soon. I judge that from what the gentleman from South Carolina said in his remarks.

Mr. MONDELL. Manifestly we could not change the type of ships we are constructing; if we did, our loss would be greatly increased. It is true a fabricated ship is not as valuable a ship after it is built as a ship constructed along other lines. But the material is on hand for fabricated ships whether or not the ships are just what they should be. In order to enable us to best meet trade conditions, we must build the ships along the lines laid down, or take a greater loss. The ships we are building are good merchantmen. By reason of the engines we put into them, by reason of their heavier weight compared with their carrying capacity as compared with a more perfect type of cargo carrier, they are not an ideal ship; but they are the only ship we can build along the lines laid down and with the material on hand.

Mr. SNYDER. If the gentleman will permit. I can not see much difference in the final result. If you continue building more worthless ships, when you get through are you not in a worse condition than if you stopped now? Your loss will be the same in the end.

Mr. MONDELL. It is not true that we are building worthless ships.

Mr. SNYDER. I think it is said that some of the wooden ships are worthless; some tipped over before they got the engines into them.

Mr. MONDELL. I am not posing as a defender of the Shipping Board, but I do believe that the gentleman has been misinformed, if anyone has told him that any ships we have built were not seaworthy. Every one of them have received an A1 register. They may not be ideal ships, but they are all seaworthy, and all good, stanch ships. There is no question about that. Some weigh too much for their carrying capacity; that is, the steel ships do. The wooden ships are so small that there is not a trade demand for the large number of ships we have built.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Is it not true that the value of the smaller ships is likely to increase as the trade of South American countries grows greater?

Mr. MONDELL. Taking into consideration every possible trade that uses the wooden ships, I fear we have too many. No doubt, however, there will be found some use for them if they are sold cheaply enough, and some may have to be sold very cheaply. This is the situation as I understand it. When we shall have completed our program at the end of a year and a half, and the shipping now on the ways and in immediate contemplation in foreign countries is built, the world will have got back approximately to its prewar tonnage plus about 5,000,000 tons.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Just one moment more. Five million tons added to a prewar tonnage of 60,000,000 tons—not a great increase. So that when our program is completed there is hope for useful business for our ships, taking a very considerable loss on their cost. We have here another illustration of what great mistakes people may make by entering upon great programs without careful consideration, and how, in the desire to accomplish large things under the stress and spur of war, we may overshoot the mark. We voted for this program. I had some doubts about it, but I voted for it. I am not blaming anybody in particular for suggesting it. I should not like, however, to be the man who ought to be held responsible for some of the gross mismanagement under it. It is going to cost us a pretty penny before we get through, and some folks need be brought to account for the waste and loss.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I would not like to have the gentleman leave any impression that I was blaming anyone. I was simply trying to bring out whether or not out of all this money that we have been spending for shipping we would have any asset, or what proportion of asset we would have, and it was in no spirit of criticism whatever.

Mr. MONDELL. I think there is a great deal of ground for criticism for the way in which the money has been spent. I think there has been very great waste. Whether there have been any criminal transactions I do not know, but the waste has been frightful, the extravagance without justification.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD].

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to talk about this appropriation bill. It is my intention, however, to call the attention of the committee to a few things that I think the country is interested in, as well as the House. I think the Members of this House are to be congratulated upon the patience they have exercised with reference to the treatment that has been accorded to the soldiers from every district, I dare say, in the United States. Of course, everyone realizes that with the vast army of men scattered, as they have been, all over the country and all over France and Flanders and up into Siberia, a very great many mistakes were inevitable, and that very many apparent mistreatments have not been intended, but we have such numerous examples of such flagrant neglect right within the confines of our own country and within 24 hours' travel of the seat of the Government, that patience ceases to be a virtue.

I wish to call the attention of the committee to two or three striking examples. When this war first broke out, or when we entered into it, fired with the enthusiasm that had spread throughout the country, a young man from the city of Hammond, Ind., tried to get into the service. He was rejected for some physical disability. He endeavored to cure it and attempted to get in again, only to be rejected. Finally at the third attempt he was successful, and was admitted to the service in August of last year. He immediately went to Camp Taylor, in the State of Kentucky. Three days after he entered that camp he went to a hospital. He has been there on the flat of his back ever since. He was operated upon immediately after entering the hospital, blood poisoning set in, and he has had 10 additional operations and has been unable to move. Notwithstanding the fact that that boy has been continuously from the second day after his entry in the Army, in that hospital, a few days ago the War Department sent a letter to the father and mother of the boy that he had been missing since the 24th day of September, and that if they did not tell of his whereabouts he would be classified as a deserter and prosecuted as such when discovered. Can you imagine any possible excuse for that situation?

I want now to call attention to another almost as bad. Just before Christmas a constituent of mine in the city of La Fayette, Ind., a business man conducting a hardware and tin shop, died. His son who had been in the business with him before he entered the service was down here at Camp Devens. I succeeded in getting him a furlough that he might go home to attend the funeral of his father.

I tried to get his discharge while he was there in order that he could take care of the business, which would go to rack without some attention. I did not succeed in getting that and he had to go back to Camp Devens. Affidavits galore were furnished from the best people in the city of La Fayette with reference to the absolute necessity of this boy being at home to look after the affairs of the business and to look after his mother. Promise after promise was made that he would be discharged as soon as they could get somebody to take the little menial position that he was occupying at Camp Devens. Finally, we supposed that he had succeeded, for we got word that he was discharged on the 1st of February, and we notified friends of that fact. Three or four days ago I got a letter informing me that he had been discharged at Camp Devens, but it seems they have to go back to all of the camps they have ever been at in order to get the final discharge. He had to unwind the ball of yarn going back to these different camps, and finally landed at Camp Sherman, Ohio. His commanding officer at Camp Devens had confidence in him and gave him his papers for final discharge in order to facilitate matters. He presented them to the commanding officer at Camp Sherman. Did he get his discharge? No; but instead the officer to whom he presented his papers gave him a pair of overalls and told him to shovel coal, and he kept him continuously there until the day before yesterday, when finally we succeeded in prying him out of that institution.

I have another case in my State where a boy with overseas service, crippled and maimed for life, seven months without any pay, without any of the compensation to which he is entitled under the law passed by this Congress, sought at one of our universities to have the advantages of this rehabilitation and vocational training that had been promised to him. Through the good offices of that institution he was taken in. On the very day that this young man applied to those who were in authority at that institution, telling them that he had no money with which to pay his way, that the Government had promised to take care of him, but that they had not given him his pay for seven months and had not given him any of the compensation guaranteed under the law for services which he had rendered, in the event he became disabled—on that very day 11 men reported at Berne, in the State of Indiana, who were conscientious objectors and who had been relieved, if you please, from Leavenworth, too cowardly to fight and too lazy to work, and they came back with full pay, every one of them! Mr. Chairman, these are things that are creating the spirit of dissatisfaction throughout this country.

These are samples of the treatment that is sinking so deep in the heart of every boy who volunteered his service or, being conscripted, rendered his service in behalf of this country of ours; and when we are appropriating these millions, yes, these billions, of dollars for the purpose of carrying on the activities of this country we should see to it that the greatest asset that this country has or can ever hope to have against the evil and insidious influences that would destroy it—namely, the patriotic, loyal support of the boys, the soldier boys—is not destroyed. Some attention should be paid to them. I wish to call to the attention of the committee what Prof. Edwin A. Lee, professor of vocational education, Indiana University, at Bloomington, Ind., says:

HEROES DESERVE BETTER TREATMENT.

To the editor of the Star:

In this morning's issue of the Star—

Referring to the Indianapolis Star—appears an article regarding the action taken by the soldiers and sailors of Fort Wayne denouncing the action of the War Department in its treatment of "conscientious objectors." The article states in one place that nine of these objectors, according to one speaker, have returned to Berne, their home, with honorable discharge papers and amounts of money received as Army pay varying from $200 to $300.

This morning in the line of my regular work at the university I conferred with a disabled soldier, who was wounded in overseas service. When he arrived in this country his pay was behind seven months. He has applied for reeducation under the Smith-Sears Act and had come to see me in regard to certain procedure to be followed. I learned that he has not received any compensation as yet for the wound received.

The contrast is sufficient. Here is a man who has been wounded in the service of his Nation, whose pay was held up seven months, who has yet to receive the compensation due him by action of Congress. The terrible thing about it is that his case is only one of many that I personally know of. Over against this situation is the spectacle of the War Department granting honorable discharges to men who refused to serve and sending these men away with pay equal to that of the men who did serve.

EDWIN A. LEE,
Professor of Vocational Education.

BLOOMINGTON, IND.

Now, I do not know what is to be the remedy for this, but it occurs to me that it is not very complimentary that the men who refused to fight and who refused to work have been made exceptions in regard to receiving their pay as against the boys who have endured the toils, who have suffered all these months of privation, who have willingly suffered knowing them to be incident to the task—I say it is not complimentary to them or their country that such a spectacle as the one to which I have called attention should exist; and if the Secretary of War, who has been apprised of all these things, can not find some way with the machinery and the instrumentalities that he has to remedy these outrages that are so flagrant and so numerous throughout this country, a way should be provided by the Congress that that may be remedied. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Has the gentleman from Wyoming any other speakers?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FAIRFIELD].

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, evidently I shall not be able to conclude what I desire to say, and therefore I ask permission to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, on the 2d day of November, in my presence, in the town of La Grange, Ind., a man from the Department of Justice of the United States handed a paper to the Republican county chairman, stating that the Department of Justice would intern any enemy alien who attempted to vote, and further stated that care would be exercised that those men who did vote would be prosecuted fully after the election. This was so high handed an exercise of arbitrary power that it ought to challenge the attention of every good citizen in this country. I have a copy of that letter delivered to this county chairman, which I want to make at this time a part of the RECORD, and I ask that it be printed at this particular place.

The letter is as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION,
Indianapolis, Ind., October 29, 1918.

Mr. SIMON A. NASH,
517 Lincoln Life Building, Fort Wayne, Ind.

DEAR SIR: I have been instructed by the district attorney to make the utmost efforts looking to the prevention of alien enemies from voting in the coming election, as Mr. Slack considers the act of an enemy alien taking part in our election as illegal and sufficient aggravation for internment.

You are also probably advised that Congress has recently passed a law against buying and selling of votes in the election, copy of which is as follows:

"That whoever shall promise, offer, or give or cause to be offered, promised, or given any money or other thing of value or shall make or tender any contract, undertaking, obligation, gratuity, or security for the payment of money or for the delivery or conveyance of anything of value to any person either to vote or withhold his vote or to vote for or against any candidate, or whoever solicits, accepts, or receives any money or other thing of value in consideration of his vote for or against any candidate for Senator or Representative or Delegate to Congress at any primary or general or special election, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both."

In order to deter as much as possible any violations of either of the above-mentioned regulation and law, I wish to inform you that I shall leave the enforcement of this law in the twelfth district to you, and will, of course, assist you as much as possible in developing investigations after election day. In the meantime, however, I desire that you visit, if possible, each county seat in the twelfth district and cause to be made a statement to the local newspapers, informing them that the Department of Justice intends to be active on election day and thereafter, and will investigate all information indicating violations of either of the above-mentioned law or district attorney's regulation as to enemy aliens, and you may request that information be transmitted to your office on election day or direct to this office after that date.

Trusting that you will give as much publicity as possible to our intentions to prosecute such violations, I am,

Very truly, yours,

CHAS. P. TIGHE,
Acting Agent in Charge.

On my return to Washington I wondered if the Attorney General had given countenance to that letter. Accordingly I addressed a letter to him on December 4, as follows:

DECEMBER 4, 1918.

Hon. THOMAS W. GREGORY,
Attorney General, Department of Justice.

DEAR SIR: On Saturday, November 2, notice was served on the county Republican chairman of La Grange County looking to the prevention of alien enemies from voting in the election of November 5, and threatening them with internment should they exercise the right of suffrage. Copy of notice served is herewith inclosed.

Will you kindly inform me whether this action was taken in conformity with your judgment in the matter. I would be pleased to know also whether any further action is contemplated by the Department of Justice. Is it your conviction that this action by Charles P. Tighe, acting agent in charge, United States Department of Justice, Bureau of Investigation, was legal?

An early reply would be highly appreciated.

Very respectfully, yours, ——— ———.

Waiting for a month I addressed another letter, as follows:

JANUARY 4, 1919.

Hon. THOMAS W. GREGORY,
Attorney General, Department of Justice.

DEAR SIR: Under date of December 4, 1918, I wrote you concerning the matter of a letter circulated by your department division in Indiana concerning the matter of elections and the voting of foreign-born citizens who had not been granted full citizenship. I have not as yet had the honor of a reply, nor has my letter been returned.

Will you not kindly give this matter your early attention?

Sincerely, yours, ——— ———.

On January 11 I received the following letter:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., January 11, 1919.

Hon. LOUIS W. FAIRFIELD, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: Ever since the receipt of your letter of January 4, 1919, I have been making an earnest effort to locate your letter of December 4, 1918, but have been unable to do so. I deeply regret this as it is very seldom that letters are misplaced in the department, but it seems to have happened in this case. I would appreciate it very much indeed if you could favor me with a copy of that letter, upon the receipt of which I will be pleased to answer immediately.

Respectfully,

CLAUDE R. PORTER,
Assistant Attorney General.

For the Attorney General.

I addressed him a letter in which I copied the former letter on January 15, and on January 18 I received the following:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., January 18, 1919.

Hon. LOUIS W. FAIRFIELD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The department is in receipt of your favor of January 15, 1919, wherein you very kindly set out a copy of your letter of December 4, 1918, which seems to have been misplaced in the department in some way.

In answer to your inquiry I desire to suggest that the circular which you refer to, and which was sent out by the agent of the Bureau of Investigation at Indianapolis, Ind., was, so far as it contained reference to the right of alien enemies to vote, not authorized by this department, and the department very much regrets that the same was sent out.

Respectfully,

CLAUDE R. PORTER,
Assistant Attorney General.

I addressed another letter to Hon. L. Ert Slack, district attorney at Indianapolis, Ind. I shall not read that letter, but on January 24 I received a reply from Mr. Slack, and I desire to have both of these letters printed in the order in which I have suggested them.

The letters are as follows:

JANUARY 21, 1919.

Hon. L. ERT SLACK,
The District Attorney, Indianapolis, Ind.

DEAR SIR: On Saturday, November 2, 1918, notice was served in my presence on the county Republican chairman of Lagrange County, Ind., looking to the prevention of alien enemies from voting in the election of November 5, 1918, and threatening them with internment should they exercise the right of suffrage. This notice was served by Mr. Simon A. Nash, 517 Lincoln Life Building, Fort Wayne, Ind. The notice was addressed to him by Charles P. Tighe, agent in charge United States Department of Justice, Bureau of Investigation.

Mr. Tighe states in the letter that you had instructed him to warn any alien enemy against taking part in the election, as it would be illegal and sufficient aggravation for internment. You further state your intention to prosecute such violation.

Will you kindly inform me whether the Department of Justice at Washington sanctioned this action, and whether it is your intention to prosecute such violations? For very urgent reasons an immediate reply would be highly appreciated. Inclosed is copy of the notice from the Department of Justice at Indianapolis.

Sincerely, yours,

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
UNITED STATES ATTORNEY,
INDIANAPOLIS, January 24, 1919.

Hon. LOUIS W. FAIRFIELD, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Acknowledging receipt of your letter of the 21st instant, I wish to state:

That it is not my intention to prosecute alien enemies who voted at the last general election in this State.

You are perhaps familiar with the fact that the State election board, consisting of the attorney general and two members appointed by Gov. Goodrich, gave a written opinion about a month previous to the last general election in which they decided that under the constitution and laws of the State of Indiana alien enemies were not allowed to vote. Of course you are familiar with the statutes of Indiana, which make it an offense for one to vote unless he has legal qualifications. You are perhaps also aware that alien enemies who violate a State law are liable to possible internment for having violated such law.

If the opinion of the State election board above referred to correctly interprets the law, then all alien enemies who voted at the last general election violated a criminal statute of the State of Indiana, which would make them liable to be interned.

After carefully considering this matter in all its phases it has not been deemed advisable to rely altogether upon the opinion of the State election board, and feeling that there may be some doubt about it it is not deemed advisable that I proceed to take further action in the matter.

Your inquiry as to whether or not the Department of Justice "sanctioned this action" will have to be referred to the department for answer, for the reason that I do not know what is meant, and also for the reason that I hardly think it proper for me to state concerning the policy or action of the Department of Justice.

Respectfully,

L. E. N. SLACK,
United States Attorney.

This correspondence puts the matter clearly before us. This effort to disfranchise a large body of citizens in the State of Indiana originated in the State of Indiana.

It was either political or patriotic. In either case liberty under law is the only safeguard. The Constitution of the United States expressly states, Article I, section 2:

The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

The constitution of the State, article 2, section 2, provides that—

Every male of foreign birth of the age of 21 years and upward who shall have resided in the United States 1 year and shall have resided in this State during the 6 months and in the township 60 days and in the ward or precinct 30 days immediately preceding such election, and shall have declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States conformably to the laws of the United States on the subject of naturalization, shall be entitled to vote.

The Indiana election laws published in 1916, on page 153, are identical with the provisions of the State constitution. Yet, with the rights of these people guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States, by the constitution of the State of Indiana, and by the laws governing elections in the State of Indiana, the Department of Justice of the United States, operating in Indiana, endeavored to prevent them from voting by intimidation.

It may be that we are accustomed to look upon matters of that kind as a mere matter of politics, and yet is it not a grave offense for the agents of the Department of Justice to try to frighten voters away from the polls under threat of internment? It seems to me that a cursory examination of the conditions under which men vote in any State would have revealed to these men that they were not acting in accordance with law, but contrary to the express provisions of the criminal law of the State, which provides that men shall not undertake to intimidate other men in the exercise of the right of suffrage. It is true that, as we see it now, unwisely, the State of Indiana has continued for many years to permit those who have been residents of the United States a year, who have been residents of the State of Indiana for six months, and who have taken out their first papers to vote. Under that law and in accordance with the constitution of the State, which expressly provides that men with those qualifications may vote, many of our citizens have exercised the right of suffrage for more than 40 years. In my town there was an old soldier with one leg off, drawing a pension from the Government of the United States, with a son over on the other side, and yet they threatened him with internment if he should attempt to vote. Two other gentlemen with boys in France, having exercised the right of citizenship and who, through no fault of their own—for both political parties had for many years when the election time approached cultivated those men and urged them to take out their first papers and vote—had gone on exercising those rights; but when the election was on, and an election that involved no danger to this country, but possible danger only to the continued power of the dominant party, we find the agents of the Department of Justice in the State of Indiana willing to frighten men with internment and prosecution if they dared to exercise the right of suffrage. As I said to that gentleman, this right is guaranteed in the Constitution of the United States, for it says "the qualifications for voting shall be the same as those for the most numerous branch of the legislature." The constitution of the State of Indiana expressly says that if a man has resided in the United States a year and for six months in the State and has taken out his first papers, he has a perfect right to vote.

What, then, was the exigency, what was the crisis, that would lead men to be willing contrary to law to subvert the very basic things upon which the Republic rests? True, in the years gone by we had asked these men from foreign shores to come into Indiana, to fell its forests, and to identify themselves with every development of the country, and suddenly, when the great war broke out, they found themselves in the position of enemy aliens, though only technically so. The efforts to prevent their voting aroused just indignation. I knew two men who were thus involved, and I learned that one of them did not intend to vote on the morning of the election. I had not visited him before, but I went into his place of business and said to him, "You have as much right to vote as I have. We have not amended the Constitution of the United States. We have passed no law against your voting. We have not amended the constitution of the State of Indiana. No law has been passed against your voting. Your boy to-day is over on the other side. He may come back. But, man, if you are the red-blooded American that I think you are, and love your country as I think you do, you will vote." And the next day I asked him, "John, did you vote?" He said, "Yes. And I thank God I did."

It is thus that arbitrary power, feeding by what it grows upon under stress of circumstances, has again and again destroyed the liberties of people. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN].

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, on the 4th day of January I introduced a resolution demanding the withdrawal of American troops from Russia. This was the first resolution introduced in either House or Senate demanding that our troops be withdrawn from the Russian Republic. A resolution asking for information had been previously introduced in the Senate by Senator JOHNSON of California, and one of the ablest men who ever held a seat in the American Congress, the Hon. WILLIAM E. MASON, of Illinois, has since delivered several strong speeches in support of this demand.

I send the resolution to the desk, and ask that it be read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 64.

Whereas thousands of American soldiers are now fighting in Russia; and

Whereas these Americans engaged in war upon the Russian Republic were conscripted to make war on the Empires of Germany and Austria; and

Whereas the President has declared in favor of self-determination for all nations; and we are now permitting enemy nations to adjust their own internal affairs; and

Whereas the President, on January 8, 1918, in his peace terms which laid down his 14 points declared in point 6 as follows:

"The evacuation of all Russian territory and such a settlement of all questions affecting Russia as will secure the best and freest cooperation of the other nations of the world in obtaining for her an unhampered and unembarrassed opportunity for the independent determination of her own political development and national policy and assure her of a sincere welcome into the society of free nations under institutions of her own choosing; and, more than a welcome, assistance also of every kind that she may need and may herself desire. The treatment accorded Russia by her sister nations in the months to come will be the acid test of their good will, of their comprehension of her needs as distinguished from their own interests, and of their intelligent and unselfish sympathy";

And

Whereas the State Department has made public no information as to the causes of war against Russia or the status thereof; and

Whereas the President has stated officially that America went to war to save democracy; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States has made no declaration of war against Russia: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President be, and hereby is, instructed to withdraw at once all American troops now on Russian soil.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Gentlemen, the holding of our soldier boys in foreign lands after the conclusion of the world war is in violation of all laws and the Constitution. I strongly urge the speedy return of every American soldier wherever he may be, and it is the duty of this House and the Congress of the United States to pass a resolution definitely and positively directing the President to order the return of these soldiers at once to the United States. An ever-rising tide of sentiment demands their immediate return. Our brave boys themselves in no uncertain language tell us that they are tired of France and England, Germany and foreigners. They have only one compelling desire, and that is the desire to see once more the Statue of Liberty, to tread again the soil of the land they love.

Our American soldiers were not conscripted to fight republics; certainly not Russia—Russia, who befriended us in the Civil War when England threatened; Russia, who now seeks liberty after a century of black Siberian night of Czarism. The President lays himself liable to impeachment and removal from office by his unwarranted use of American troops. Once before he made war against Mexico without a declaration of war; now, again, he makes war on Russia without a declaration. Congress only can declare war and carry on war, but what else could be expected from an Executive who was elected on the promise to keep our Nation out of war, and then proceeded promptly to plunge us in?

On November 5 the American people placed the Democratic Party in the discard, after a fervent presidential plea to support his foreign policy at the election. The American people do not support the Wilson foreign policy. They are dead against it, and so said at the polls in November. The tide has turned; the men who fought Wilson ran well in the November election, while many of his supporters fell by the wayside. I have voiced my protest against the killing of American boys in the Arctic regions to make good the Russian bonds held by Wall Street. I am unalterably opposed to sacrificing American lives that the Russian bonds held by France or England, or any other country, be made good.

France, supposed to be bled white, is now penetrating Russia from the regions of Odessa, if we can believe the public press, and her columns are half way to Kief. France apparently has not yet had enough of war. We have been sucked into this Russian war by subtle foreign diplomacy.

The United States, Japan, and England all have placed troops upon Russian soil to threaten the people there, and to dictate the form of government which they must have. What hypocrisy is this at a time when we proclaim the doctrine of self-determination for all peoples?

The labor-union element in England, as well as the soldiers themselves, have compelled the British Government to announce that they are going to withdraw the British troops from Russia. In fact, when rumors penetrated the British Army that they were to be sent into new wars in foreign lands they refused to move, and the Government was compelled to send a committee to parley with their own troops, with the result that England was compelled to proceed more rapidly with its demobilization and to give the workmen and soldiers further assurance that they would be consulted in the foreign policy and in the domestic policy of the British Empire.

Japan has announced that she will withdraw her troops. In fact, Japan was the first nation to make this announcement. It is not for the American people to argue against or to argue in favor of the present government of Russia. It is none of our business what sort of government obtains in that country. They have the same right to determine for themselves their own form of government that we have, or any other nation. If we speak about blood being shed in Russia, let not the American people forget that millions of men fought and hundreds of thousands died in a bloody fratricidal Civil War in this country. It will be a long time before as many lives are lost in any civil war in Russia as were lost in our own Civil War at that time, but we should not argue the question. We should not discuss it. We have problems at home, and these Russian domestic problems do not concern us, should not concern us, and must be put out of the American mind at the earliest possible date.

We have overwhelming problems of reconstruction to solve. We must remember our returning soldiers, the men who fought so bravely for America in the world war. We must care for the war workers, millions of whom are turned adrift. We must solve our problems of unemployment. We have vast tracts of undeveloped land, lands that must be reclaimed. We have tremendous problems which sweep the entire Western Hemisphere, and these must be solved. Yet we leave these questions unsolved, and send boatloads of idealists, dreamers, and college professors to Europe to proclaim universal peace and meddle in the affairs of foreigners. This is contrary, gentlemen, to the advice of Washington, who said in his Farewell Address:

Why quit our own to stand on foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, imperil our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice?

It has been the fashion to term anyone who advocated the foreign policy of Washington a traitor to his country, and in that connection let me quote from Washington:

Real patriots who may resist the intrigues of the favorite [nation] are liable to become suspected and odious while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people to surrender their interests.

Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none, or a very remote, relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves by artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.

Instead of following the advice of immortal Washington America is now being entangled everywhere and with everything the world over. To-day our soldier boys are fighting on the Arctic Circle under British command, and when announcement was made that they would be withdrawn in the near future that announcement came from the British premier and not from our own Secretary of State. To such a depth free and independent America has fallen. The mighty Republic is meekly taking orders from kings and emperors, listening to the wiles and intrigues of foreigners. The time has arrived for a new birth of freedom, a new declaration of independence.

During the war I refrained from criticizing any of our departments. I differed from the policy of the President in implicating America in a war which did not concern us in the least, and I so stated in no uncertain terms. The war has come to an end, however, and certainly no one can now say that we are embarrassing the Government in time of war by telling a few truths concerning the international situation.

The State Department has persistently kept every item of information from Congress and from the people concerning this Russian situation. It pursued a policy of making war without consulting the war-making body. It has demanded money to prosecute that war. Of course, the responsibility for all this devolves upon the Executive himself, who, while he writes golden words and speaks with a silver tongue, acts exactly contrary to his promises and countermarches every movement begun.

Russia is free; the Czar is dead. From our point of view Russia may not have a perfect Government; I doubt that our own Government is perfect; perhaps our own Government is more perfect than theirs, but who shall doubt that in the course of time, with greater experience and the growing intelligence of the people, Russia will solve her own problems? Shall we take our place in the ranks of the robber nations who seek territorial aggrandizement and who seek to impose their will upon nation after nation, or shall we rather be an example to the world so that all people may see and behold a Nation which seeks to promote justice and right and does not seek to impose its will upon unwilling peoples, but, rather, extends to them recognition, sympathy, and the bonds of international commerce and good will?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has four minutes remaining.

Mr. MONDELL. I yield the four minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the committee to the fact that this is the centenary of one of the country's greatest scholars and greatest literary men, James Russell Lowell, and it seems it ought not to pass over without some mention of the fact. My interest in this scholar is due very largely to my interest in education, and I can not take the time to characterize him or to place him in history. But I will ask the privilege later on of extending my remarks, so that I can pay my appreciation.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FESS. Now, Mr. Chairman, among the many things James Russell Lowell said, that has been a sort of slogan for the world, is the following:

Truth forever on the scaffold, Wrong forever on the throne,
But that scaffold sways the Future, and behind the dim Unknown,
Standeth God within the shadow, keeping watch above His own.

Another suggestion he gave, that serves as a guidance, is:

Be noble! and the nobleness that lies
In other men, sleeping but never dead,
Will rise in majesty to meet thine own.

I notice that Members are anticipating what I am saying and repeating it ahead of me. That speaks well for the intelligence of the membership of the committee. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON].

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, Europe was an armed camp; it then became a slaughterhouse, and is now a madhouse. Although the war is over, the chaos is not over, and there is no telling how long it will continue. A few days ago in France a young assassin attempted to kill the premier. This morning the press brings the distressing news that in Germany the junker crowd has started a campaign of assassination and that among the first victims are several of the noblest men the German democracy has produced.

The great masses of the common people of Russia are struggling against the forces of darkness and reaction inside of their country as well as against the forces of darkness and reaction outside of their country. A monarchist campaign, a campaign of the tory elements of other countries, is being conducted against the Russian people, who, groping toward a better state of affairs, are necessarily going through a series of social and political upheavals. Instead of aid and sympathy, they are to be warred against, or at least blockaded and starved. And while Europe is a madhouse to-day, there is serious ground for apprehension that a wave of darkest reaction is sweeping across the Atlantic and over this country. Not only is no attempt made to repeal the hysterical legislation enacted during this war, not only is there no effort made to wipe off the statute books the infamous laws curbing the written and spoken word, the ability to think and to speak being the principal attributes of the human being as distinguished from the rest of the animal world—not only is no effort made to repeal these laws, but there seems to be an inclination to continue these restrictions and to make them more rigorous for a long period after the termination of the war.

The nations are supposed to have been freed and the world made safe for democracy. How a nation can be free while the men and women who compose it are to be robbed of their elementary rights the statesmen fail to tell us.

One of the noble bits of legislation of this Congress was the law permitting the deportation of aliens who are anarchists; aliens who advocate the overthrow by force or violence the Government of the United States, or of all forms of law; aliens who are members of or affiliated with any organization that entertains a belief in, teaches, or advocates the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States, and so forth.

I pointed out at the time the bill was before the House that a law which would deprive a person charged with a serious offense of a trial by jury, of an opportunity to be confronted by his accusers, and to cross-examine them, was vicious and was violative of the fundamental rights guaranteed to every human being.

The newspapers report that thousands of radicals are to be deported, and really all that is necessary under this law to deport one who has not become a full-fledged citizen, and this, no matter how long he has lived in this country, is to charge him with being an anarchist or with belonging to an organization which advocates or teaches, and so forth. It is enough to convince an employee of the Labor Department that there is a basis for the charge, and the accused is helpless.

The mere threat to deport can have only one effect, and that is to reduce the resistance of the masses of workers to economic oppression.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. LONDON. Has the gentleman a few minutes more?

Mr. MONDELL. If I have any time remaining I will yield it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has one minute.

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman that one minute.

Mr. LONDON. Of course these deportations are without an opportunity to present the case before a jury. Whatever restrictions there may exist as to immigration, once a human being has been permitted to land and to work he should be accorded the rights of a human being.

The right to a fair trial, to a trial by jury, is one of these inalienable human rights. And while I have no intention to charge the Secretary of Labor—for I know he means well—with seeking to oppress the working masses, there is not the slightest doubt that unless the law is repealed and the policy of deportation is abandoned that the labor organizations of the country will be the worst sufferers. The alien radical helps to organize the immigrant masses. Without the organization of the immigrant masses no labor union could survive. Destroy the capacity of the immigrant to organize and you pull down and destroy American labor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I yield one minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LUNN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for one minute.

Mr. LUNN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUNN. I desire to insert a short letter, about 300 words or so, of a young soldier in the Thirty-seventh Division, fighting in the Argonne Forest, and describing that battle.

Following is the letter referred to:

I see that a certain man, who it seems is well up in politics, wants to know why it was there were so many casualties in a division which was in the Battle of the Argonne Woods, why wounded were allowed to lie on wet ground for hours without being removed, that there wasn't airplanes or enough artillery and food.

My own division, the Thirty-seventh, from Ohio, was one of the divisions which was in the drive that started on the 26th of September.

Let me say that the artillery barrage which was laid down was one of the greatest, if not the biggest, that was ever laid before attacking troops. I never knew guns could raise such hell as they did and cause such havoc as they did to the Boche lines.

To me, and from all I heard, it didn't appear that there was such a lacking in allied planes. As soon as day broke and the skies had cleared, allied planes could be seen darting here and there through the skies. They were doing scout and patrol duty and also guarding observation balloons, of which I personally saw nine in our sector. Besides, the planes that were there were greatly handicapped on account of inclement weather.

But the roads were the big drawback here. The roads that were in the woods—and they were few—were blown up by Boche and our own artillery fire. This meant new roads had to be built. These were built through fields which could not stand up under such heavy traffic as artillery and ammunition trains, which were going all day and night.

The moving of artillery was delayed also on this account, as the roads were nothing but mud and water. And it was hard work to bring up a light caisson with 16 horses hitched to it. And as for food, there was lots of it, but it was almost impossible to get it up to the fighting lines on account of the roads. I personally carried food 20 kilos, if not more, on my back that the fellows would get it.

By this time our troops had reached the roads made by the Boche in the rear of their former lines and loaded the rations on one of our Ford cars, which carried it the rest of the way up.

Everything possible was done for the wounded. It was almost impossible to get an ambulance through the sector held by our division on account of the roads. The wounded were carried back by medical men, Boche prisoners, trucks, and even on a narrow-gauge railroad captured in the drive. And I believe everything that could possibly be done for the wounded was carried out.

The American officers didn't take any unnecessary chances with American troops. Their plans were mapped out, and they acted accordingly.

I can't see for the life of me why men who sat back in soft chairs should criticize and want to investigate the efforts of those men who were under shell fire, who faced gas attacks, who went around in mud and water knee-deep.

To find fault with those who went without food and sleep for hours at times, and when they did sleep it was usually in a shell hole about half filled with water; men who went about with mud-caked and wet clothing and ate hard-tack and corned Bill with the rest of the boys.

During this drive our doughboys in the Thirty-seventh were asked if they wanted food or ammunition, because it was out of the question to get both up, and they said, "Give us ammunition." If these men don't find reason to complain, why should those who weren't over here do so?

Let us all boost, and if any investigations are to be made let them be made by men who were here in action and who went through the hardships of war. They are the only men who are qualified to make them.

HARRY L. JONES,
Company B, One hundred and thirty-fourth Machine-Gun Battalion, 1, 515 306, American Expeditionary Forces.

JANUARY 23.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, namely.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks leave to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clinton, S. C., post office: For completion, $39,500.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. There is a large number of items here for Government buildings. May I ask the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] whether there is any item in this bill under the public-building caption which is not authorized by law?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. There is no item in the bill that is not authorized by law, and there is no appropriation which extends the limit of cost of buildings now under construction.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman happen to remember how much is carried in the bill in the way of appropriations for these various Government buildings?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. For construction of all public buildings, does the gentleman mean, including quarantine stations and marine hospitals and post offices and courthouses?

Mr. MANN. Especially post offices and courthouses and Federal buildings in the various cities.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. For courthouses the amount is $6,166,000.

Mr. MANN. Does that include——

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That amount includes marine hospitals.

Mr. MANN. That includes what, in a general way?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Public buildings which heretofore have been authorized. Many of them are in process of construction, and in this bill they ask for the balance of the authorization.

Mr. MANN. It does not include all the public buildings which have been authorized, I take it?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I think it does. It includes all the buildings that the Treasury Department estimated for.

Mr. MANN. Well, that is what I wanted to get at. Upon what basis has the Treasury Department made its estimates? In other words, this is what I want to find out: I suppose there has been very little public building going on during the period of the war. Now that the war is practically ended, how far along is the Supervising Architect's office in providing for construction of public buildings heretofore authorized to proceed during the next fiscal year?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I do not recall any statement of the Supervising Architect that would enable me to give any information other than I have already stated.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. This is the situation, as I understand it, and I think the gentleman from South Carolina will recall it: Many public buildings have been appropriated for in the sundry civil bill in the past two years where the construction has not been undertaken, first, because there was a general order discontinuing all construction, and, second, because in a great many cases the lowest bid was above the limit of cost. Those appropriations, of course, are all in force, and the buildings can be constructed whenever bids can be obtained within the limit of cost. Now, in this bill we are providing for the beginning of construction of all of the buildings heretofore authorized where the buildings have not been heretofore appropriated for.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman sure he is right about that?

Mr. MONDELL. I am.

Mr. MANN. That this bill provides for all of the buildings heretofore authorized?

Mr. MONDELL. That have not heretofore been appropriated for.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman is usually accurate, and of course I take his statement. I had not supposed that they were ready to begin all of these public buildings yet. But I would like to ask this question: Including the money which has heretofore been appropriated and the money which is appropriated in this bill, can any estimate be given as to how much will probably be expended during the next fiscal year on these Government buildings?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. In answer to that, that is my understanding of the estimate of the departments. They estimate what in the opinion of the department can be wisely expended by them upon the public buildings to be constructed during next year.

Mr. MANN. That is, in this appropriation bill. But we have made appropriations for several years where very little of the money has been expended, and I thought it would be desirable to know—and I suppose the Supervising Architect does know, to an estimated extent, at least—how much they expect to spend out of this appropriation and former appropriations during the next year in building. How much Government building are we going to do, in other words, during the next year?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The Supervising Architect says that there was a balance available for construction of $11,300,000, and if this appropriation of $6,000,000 is made there will be available for construction during the next fiscal year $17,466,000.

Mr. MANN. Yes; available, so far as appropriations are concerned. But a considerable portion of the money which has heretofore been appropriated in cases covered by that is not available. There is not money enough appropriated to build the buildings within the limit of cost fixed, and in those cases the department can not go ahead and spend the money.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I think the gentleman's statement is correct, and for that reason the Secretary of the Treasury has pending before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds estimates to increase the authorizations for those buildings.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MANN. I will ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The Committee on Appropriations believed it had no right to increase the authorizations, but it was informed that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds would do it.

Mr. MANN. Well, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has reported a bill to the House, which is on the calendar. It may be called up for consideration under suspension of the rules, at which time, if that is done, of course, there will be no information furnished, or not very much. There will not be time enough to furnish very much; and I would like to find out, if the gentleman knows, how much money can be expended for public buildings in the next year if the public-buildings bill does not become a law—I do not think its chances are exceedingly rosy—and how much necessity there is for passing the public-buildings bill in order that the public work may proceed. If the gentleman from South Carolina has any figures on the subject, I would like to have them.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I have no figures from the Supervising Architect's Office except those that I have given him.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman would like to have an opinion on the subject——

Mr. MANN. If it is an opinion based on information, I know of no other gentleman whose opinion I would rather have than that of the gentleman from Wyoming. Even if it is a desire and not an opinion I would still welcome it.

Mr. MONDELL. This is the situation: Practically the entire $11,000,000 now in the Treasury available for public-building construction is tied up because of the fact that the lowest bids under advertisement have not been within the limit of cost.

Unless conditions change, it is quite likely that only a small portion of the $6,000,000 we are now appropriating can be spent, because of the fact that bids will not be received within the limit of cost. Now, there are three general conditions affecting this situation. In some cases the Supervising Architect anticipates that there may be such a change in the condition of the labor market as will enable him to construct the buildings for which he has advertised or for which he will advertise. Second, in some cases he hopes to be able so to modify the plans as to come within the limit of cost where the bid is very near the limit of cost. But in the main, unless there shall be a very great change in the labor and material situation, the carrying on of this program depends upon the passage of the bill that has been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds raising the limit of cost on these buildings.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Muskegon, Mich.: For rent of temporary quarters for Government officials and moving expenses incident thereto, $1,500.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment, after line 18, page 6, and to have the amendment read, and let gentlemen reserve any points of order against it, and let it go over until later.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HASTINGS: Page 6, after line 18, insert:
"Muskogee, Okla.: Post office and courthouse, completion, $50,000."

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order.

Mr. HASTINGS. I want to say to the gentleman from South Carolina in charge of the bill that this item is contained in the public-building bill that is reported. It was estimated for by the Treasury Department, but I do not have the letter here with me now, and if he will be good enough to let it go over with permission to return to it, I will appreciate it.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Is there any authorization for the construction of the building?

Mr. HASTINGS. The building is already constructed. This is for completion.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. This increases the limit of cost?

Mr. HASTINGS. It does.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

St. Louis, Mo., appraisers' stores: For remodeling plumbing system, rewiring, and other necessary repair work, $40,000.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The Committee on Appropriations has seen fit to strike from this bill appropriations for the United States Employment Service and certain other bureaus in connection with the Department of Labor.

The gentleman in charge of the bill says that the items were taken out of the bill because they were clearly out of order. The Committee on Appropriations in the past have not found it difficult to protect items that they desired to retain in a bill, and I take it that if the committee had desired to continue the employment service and the other bureaus of the Labor Department they would have appealed to the Committee on Rules for a rule making those items in order, and that the Committee on Rules would have responded to the request.

I am not convinced that the amendments are not in order, or at least that they can not be so framed as to be in order; and when the items are reached in the bill, if no one else offers the amendments, I will endeavor so to frame them that they will be in order, and that the Department of Labor may secure the money that it needs to carry on these activities.

It is very unfortunate that the Committee on Appropriations has endeavored at this time to cut off the employment service. Some one has suggested that there is an item in the bill for the purpose of enlarging St. Elizabeths Hospital for the Insane. I sometimes wonder what the folks at home will think when they learn that the Congress of the United States, after the great war, when we are demobilizing hundreds of thousands and millions of men from military life and from industrial life, offers as its contribution a proposition to close all the Federal employment offices in the country and to enlarge the Federal insane asylums.

Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to detain the House at this time, and I ask permission to insert in the RECORD, without reading it, a letter from the Secretary of Labor, in which he sets forth some of the reasons why the United States Employment Service should be continued and its activities should be enlarged.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 21, 1919.

Hon. EDWARD KEATING,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. KEATING: In submitting the estimate for the United States Employment Service and asking for the appropriation "to enable the Secretary of Labor to continue and maintain a system of labor exchanges and to cooperate with States and municipalities in continuing and maintaining systems of labor exchanges in order to advance opportunities for profitable employment of the wage earners of the United States, including discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines," I felt that it was absolutely necessary in order to keep industrial unrest at a minimum throughout the whole country and to facilitate the processes of readjustment, to continue the Employment Service as established and operated in this department in cooperation with the public employment services in such States as have established them. These State employment services, either through their statutory organization or through the various State councils of defense, have contributed during the period of the war to the maintenance of a federated employment service, supervised uniformly with regard to standards and practices.

It is the policy of this department to work toward a federated system of employment exchanges, which shall be jointly financed by the Federal Government and the States (including municipalities) and managed by the States under proper supervision from the Federal Government, so that every possible facility shall be given to wage earners out of employment in one locality or State to secure positions which are open in another.

Agreements are already pending with certain States, where the legislatures have shown themselves inclined to grant an appropriation sufficient to maintain an adequate service under the proposed plan.

Inasmuch as the maintenance throughout the country of an employment service at least as adequate as that now in existence is required in order to avoid hardship and disorder during the period of military demobilization and industrial readjustment, it is necessary that the Federal Government should for the present be able to maintain its own system of offices in every State until the State is ready to meet its share of the burden and take over the management subject to Federal supervision.

Sincerely, yours,

W. B. WILSON,
Secretary.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, just a word more. One of the objections urged against the employment service is that it has been controlled by representatives of organized labor. The most convincing answer to that objection is a statement showing the personnel of the service, the men who have charge of the activities of the service. Therefore, I ask permission to insert in the RECORD without reading it a list of the directors of the service, both in this city and throughout the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, that is all contained in the reports of the department, I assume. Why is it necessary to print the names in the RECORD? There are quite a number of names, are there not?

Mr. KEATING. Not more than 50 or 60.

Mr. WALSH. Is that all—the complete personnel of this bureau?

Mr. KEATING. No; not every employee, but the men who are in charge.

Mr. WALSH. The directors?

Mr. KEATING. The directors.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The list is as follows:

Mr. KEATING. And now, Mr. Chairman, I want to impose on the good nature of the House by asking to insert in the RECORD a short brief, referring to some of the activities of the service.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Is it the gentleman's own brief?

Mr. KEATING. No; it is a brief prepared for me, at my request.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman know whether it is the brief that has been sent out by Mr. Densmore to all Members?

Mr. KEATING. I presume it covers practically the same ground. I will say to the gentleman that my object in inserting it is to furnish information to the membership of the House. I presume most Members of Congress treat letters and pamphlets as I treat them. I confess that I have not time as a rule to read all the pamphlets that come to my desk. I merely desire to insert the matter so that Members of Congress who read the RECORD may have an opportunity to see the work that the department has been performing.

Mr. WALSH. It was presented by Mr. Densmore with a letter accompanying it, and it was official mail, and I assume that Members have read it. I have.

Mr. KEATING. If Members have read it, I have no desire to insert it in the RECORD. I merely want to call it to the attention of Members.

Mr. WALSH. I wanted to see if it was the same matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

The brief is as follows:

UNITED STATES EMPLOYMENT SERVICE—WAR AND POSTWAR ACTIVITIES, AND ITS PLACE IN THE NATIONAL PROGRAM.

(1) Increased the number of public employment offices throughout the United States from 96 in 36 States on January 3, 1918, to approximately 800 in 48 States on August 1, 1918.
Unified Federal, State, and municipal services into national system.
(2) Centralized the control of labor recruiting and reduced turnover by abating the chaotic unrestricted bidding which was going on between different Government departments and private concerns doing war work. Accomplished by having all departments use Employment Service by regulating fee-charging agencies, and by prohibiting competitive advertising for common labor.
(3) Established approximately 1,700 community labor boards, with representatives of employers, employees, and the public, and secured their joint counsel in the work of the local offices. These boards made it possible to secure cooperation of the various community interests and to intimately study and adjust local labor situations—the moving of men from nonessential to essential industry; replacement of men with women; determination of priorities to insure proper distribution among plants doing war work; and the like.
(4) During 12 months, January 1, 1918, to December 31, 1918, received orders for 8,800,000 people; registered 4,212,000; referred 4,000,000; placed 3,100,000. Interstate shipments of unskilled labor of six months were 165,000. At the rate charged by private agencies—$2 to $5 per person—this service saved, it is conservatively estimated, the wage earners over $8,000,000.
(5) Selected and appointed 149 representative public-spirited citizens of broad and varied interests to act as industrial advisers to the district draft boards on the problem of industrial deferments. These industrial advisers, working with the community labor boards and local branch offices of the Employment Service, were a real factor in assisting the district draft boards to get competent information on industrial deferments.
(6) Studied the important problem of transferring women to war work and handled through the local offices nearly 368,000 women of all classes during a period of 10 months. Also organized to assist in demobilization of women war workers.
(7) Organized the Public Service Reserve, with some 15,000 volunteer enrolling agents, as an auxiliary arm to the local employment offices. This service registered and classified approximately 300,000 workers of various trades. Three thousand motor mechanics were specially recruited to meet urgent request from Gen. Pershing; 6,000 railway men were secured for overseas service; a large number of high-grade technicians secured for Ordnance, Engineering, Navy, and other Government departments.
(8) Organized Boys' Working Reserve in every State, with approximately 250,000 boys, and placed about 200,000 boys over 16 years and under draft age into agricultural work, besides training in camps and schools 30,000 in farm craft.
(9) Handled through special offices in the Dakotas, Nebraska, and Kansas some 18,500 men for wheat harvesting.
(10) Worked out elastic labor pooling of the longshoremen, stevedores, and marine workers in all of the important Atlantic coast ports. Estimated that efficiency of handling New York port traffic was increased 30 per cent, and that 175,000 vacancies filled in one month, when pressure for shipping was greatest. This meant an actual increase in shipping tonnage.
(11) Cooperation effected with coal operators and workers whereby some 15,000 miners were transferred from nonwar to war work.
(12) Organized a bureau for placing men handicapped by age or physical disability, and have placed some 7,500 since July 1, 1918.
(13) Established a technical, professional, commercial, and executive section to deal with high-grade, qualified applicants. This section has given special attention to finding opportunities in civil life for officers being discharged from military service.
(14) Since the signing of the armistice approximately 1,500,000 people have registered; 1,300,000 have been referred to jobs and approximately 1,000,000 placed. The employment offices made many adjustments possible by securing information on job opportunities, both locally and otherwise.
(15) Organized throughout the country some 1,850 special "Returning Soldiers, Sailors, and War Workers' Bureaus;" and coordinated the activities of the American Red Cross; Young Men's Christian Association; Young Woman's Christian Association; National Catholic War Council, including the Knights of Columbus; Jewish Welfare Board; War Camp Community Service; War Time Commission of the Churches; Salvation Army; American Federation of Labor; Council of National Defense and its State and local units; Women's Committee, Council of National Defense; American Council of Education; Federal Board for Vocational Training; War Department (Adjutant General's Staff, Morale, Personnel, and Demobilization Divisions, and the Committee on Educational and Special Training Services); Navy Department; Department of Agriculture; War Labor Policies Board of the Department of Labor into a comprehensive, cooperative plan directed by a central board to meet this problem.
(16) Stationed men in all of the important Army camps to give assistance to soldiers wanting information about job opportunities, and to call to the attention of camp commanders the cases of men whose discharge is important for industrial reasons. It is estimated that 200,000 soldiers desired and have received such information.
(17) Report secured weekly from 122 major industrial centers of the country giving barometric pressure map of employment conditions—showing shortages and surplus. These data are being used by Senate committees and the various executive departments of the Government to determine important Government policies having to do with unemployment—e. g., cancellation of contracts, rapidity of demobilization of the Army, necessity for emergency public works, and the like.

LABOR EXCHANGES IN NATIONAL PROGRAM.

(1) The operation of employment offices is universally recognized as a public function—private agencies operating on a fee basis have stimulated unemployment and increased turn over besides taking millions of dollars out of the pockets of the wage earners of the country.
(2) England with one twenty-fifth of our territory and one-half of our population has approximately 1,500 exchanges and agencies. When it is considered that New York City alone has 600 private agencies, it would seem that 1,500 offices eventually in the United States will not be an unreasonable number. Expenditures for such agencies are an investment in industrial peace.
(3) Employment offices must be labor exchanges rather than simply unemployment offices. They must secure a pooling in so far as is practicable of all job opportunities and applications in the community.
(4) To maintain confidence both of employers and employees, advisory boards, national, State, and community, are a necessity in the general plan.
(5) Study must be made of causes of unemployment, irregularity of employment, and methods of relief. A national obligation to do this in cooperation with the States and municipalities—a well organized, efficient system of labor exchanges can be the one biggest single factor in meeting the problem of unemployment which is more fraught with dangerous possibilities than at any time in the world's history.
(6) There must be no drifting back to prewar methods of handling unemployment—a well organized, unified national system of labor exchanges is vitally necessary as a permanent part of our national program.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Colorado grows facetious as to the discharge of its duty by the Committee on Appropriations. The gentleman from Colorado would have the Committee on Appropriations run amuck when it suits him to have it run amuck; but no one would protest more loudly, no one would be more vociferous in denouncement of the committee than he were it to exceed its authority and its jurisdiction in lines that did not please his fancy.

It is all very well for the gentleman to get up and abuse the Committee on Appropriations for doing its duty, but when appropriation committees in this House cease to realize and understand the responsibility placed upon them by the rules of the House and their oaths it will be a bad day for the House.

The gentleman from Colorado did not accurately state the situation when he said that the committee had stricken from this bill certain items. The committee did nothing of the kind. It did not place in the bill items for various war services, because it had no authority to make appropriations for those services. The members of the committee would have been subject to the severest criticism if they had assumed to provide for all of them, or to have selected, according to their particular fancy, those activities which they thought ought to go into the bill.

Mr. KEATING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. KEATING. I think the gentleman and the House will agree that I have not spent any great time on the floor abusing the Committee on Appropriations or any other committee of this House. What I endeavored to say was that the Committee on Appropriations knew the path that leads to the room of the Committee on Rules, and that in the past when the Committee on Appropriations desired to retain in the bill an item on which a point of order might be urged, the chairman of the committee, acting on behalf of the committee, has not hesitated to go to the Committee on Rules asking for a rule to make it in order.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Colorado is no more accurate in that statement than in the original statement that he made. It has never been the practice of the Committee on Appropriations, and I hope it never will be the practice of that committee, to bring into the House matters subject to a point of order. There have been very rare cases—and they have been so rare as to be remarkable in their infrequency—when it became necessary, in order to carry out the clearly expressed will of the House in an urgent matter or to properly provide for an appropriation regularly made, by some modification of a regulatory provision.

Mr. KEATING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. No; I can not; I have not time. But the gentleman complains that the Appropriations Committee should place in the bills every estimate and suggested expenditure——

Mr. KEATING. I never expressed any such idea.

Mr. MONDELL (continuing). That the committee might approve.

Mr. KEATING. If the gentleman will yield, I will clear that up so that he will not make a mistake.

Mr. MONDELL. Because the committee did not accede and go beyond its jurisdiction in regard to the matter.

Mr. KEATING. If the gentleman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. MONDELL. I have not yielded, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield, and the gentleman from Colorado will observe the rule.

Mr. MONDELL. Because the committee refuses to go beyond and exceed its jurisdiction and violate the rules of the House by submitting an appropriation of millions of dollars for an agency which the Congress has not provided for by law the gentleman is not pleased; and yet if it did that very thing, touching subjects the gentleman did not approve of, he would be the first to complain.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] is slightly in error and has committed a very natural error in assuming that the Committee on Appropriations had been in the habit of asking for a rule to make items in appropriation bills reported from that committee in order. That has very seldom been done, as I am informed by one of the gentlemen here. It was done, I think, during my absence, but of that I am not sure. Otherwise I do not remember of any case—although my memory might be refreshed—where the Committee on Appropriations has done that. But it is natural that the gentleman from Colorado fell into the error because various other appropriating committees have gotten into the very vicious habit of assuming that they could report anything in an appropriation bill, like the Post Office bill, the Agriculture bill, the naval bill, or the Army bill, or some of the other appropriation bills, and then walk over to the Committee on Rules and ask the Committee on Rules to report a rule making it in order. The same committees have jurisdiction to report bills covering the same legislation to bring such a bill before the House when the proposition could be carefully considered. It is a practice that has only grown up in the last four or five years. It ought to be frowned upon, but probably never will be, because since the change of the House rules making a new Committee on Rules, which formerly was a mere instrument of the House, the Committee on Rules frequently gets the idea in its head, and it will always continue, that the committee owns the House and runs the House and that it is its duty to tell the House what it shall consider. [Applause.]

In the old days the Committee on Rules never brought a matter before the House unless the House clearly indicated its desire to take up a certain proposition, which otherwise could not be called up. In charge of them, I put through this House some of the most important measures ever passed through the House. If it were to be done now gentlemen would trot to the Committee on Rules and ask for a rule for special consideration, with a limitation of debate; yet I never asked for a rule from the Committee on Rules in my days in the House, and never passed a bill with a limitation of debate proposed by the Committee on Rules. It is just the difference of going at it. I suppose it will get worse and worse until some day the House will throw the Committee on Rules through the ceiling.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Tulsa, Okla., post office and courthouse: The sum of $35,000 of the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the "post office and courthouse, Tulsa, Okla," is reappropriated and made available for necessary changes and remodeling at the said building.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. In the first place, apparently, they have got to remodel this building before they finish it. What is the necessity for it?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The Supervising Architect stated that of the original authorization for the construction of this building there remains a balance unexpended of $75,000, which amount they asked for the purpose of remodeling and repairing it. The request naturally caused the committee to inquire, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] inquires, the reason for it. They said that this is one of the boom oil towns. When the building was constructed there was a population there of 20,000, and the last census shows a population of 78,000. The receipts of the post office in 1916 amounted to $176,000; in 1917 to $262,000; in 1918 they increased to $404,000; and in 1919, from July 1 to October 1, the first quarter, they were $110,000, and for the second quarter, $126,000. They urge that the conditions as they exist are impossible, and that they absolutely need the money, and so this sum of the unexpended balance is made available.

Mr. MANN. It was not all appropriated in the first place?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And there was an allowance for a certain amount. Thereupon the Supervising Architect's Office thought it owned the money. They could not spend it on the building, and now, thinking they own the money, they want to expend it on something else. How long has this building been finished?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It has been finished since the latter part of 1917.

Mr. MANN. And now they are going to spend $35,000 on remodeling?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes; and I will say to the gentleman that the statement he makes I made when the proposition was originally submitted.

Mr. MANN. Then we both agree, but what's the answer?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The answer is that the Supervising Architect presented a statement of receipts showing that this post office is now absolutely inadequate for these people to carry on their business within the walls of the building. The receipts show that they have grown from $176,000 in 1916 to where they will be over $500,000 this year.

Mr. MANN. Is this for an addition to the post-office building?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It says to make necessary changes and remodeling.

Mr. MANN. And it wants to spend $35,000 to remodel it. At first blush, I should think we need a new Supervising Architect's Office.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The statement of the Supervising Architect was that they needed this money to extend the vestibule and make it possible to accommodate the business of the office, and as the money was available for this purpose they asked that it be appropriated instead of going to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and asking for a new authorization.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say awhile ago that there was no item of appropriation in this bill which is not authorized by law.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes; within the limit of cost.

Mr. MANN. This item is not authorized by law.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. This is within the limit of cost, authorized by law. That is what I stated to the gentleman in reply to his question. It is within the limit of cost authorized by law.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Remodeling, etc., public buildings: For remodeling, enlarging, and extending public buildings, including any necessary and incidental additions to or changes in mechanical equipment thereof, so as to provide for additional space for emergent cases, not to exceed an aggregate of $20,000 at any one building, $200,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the measure how this $200,000 is to be applied.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I can explain to the gentleman. Last year Congress made this identical appropriation as a proviso to the item for repairs of $800,000, making the total appropriation $1,000,000 under that item. When they went to make expenditures under this appropriation for the purpose of making minor repairs or to remodel at a minor expense, the comptroller ruled that inasmuch as they had this special fund for that purpose, they could not spend any of the $800,000 for any work which was in the nature of remodeling a building, and where Congress intended to give to the Treasury Department the right to make minor changes not to exceed $20,000 in any case, the result was that it tied up the expenditure of the $800,000. The purpose is to give to the department the right to make minor repairs of this character, not to exceed the sum mentioned.

Mr. WALSH. He could go ahead and start to remodel the building at a cost of $20,000 and then stop and come back and in the next bill presented to the House they would say they wanted some more money to complete the remodeling of that building. I do not know but that may account for the situation at Tulsa, Okla.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That, of course, would be a violation of the purpose of the architect as expressed to the Appropriations Committee, and if the fund were so used in any case, the Appropriations Committee would learn of it at the next session and the Congress could promptly remedy it by failing to renew this appropriation.

Mr. WALSH. They might see to it that it was remedied by giving him an additional appropriation, if the building happened to be favorably situated in the country, but I can not quite see why we should give a blanket authorization for remodeling, "enlarging, and extending public buildings, including incidental additions to or changes in the mechanical equipment," and for "additional space for emergent cases."

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The only purpose is this, undoubtedly during the year there arise emergency cases where there should be for the accommodation of the business of the post office minor extensions which, under this item, could not in any case exceed $20,000.

Mr. WALSH. Of course a number of buildings are provided where the total appropriation is not $20,000 or in that vicinity and they could take a building of that sort for which $20,000 or $25,000 has been appropriated and put an addition on it for $20,000 out of this $200,000 and give practically twice as much building as the Public Buildings Committee reported or provided for in its authorization.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Assuming the statement of the gentleman to be correct, that the Supervising Architect would do that, I can only say what I said before, it would be such an abuse of the appropriation that I have no idea the Congress would ever again grant the appropriation.

Mr. WALSH. The Supervising Architect would not do that because we have not got a Supervising Architect and have not had one for three or four years. The executive officer would never do that who is the Acting Supervising Architect, but we might get a Supervising Architect who would find it very convenient to do just that one thing. They have got a fund of $200,000 available for adding to and altering buildings, but they limit each individual case to $20,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am not at all certain as to that. While the gentleman says the Supervising Architect's Office will not do it, it looks as though that is what they were asking for permission to do directly. Last year we authorized an expenditure of $200,000 for altering or remodeling public buildings outside of the District of Columbia not including quarantine buildings.

That provision they do not ask for again this year, but in lieu of it they ask for $200,000 to remodel, enlarge, or make additions to buildings, including the buildings or enlargements and including quarantine stations. We have always tried to draw the line between the ordinary Government building and a quarantine station, so far as appropriations are concerned. Now, they have some object in view in making this change, and what is it they propose to do? This would authorize them to spend $20,000, if they desired, where they are authorized now to spend $40,000 for a public building. It might be very handy——

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I can say to the gentleman the purpose of the Supervising Architect, as expressed to the committee, is merely to carry out the idea expressed last year, and the language which the gentleman calls to my attention I have absolutely no objection to, so I suggest that either he or I offer as an amendment so as to provide exactly the language in which this appropriation was carried last year. Mr. Chairman, I move, after the word "buildings," in line 21, to amend by inserting "outside the District of Columbia, other than marine hospitals and quarantine stations."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. MANN. That does not quite cover what I was calling attention to. I do not know that it is improper. The language last year was, "for altering and remodeling completed and occupied public buildings." Of course, altering and remodeling are the same thing, and, of course, that is a duplication, and that is left out, and this year they say, "for remodeling, enlarging, and extending public buildings." Now, I take it what they propose to do out of this money appropriated is to build an addition, if they want to, whereby they can take $20,000, having only authority to do that ten times.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The purpose of it was, as stated to the committee, simply to provide for remodeling or altering where emergency cases became necessary.

Mr. MANN. Well, I quite agree as to the desirability of permitting this, but I have always observed that it was the practice of the department where they had an appropriation in certain language and that language covered what they wanted to do that when they made their estimate they made it in that language, but if they wanted to do something else they proposed new language and they do not say anything about that when they come before the committee unless somebody asks about it.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If I understand the gentleman's position, he would strike out the words "and extend"?

Mr. MANN. I do not say it ought to be stricken out, but I am asking why they are asking for this permission to enlarge and extend public buildings, that is a new proposition.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Well, if they have any reason they failed to disclose it to the committee. Their only objection is that by reason of including that particular language in the section they were unable to use any of the $800,000 for repairs in any remodeling work.

Mr. MANN. Well, certainly; and that is because they were given $200,000.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. But there was no statement made by the Supervising Architect that any occasion had arisen for broadening the language, and I am entirely willing to accept the amendment to strike out the words "and extend."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on his point of order?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if it is contemplated to make this available to buildings in process of construction and why it is not confined, as it was done last year, to completed and occupied buildings?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It is not my understanding that the language provides for buildings in the process of construction. If the gentleman will call my attention to the language he has in mind in making the inquiry, I would be glad.

Mr. WALSH. Well, the only reason that I think it applies to buildings in process of construction was that this item last year was carried in the following language:

That not to exceed $200,000 of the appropriation in this paragraph may be expended for altering and remodeling completed and occupied public buildings outside the District of Columbia other than the marine hospitals and quarantine stations.

Now, they put in here:

For remodeling, enlarging, and extending public buildings, including any necessary and incidental additions to or changes in mechanical equipment thereof so as to provide for additional space for emergent cases, etc.

Now, that, it seems to me, would permit the enlarging, changing the plan of, or the extension of a building in process of construction, provided they could do that out of the $20,000.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will say to the gentleman that the comptroller has ruled that where the Supervising Architect has a special fund for construction additional funds can not be used for that purpose, and certainly under this language no part of this fund could be used for extending the work upon a building under construction, and I am satisfied if the gentleman will read it he will reach the same conclusion.

Mr. WALSH. I do not reach that conclusion at all. That is just the point I am making.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. My information is that the comptroller has ruled that additional money can not be used where a fund is provided for the construction of the building.

Mr. WALSH. Would the gentleman have any objection to incorporating in line 21, after the word "extending," the words "completed and occupied"?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. None at all. That covers the purpose which the Supervising Architect stated to us.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman will propose that amendment, I will gladly withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts withdraws the point of order, and the gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 21, after the word "extending," insert the words "completed and occupied."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to clear up a seeming misunderstanding with regard to the language carried in the bill of the present fiscal year, appropriating $200,000 of the general appropriation for repairs, equipment, and general expenses of public buildings, for altering and remodeling completed and occupied public buildings outside of the District of Columbia. The difficulty with regard to that provision was that while that $200,000 was intended to enable the Supervising Architect to remodel in a way to enlarge and extend facilities, the language was such that the comptroller held that if the remodeling did enlarge or extend, the money could not be used. Therefore, in order to give the Supervising Architect a sum that he might use for remodeling, which would enlarge and extend facilities we put it in a new paragraph, instead of leaving it in the language of the present appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MARINE HOSPITALS.

Chicago, Ill.: For remodeling present building, $50,000; medical officers' quarters, $10,000; junior medical officers' quarters, $12,000; pharmacists' and pursers' quarters, $16,000; attendants' quarters, $33,000; in all, $121,000.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

A few minutes ago I made the suggestion to the Committee on Appropriations that before omitting the item relating to the United States Employment Service it might have been well to have asked the Committee on Rules for a rule which would have made the appropriation in order. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] took exceptions to the way in which I presented that view.

As I said at that time, Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to abuse the members of the Committee on Appropriations, and if there was anything in my remarks which could be construed as abuse, I will very gladly remove those obnoxious statements from the RECORD.

But, Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman from Wyoming tells the House that the Committee on Appropriations or the members of the Committee on Appropriations have not appealed to the Committee on Rules to make in order items on appropriation bills which would otherwise be subject to a point of order, his memory betrays him.

I have before me the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for March 13, 1918, when we were considering the legislative appropriation bill. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, offered an amendment allowing a bonus to Federal employees. A point of order was made, and the amendment was ruled out of order. And immediately the chairman of the Committee on Rules presented a rule making that exact language in order. And the rule was adopted by the House and the proposition made by the Committee on Appropriations was carried.

So, when I suggested to the Committee on Appropriations that in considering so important an item as this relating to the employment service, the committee, if necessary, should have appealed to the Committee on Rules, I was only suggesting what the committee itself had done in connection with other important legislation. Because, Mr. Chairman, the legislation proposed back there on March 13, 1918, was of little importance compared with the item I am discussing now. If you omit this appropriation for the employment service, it means you will discontinue at the end of this fiscal year this great service which has been built up all over this country, and that you will discontinue it at a time when hundreds of thousands and millions of men who were called to the service of their country are about to leave that service and seek employment.

Mr. McCORMICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. I will.

Mr. McCORMICK. Will the gentleman tell the committee how many agencies have been conducted by this service, approximately?

Mr. KEATING. I have placed those exact figures in the RECORD.

Mr. McCORMICK. I beg pardon.

Mr. KEATING. I can not place my finger on the figures now, but if the gentleman will read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD tomorrow he will find that information.

And so, Mr. Chairman, permit me to again express regret that the Committee on Appropriations did not safeguard this appropriation by securing a rule. And then, allow me to express regret that anything I may have said in this discussion should be construed by my good friend from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] as abuse of him or any other Member of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] if he knows how it is that within less than 36 hours—I think less than 20 hours—after the Committee on Appropriations had declined to insert the item in which he was so profoundly interested in the sundry civil bill that there came to Members of Congress from all over this country telegrams by the dozens and by the scores, and to further inquire if he knows whether or not those telegrams are being sent as the result of recommendations being sent out by the Department of Labor here in Washington, by telegrams to men interested in the labor movement and in the maintenance of these employment bureaus throughout the country?

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to the gentleman that there is a telephone connecting this House with the Department of Labor, and if the gentleman from Massachusetts believes that the Secretary of Labor or anyone connected with the Labor Department is conducting a propaganda, it would be perhaps well to address his question to the director of the Labor Department. I am not connected with the Labor Department.

Mr. WALSH. I thank the gentleman for the answer which he gives, containing no information. But the gentleman, though he be not connected with the Labor Department, stands here upon the floor and for the past two years has held the position of the spokesman of that department whenever any proposition has been under consideration here affecting labor. He is known throughout the country as the friend of labor, and I think rightly so, because he has advocated every measure and proposition that in any wise in his opinion would tend to benefit the interests of the laboring people throughout the United States, and he has done it ably and well and intelligently. But I thought that because the gentleman, although he is not connected with the Department of Labor, is in the confidence of the department, and is even here now standing as their spokesman and advocate and seeking to put back into the bill a measure which the Committee on Appropriations has seen fit to reject, he might know whether or not these telegrams and messages that we are getting are the result of stimulation and recommendation on the part of the labor officials under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Labor, and whether Government money is being expended to send telegrams to every city and town urging the people there who are interested in this movement to wire their Representatives and Senators, in order that this matter might be put back into the bill.

The gentleman says that I might go and get on one end of a telephone wire and ask somebody down there if that were so. The gentleman knows that this is a holiday, and that the Secretary of Labor and his office force of employees are celebrating it in rest and restful recreation, and are ceasing their labors and laborious efforts, and probably may be hereabouts, for all we know, observing the shower of telegrams that come over the postal department wires from the ends of the earth, even though it be a holiday. But I wondered how it was that so soon after the Committee on Appropriations had refused to act on this matter the telegrams began to come in. They certainly must have gotten the news from some intimate source.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from Philadelphia.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Evidently the reply of the distinguished gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] was not satisfactory to the gentleman from Massachusetts. Why not ask somebody else?

Mr. WALSH. I am sorry that the gentleman was not aware of that earlier in my remarks. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. Chairman, apropos of the matter of the Committee on Appropriations placing in an appropriation bill items of appropriation not provided for by law, let me call to the attention of my friend from Colorado and others minded as he seems to be, that this committee ought to run amuck and place in appropriation bills any items that happen to be submitted in the form of an estimate or a bill referred to the committee, whether authorized by law or not. Let me call attention to certain matters presented to the committee other than those he has referred to. There was before the committee an estimate, sent in the regular way, for an appropriation of $125,000 for a very worthy drainage work in my State. There was an estimate of $150,000, transmitted in the regular way, for an equally worthy drainage work in his State and one for a project in the adjoining State of Nebraska. In addition to that there was an estimate of a million dollars for the continuation of investigations and bills calling for an appropriation of $100,000,000 to begin the work of providing opportunities for the returning soldiers to help develop waste lands and secure farm homes. Those were all before the committee. I introduced one of them. I approve all of them. I should like to see these projects provided for. I believe they are worthy and helpful. But the committee did not feel justified in placing those items on the bill because Congress has not legislated upon the subject matter of those proposed appropriations. Our committee has no authority to appropriate for them. The Committee has no right to present propositions of that kind to the House as though they had been approved by the Congress.

It does not state the case fairly to say these items were stricken from the bill, either the item that the gentleman from Colorado refers to or the items I have referred to. They were not placed upon the bill, because we had no authority or jurisdiction in the premises. We would have been subject to severe censure had we placed them on the bill without legislative sanction, and they would all have no doubt gone out on a point of order. I would like to have seen them on the bill, but the committee would have been derelict in its duty had it attempted to make appropriations which had not been provided for for legislation.

And let me suggest this, further: Gentlemen who are very active and earnest for appropriations for the employment and other services know that the way to provide for them is through legislative committees. The legislative committees have plenty of time to act on these matters, and when legislative committees act the appropriating committees will appropriate. But until we change the rules the appropriating committees should not appropriate or attempt to appropriate until the legislative committees have acted. So far as our drainage and land reclamation work is concerned, we have been trying to secure the legislation so the appropriations can be made. Why have not the gentlemen who are now finding fault with the Appropriations Committee because it did not do something it had no authority to do been equally active in securing legislation for the Employment Service and thus give us authority to appropriate?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Repairs and preservation: For repairs and preservation of all completed and occupied public buildings and the grounds thereof, under the control of the Treasury Department, and for wire partitions and fly screens therefor, Government wharves and piers under the control of the Treasury Department, together with the necessary dredging adjacent thereto, buildings and wharf at Sitka, Alaska, and the Secretary of the Treasury may, in renting said wharf, require that the lessee shall make all necessary repairs thereto; care of vacant sites under the control of the Treasury Department, such as necessary fences, filling dangerous holes, cutting grass and weeds, but not for any permanent improvements thereon; repairs and preservation of buildings not reserved by vendors on sites under the control of the Treasury Department acquired for public buildings or the enlargement of public buildings, the expenditures on this account for the current fiscal year not to exceed 15 per cent of the annual rentals of such buildings: Provided, That of the sum herein appropriated not exceeding $125,000 may be used for marine hospitals and quarantine stations and completed and occupied outbuildings, including wire partitions and fly screens for same, and not exceeding $16,000 for the Treasury, Treasury Annex, Arlington, Liberty Loan, Butler, Winder, and Auditors Buildings in the District of Columbia: Provided further, That this sum shall not be available for the payment of personal services except for work done by contract or for temporary job labor under exigency not exceeding at one time the sum of $100 at any one building, $800,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WALSH. I want to ask the gentleman what is the necessity of these wire screens and fly screens for all of these privately owned buildings, where they were apparently provided for in last year's appropriation?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. This provides only for the current item of repairs. Screens, like everything else, wear out, I presume, and it does not involve any change of language except for the new buildings. As the Treasury Annex and the Arlington and the Liberty Loan are about complete, they are included, and that is the only change.

Mr. WALSH. Are you going to occupy those buildings in this forthcoming year?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Are you going to keep on building new annexes and new buildings by the Government and still occupying buildings that have been leased?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I know that the gentleman will be glad to hear that as to every department, with the exception of two, we have taken from them the authority to rent buildings, in order to force all those bureaus of the Government to go into buildings now owned by the Government which have been constructed in the last year or two. As to these buildings which have been recently constructed, it is certainly essential that this item for repairs should include them. It would be unwise not to do so.

Mr. McCORMICK. Will the gentleman yield for a question on that point?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. McCORMICK. Is it the policy of the committee, then, to abandon rented quarters hereafter and to house all the Government departments in these war-built structures?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It is, so far as this bill is concerned. The only exceptions are as to the Alien Property Custodian and the Interstate Commerce Commission. A very earnest plea was made by the Alien Property Custodian, who stated that as a great deal of litigation will necessarily arise concerning the work of his office, it is absolutely essential that his records be preserved, and inasmuch as he has a fireproof building he asked that we should not cause him to go into one of these temporary buildings.

Mr. McCORMICK. But it is the general policy of the committee, with these two exceptions, to work toward the time when there will be no buildings in Washington rented by the Government?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That time will arrive with the passage of this bill, so far as the departments covered by it are concerned.

Mr. WALSH. I am sure we ought to indulge in a chorus of hallelujahs when that greatly-to-be-desired event takes place.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. My statement is correct as to the departments and commissions appropriations for which are carried in this bill. There may be a bureau appropriated for by some other committee renting offices in the city, which would, of course, not be affected by our action on this bill.

Mr. WALSH. But I understand that there is hope that at some time in the future the Butler, Winder, and Liberty Loan Buildings may be vacated?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; every one of those buildings is Government owned—the Arlington, the Treasury Annex, the Liberty Loan, the Butler, the Winder, and the Auditor's Buildings, which latter is the old Bureau of Engraving and Printing. So far as I know, there are but two exceptions in this bill, the Alien Property Custodian and the Interstate Commerce Commission, that have authority to expend money for the purpose of renting buildings in the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read as follows:

Architectural competitions: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to make payment for architectural services under contracts entered into prior to the repeal of the act entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to obtain plans and specifications for public buildings to be erected under the supervision of the Treasury Department, and providing for local supervision of the construction of the same," approved February 20, 1893, including additional commissions accruing under certain of said contracts due to increase in the limits of cost of certain buildings, except as otherwise specifically provided by law, and including payment for the services from July 1, 1912, of the architect of the Hilo, Hawaii, building, specially selected under the provisions of the act approved March 4, 1911, the unexpended balances of the appropriations for architectural competitions, public buildings, for the fiscal year 1919, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is continued and made available for said purposes during the fiscal year 1920.

Mr. WALSH. I move to strike out the last word. When was the act of 1893 repealed?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Seven or eight years ago. My information is that there are two buildings—one in New Haven, Conn., and the other in Hilo, Hawaii—as to which the fees of outside architects are to be paid out of this appropriation, and for that purpose this appropriation is carried.

Mr. WALSH. Prior to eight years ago, under the provisions of the act passed in 1893, they could enter into contracts with outside architects for architectural services.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes; under what was known as the Tarsney Act, and they were paid out of the building fund.

Mr. WALSH. And they have not yet settled these contracts under that act?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. There were two buildings where, by special legislation, the employment of outside architects was authorized, and these two buildings are all that remain to be cared for in that way under this appropriation.

Mr. WALSH. It seems that it is taking quite a long time to get through with all the cases which have arisen under that law.

The Clerk read as follows:

During the fiscal year 1920 the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized, out of the appropriations "Operating supplies for public buildings" and "Operating force for public buildings," to furnish steam for the operation of pneumatic tubes of the Postal Service, as heretofore, and to pay employees in the production of said steam, as heretofore, the proceeds derived from the sale of said steam to be credited to said appropriations in proportion to the amounts expended therefrom.

Mr. WALSH. I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the committee what pneumatic tubes this refers to? I thought those had been discontinued.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. This is the current law, and refers to the pneumatic tubes which have been the subject of so much discussion. I have some recollection that in the Senate an effort was made to authorize the use of the tubes, but if the pneumatic tubes are no longer in use the item has no business here.

Mr. WALSH. If it has no business in the bill, I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Can the gentleman tell me if the tubes go out of business on the 1st of July?

Mr. WALSH. I so understood.

Mr. ROUSE. They went out of business the first of last July.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Then I see no reason for this provision.

Mr. ROUSE. There is no appropriation for them, and they are not being used.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Massachusetts to move to strike out the paragraph?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 21, strike out lines 1 to 9, inclusive.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

COAST GUARD.

For every expenditure requisite for and incident to the authorized work of the Coast Guard, as follows, including maintenance, repair, and operation of motorcycles, to be used only for official purposes.

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I have no doubt the Coast Guard may need some motorcycles. This would authorize the expenditure of any portion of $4,500,000 for motorcycles. The other day the House put a provision in the Army bill that no Army automobile should be used here in the District of Columbia, and I do not know but they included the whole United States. That referred to passenger-carrying vehicles. Of course motorcycles are passenger-carrying vehicles. Now, we propose to introduce motorcycles into the old Life-Saving Service.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will call the gentleman's attention to the language in the hope that he will arrive at the conclusion we did. It provides only for maintenance, repair, and operation, and does not authorize the purchase. The only purpose for which it could be spent would be for maintenance and operation. As a matter of fact they have 15 motorcycles.

Mr. MANN. Where did they get them?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. They got them from the Navy Department.

Mr. MANN. What authority have they to get them from the Navy Department?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It is difficult for me to state under what authority the different services got property from the Navy Department and the War Department during the war or how they procured them. They seem to have come into possession of many things that Congress did not see fit to give them. At any rate they have the motorcycles. When they asked for authority to purchase more we did not give them the authority, but the committee gave them an appropriation for maintenance and operation of the motorcycles they now have.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay and allowances prescribed by law for commissioned officers, cadets and cadet engineers, warrant officers, petty officers, and other enlisted men, active and retired, temporary and substitute surfmen, and one civilian instructor, $4,575,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. There is a decrease apparently in this appropriation, but in the act carried last year there was a proviso as to the pay of the civilian instructor after five years' service and also the pay of a cadet that is omitted this year. Was that because the committee considered the proviso carried in the act of last year permanent law?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes; permanent law.

Mr. WALSH. Neither of the provisos provided that it was to be hereafter.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That was the opinion of many people, and it was the opinion that the language carried in the bill last year was permanent law.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Rural sanitation: For special studies of, and demonstration work in, rural sanitation, including personal services, and including not to exceed $5,000 for the purchase, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, $50,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for demonstration work in rural sanitation in any community unless the State, county, or municipality in which the community is located agrees to pay one-half the expense of such demonstration work.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What authority is there for rural sanitation work?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. What is the gentleman's question?

Mr. WALSH. I was going to ask a question with reference to the rural sanitation work, but it is another item I had in mind. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

COMMISSION OF FINE ARTS.

For expenses made necessary by the act approved May 17, 1910, entitled "An act establishing a Commission of Fine Arts," including the purchase of periodicals, maps, and books of reference, to be disbursed on vouchers approved by the commission by the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds, who shall be the secretary and shall act as the executive officer of said commission, $10,500.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This item for the Commission of Fine Arts is increased. What is the increase, if it was carried in the bill of last year?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. There is an increase. The item is $10,500 and last year was $9,000. The gentleman will notice that the estimate was $11,250, but the committee recommended this slight increase in order to give them an additional clerk and a slight increase for miscellaneous expenses of the commission.

Mr. WALSH. Was it in the bill of last year?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It was; in a paragraph under "Public buildings and grounds." But as long as it is a commission the committee thought it ought to be in the bill along with the other commissions that we have just passed. It is only a rearrangement of the bill. The appropriation last year was $9,000.

Mr. WALSH. And what is the reason for the fifteen hundred dollar increase?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Twelve hundred dollars for a clerk and $300 for increase in miscellaneous expenses. The estimate was $11,250.

Mr. WALSH. I thought the gentleman said something about increased building activity.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; I said the increase was due to the fact that the committee thought it wise to grant the additional clerk, $1,200, because of increased work of the commission, and the rest of the increase is for miscellaneous expenses, making an increase of $1,500.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman say what increased work the commission has to make a clerk necessary?

If the gentleman will refer to page 682 of the hearings, he will see there a statement as to the increased work of the commission. The seven members of this commission are giving their services to the Government for nothing. They are men at the top of their profession, and have given a great deal of their time, and there has been a great increase in the number of submissions of plans to them for their consideration.

Mr. WALSH. Were these Government buildings that have been erected on the Mall and in Potomac Park and hither and yon submitted to the Fine Arts Commission?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I do not think those buildings were. I am satisfied they were not; but they did acquiesce in their construction.

Mr. WALSH. And some of these seven men are at the top of their profession, and they approved the design of some of these buildings that have been scattered around this town?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That was not my understanding. They did not object to their construction, although they were not in any way responsible for their design.

Mr. WALSH. Can they in any way become responsible for or hasten their removal?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I think that the gentleman from Massachusetts will come nearer hastening their removal than the Commission of Fine Arts. I do not think they have any power to do it.

Mr. WALSH. I do not know why they should get this increase in the appropriation if they are acting without compensation. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent expenses: For furniture and other equipment and repairs thereto, $2,500; law books, books of reference, periodicals, stationery, and supplies, $1,000; traveling expenses, $5,000; printing and binding to be done at the Government Printing Office, $7,500; experts and temporary assistants in the District of Columbia and elsewhere to be paid at a rate not exceeding $8 per day, and temporary clerks, stenographers, or typewriters in the District of Columbia to be paid at a rate not exceeding $100 per month, $10,000; medical examinations, traveling and other expenses, and loss of wages payable to employees under section 21 of the act of September 7, 1916, and for miscellaneous items, $2,000; in all, $28,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. There is quite a substantial increase in both of these last two paragraphs, one from $63,000 to $91,000 and the other from $24,500 to $28,000.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I can tell the gentleman the reason. The greatly increased number of employees of the Government engaged in hazardous work during the past year necessarily increased the number who are entitled to the benefits of the employees compensation act. This necessitates a greatly increased number of investigations—investigations that ought to be made in order to protect the Government. That accounts for the action of the committee as to one paragraph.

As to the other paragraph, the increase of the amount is absolutely necessary because the awards were necessarily increased. Thousands of employees are now entitled to the benefits of this employees' compensation fund, and we have to pay them, and it is a mere question of mathematics. Where they are entitled to compensation it has to be paid. The increased administrative force is to enable them to properly investigate those claims, and I know that the gentleman will agree that that ought to be done.

Mr. WALSH. What claims?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The claims of persons many of whom may not be entitled to the benefits of the fund—in the case of an employee of the Government who is killed or who is injured in some accident. Where there is an injury there may be a question as to the extent of the injury, and this commission has to investigate that.

Mr. WALSH. They do not have to do much investigating if the man is dead.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. In case of injury, certainly you have to find out the extent of the injury. If the gentleman will look at the estimates——

Mr. WALSH. Oh, we have not had time to look at the estimates. You could not get copies of the hearings until this morning or copies of the bill. I am sorry to delay the proceedings, but this is the only way to get information.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is always the case with every bill that is reported——

Mr. WALSH. From this committee.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. And when I tell the gentleman that the hearings were available yesterday, of course it does not help the situation.

Mr. WALSH. They were not available yesterday. I tried to get them last night after the House adjourned.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It was unfortunate that the gentleman could not get a copy, because they were printed and were available and were secured by others.

Mr. WALSH. I did finally get a copy from a member of the committee, but they were not to be had generally.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's question is predicated on the apparent increase in the appropriation.

As a matter of fact, there is a decrease in the appropriation. I think it is $200,000 less than the appropriation, with a deficiency, for the current year.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. There was a deficiency of $700,000 in addition to the regular appropriation of $500,000, and this year's estimate was $1,500,000; but the committee has recommended $1,000,000, because we believe they can get through on this amount.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I know; but that is not available until July 1, 1919, and remains available until June 30, 1920.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I should say the estimate was $1,500,000 and they did reduce it to $1,250,000 finally.

Mr. WALSH. That is very close; that is almost what the bill provides; but about these investigations I do not understand, now that many of these people who have been working for the Government in hazardous employments have ceased their connection with the Government in that capacity, that there is going to be required a great army of investigators running around to find out how men are killed or injured.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Unfortunately it is because of a lack of force that they are way behind in their investigations.

Mr. WALSH. It is not because of a lack of force.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It is because the force they have is inadequate. The hearings will also show that it covers a transfer of several employees now in the office and being paid out of the lump sum to the statutory roll, and there has been a reduction in the lump sum.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I renew the motion. I have taken a great deal of interest in this compensation business. I believe I got the first law that was passed on the subject of compensation for Government employees; that is on the Panama Canal act, an amendment offered on the floor; but it ought not to be a very difficult matter to ascertain in regard to the injury of a Government employee working in some department or bureau of the Government.

You could get fairly good information from the bureau or department in which the man served. Now, it is proposed that the office expenses in Washington shall be equal to more than 10 per cent of the amount of the compensation which is paid out. That does seem at first blush, at least, an exorbitant overhead charge. If we are to pay compensation upon that basis on all the insurance we write it makes a pretty large office force. I have not counted up to see how many employees there were in the office here. Of course, there are three commissioners at $4,000, and I take it that one commissioner would do the work a great deal better than the three; but still that is not the fault of the commission, but an overhead charge of 10 per cent, after the facilities are all furnished through other bureaus to make most of the investigations, would seem at first blush to be a very high overhead charge.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Miss RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 34 and the paragraph beginning in line 8.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. For what purpose, may I ask?

Miss RANKIN. To offer an amendment in the way of a proviso. This makes an appropriation of $200,000, according to sections 3 and 4 of the act approved July 9, 1918, and in that act, in section 4, the second proviso is, to cooperate with State boards of health for the prevention and control of such diseases within the State, and the third, to control and prevent the spread of those diseases in interstate traffic. To that I wish to add a proviso, "that no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay male physicians for the physical examination of females."

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will say to the lady from Montana that there is, on page 39, a provision for an interdepartmental social hygiene board, which administers that $1,000,000 fund which, I think, the lady from Montana has in mind, and that the item to which she refers, on page 34, refers only to the Bureau of the Public Health Service and that bureau under this appropriation does not cause to be made the examination to which she objects. The examinations she has in mind are included in the work of the interdepartmental social hygiene board, under the section which authorizes them to cooperate with the boards of health of the States for the purpose of isolating and detaining them. Is not that it?

Miss RANKIN. This is in chapter 15 of the act approved July 9, 1918. This other appropriation is for these hospitals, and I have no objection to that. That has nothing to do with the detention and with the examination of the women.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. There are two funds. There is a fund of $1,400,000 to be spent during this year in cooperation with the boards of health of the various States in the treatment of this disease. Then there is $1,400,000 for the same purpose for the next year. Then there is $1,000,000 that is to be used in cooperation with the States for the purpose of isolating and detaining persons having this disease. Then there is still another fund of $200,000 for the purpose of establishing this division in the Bureau of the Public Health Service. It is to this latter fund that this paragraph refers. Now, the fund of $1,400,000 which is used in cooperation with the boards of health of the States is under the control of the Interdepartmental Social Hygiene Board, and her amendment should be offered when we reach that paragraph and not to the appropriation for this division of the Public Health Service.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the lady from Montana?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I must object at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Employees' compensation fund: For the payment of compensation provided by "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, including medical, surgical, and hospital services, and supplies provided by section 9, and the transportation and burial expenses provided by sections 9 and 11, $1,000,000, to be available until expended.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, the next section in the bill, relating to the Federal Board for Vocational Education, is a subject in which a very great many Members of the House are deeply interested, and the proviso carried in the paragraph affects a very radical change in the existing system of compensation for the director and other employees of that board. I understood there was a tentative agreement that the committee should rise at 5 o'clock, and I hope the chairman will do that now, so that we can let this matter go over until Monday.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. All right. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 16104) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

HOUR OF MEETING ON MONDAY, FEBRUARY 24.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns on Sunday it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. on Monday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-morrow, Sunday, it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. on Monday.

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object, I hope the gentleman from South Carolina will agree to go back to this item on page 34 if we agree to meet at 11 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I would be glad to talk with the gentleman about it. I have made objection in the Committee of the Whole. I told the gentleman from Illinois that I would talk with him about it.

Mr. MADDEN. I will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. on Monday? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

HOSPITAL AND SANATORIUM FACILITIES.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 13026, the hospital bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13026) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide hospital and sanatorium facilities for discharged sick and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to disagree to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Nebraska rise?

Mr. SLOAN. For the opportunity to object to its going immediately to conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SLOAN. I object to its going immediately to conference; yes, sir.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, one minute. The gentleman and I had a little conference awhile ago, and I understood from him that he thought the bill, perhaps, ought to be printed. There is no objection on my part that it be printed, so that Members can inform themselves in regard to it, and I can call it up again Monday. I would rather to do that than have it sent to the committee.

Mr. MANN. Printed with the Senate amendments?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] asks unanimous consent that the bill be printed with the Senate amendments indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave of absence, indefinitely, for my colleague, Mr. STEVENSON, on account of illness.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

RETENTION OF MILITARY UNIFORMS AND EQUIPMENT.

Mr. DENT, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted a conference report on the bill (H. R. 13366) permitting any person who served in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps in the present war to retain his uniform and personal equipment and to wear the same under certain conditions, for printing under the rule.

VOLUNTARY ENLISTMENT IN THE REGULAR ARMY.

Mr. DENT, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, also presented for printing under the rule the conference report and accompanying statement on the bill (S. 5279) authorizing the voluntary enlistments in the Regular Army, and for other purposes, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1226).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 5279) to authorize the resumption of voluntary enlistment in the Regular Army, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the amendment of the House insert the following:

"Provided, That from and after the approval of this act, one-third of the enlistments in the Regular Army of the United States shall be for a period of one year, and the remaining two-thirds thereof shall be for the period of three years. Any person enlisting under the provisions of this act shall not be required to serve with the reserves. The pay of the men enlisted hereunder shall be the same as that provided by the act entitled 'An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States,' approved May 18, 1917: Provided further, That after the expiration of one year those enlisting for the period of three years may be discharged in the discretion of the Secretary of War under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by him after one year of service."

And the House agree to the same.

S. H. DENT, Jr.,
W. J. FIELDS,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

GEO. E. CHAMBERLAIN,
G. M. HITCHCOCK,
F. E. WARREN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (S. 5279) to authorize the resumption of voluntary enlistments in the Regular Army, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed upon, to wit, instead of providing for a period of enlistments for one year only, as decided by the House, the conferees agreed that one-third of the enlistments should be for a period of one year and the remaining two-thirds for a period of three years. The conferees adopted the House provision exempting enlistments from service in the reserve. An agreement was reached as to the House provision making the pay of enlisted men the same as that of the act of May 18, 1917, the act providing for the temporary increase in the Army. The provision was also agreed upon to the effect that those enlisting for three years might be discharged, at the discretion of the Secretary of War, after the expiration of a period of one year.

VALIDATION OF CERTAIN WAR CONTRACTS.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] in reference to the bill validating contracts? I think the conferees made a partial report.

Mr. DENT. The conferees reported back a further disagreement.

Mr. MANN. As to the complete bill?

Mr. DENT. As to the complete bill.

Mr. MANN. When does the gentleman intend to call it up?

Mr. DENT. I intend to call it up on Monday.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the mining question is still unsettled?

Mr. DENT. Yes; the mining question is still unsettled.

PRINTING THE NEW REVENUE ACT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 72.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there shall be printed 62,700 copies of the regulations 45 relating to the income tax and war-profits and excess-profits tax under the revenue act of 1918 (preliminary edition relating to the income tax on individuals)—19,200 copies for the use of the Senate and 43,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, the same to be distributed through the folding rooms.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, there is no revenue act of 1918. How can they get out official regulations concerning something which does not exist?

Mr. KITCHIN. I expect the gentleman technically is correct.

Mr. MANN. I do not desire to be technical about it at all. I concede the necessity of printing the stuff.

Mr. KITCHIN. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue asked me to have this number printed, so that the Senate could take it up on Monday and have it sent out at once.

Mr. MANN. Why has he not authority to print?

Mr. KITCHIN. He has the authority to print there, but Members get requests for them.

Mr. MANN. It seems strange to send out a regulation officially prescribed by the Treasury Department, referring to a certain act which is not an act. It may be by the time it is sent out.

Mr. KITCHIN. It may be by the time it is printed, because I understand they sent it to Boston. I think Mr. Tumulty took it up to be signed.

Mr. MANN. I had a letter to-day from a gentleman who put a question which seemed quite proper. He pays an income tax. He said that he had seen that the Treasury Department, which was not yet given any law on the subject of the new tax, proposed to require a return by March 15; that he had been having correspondence with the Treasury Department about some money due to him on account of the death of his son in the Army, which had now extended over 11 months, and they were not prepared to do anything because they did not have the information which they must secure from somewhere, he did not know where. Everybody admitted that the money was due, but they can not pay it promptly. He wanted to know why a Government that could start to collect taxes before the law allowed it might not be able to pay its bills after 11 months? [Laughter.]

Mr. KITCHIN. They ought to give him a good answer to that. I do not know what it will be.

Mr. MANN. I can tell him what it will be—a Democratic administration. [Laughter.] That is the easiest answer to make to my constituent at the present time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE BORLAND, OF MISSOURI.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, it becomes my sad duty to announce to the House the death of our late colleague, the Hon. WILLIAM P. BORLAND, a Representative from the State of Missouri. Mr. BORLAND died on February 20, 1919, day before yesterday, at base hospital No. 301, at Coblentz, Germany.

At a later date I will ask the House to set aside a day for tribute to the life and distinguished public services of my colleague. For the present I offer the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 601.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The resolution was agreed to; and the Speaker announced as the committee on the part of the House Mr. ROMJUE, Mr. RUCKER, Mr. ALEXANDER, Mr. BOOHER, Mr. DICKINSON, Mr. HAMLIN, Mr. SHACKLEFORD, Mr. ESSEN, Mr. IGOE, Mr. DYER, Mr. HENSLEY, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. DECKER, Mr. RUBEY, Mr. SHERLEY, Mr. MONDELL, Mr. LITTLE, Mr. GOOD, Mr. ANTHONY, and Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the Speaker of the House be added to the committee. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House, under the order heretofore adopted, adjourned until Sunday, February 23, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, February 23, 1919.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m., and was called to order by Mr. SHERLEY as Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou Great Father Soul, in whom we live and move and have our being, we bless Thee for the deep moral and spiritual excellence resident in the heart of man, which moves him to deeds of self-sacrifice in behalf of others, liberty, truth, right, justice, which excite in his fellows admiration, gratitude, praise.

We are here to-day in memory of three men who died in the harness, striving for the betterment of the American citizen, as Senators of the National Congress. Long may their works live in the heart of the true American to inspire those who shall come after them, that the American institutions may live an ensample to all mankind.

Comfort, we beseech Thee, all to whom they were nearest and dearest, by the angels of faith, hope, love, in the overruling providence of the living God, who hath decreed that life is stronger than death and love shall never die.

"Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me."

"In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also."

Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with the reading of the Journal to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky moves to dispense with the reading of the Journal. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE LATE SENATOR HUGHES, OF NEW JERSEY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the special order for to-day.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. EAGAN, by unanimous consent,

Ordered, That Sunday, February 23, 1919, be set apart for addresses on the life, character, and public services of Hon. WILLIAM HUGHES, late a Senator from the State of New Jersey.

Mr. EAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolutions, which I ask the Clerk to report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey offers the resolutions which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 602.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. WILLIAM HUGHES, late a Senator of the United States from the State of New Jersey.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House, at the conclusion of the exercises of this day, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The resolutions were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EAGAN] will take the chair.

Mr. EAGAN took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, no one who knew WILLIAM HUGHES will ever forget him. He was a man through and through. His life history shows it. Very few men born in 1872 and dying before reaching the age of 50 years have filled so many positions as did my friend. Coming to this country from Ireland when he was only 8 years old and working in the silk mills from 11 years on; studying stenography at night, taking his place in that profession and as official reporter of a court; studying law; a soldier in the War with Spain; elected to Congress; defeated at his second election, then reelected; appointed as a judge of one of our own New Jersey courts; elected as a Senator from the State of New Jersey; and dying in harness, his life went through more vicissitudes, more trials, and more success than usually fall to older men with more apparent chance in the beginning of life.

He was a devoted husband and father, he was a loving friend, he was a determined supporter of whatever he thought right; a supporter when he was in the absolute minority, and never untrue to it when he came to have the power. His death was a great loss to this country, because he took such a determined and patriotic interest in all public affairs.

I spoke of natural advantages perhaps wrongly. I sometimes think that a young boy who learns to know men by selling newspapers in the streets or who learns early to know the responsibilities of business, of work, and of life by having something to do when he is young takes hold of life more quickly and with more energy than do those who are brought up in idleness and taken care of until they become of full age. I often wish that I had had that training myself, so that I could have started in life earlier.

The keynote of the early thought of WILLIAM HUGUES was to better the condition of the people with whom he had worked in those silk mills and the condition of every laborer in the whole United States. I am sure not all of us agree with him that this ought to be done by national legislation. Some of us were educated in the idea that the States should take care of the necessities of children and laborers, according to the conditions of the climate and surrounding population; that possibly a different rule had to be made for country districts than for the cities, or for the South than the North; but his energy knew no bounds, and it was crowned with the most tremendous success.

This morning I have taken a memorandum from the index of the earlier Congresses of which Mr. HUGHES was a Member. In his first session has was modest and made no speeches.

In the second session of the Fifty-eighth Congress, from December, 1903, to April, 1904, we find that he proposed amendments to the naval appropriation bill and the Post Office appropriation bill. If I remember aright they were amendments proposing eight-hour laws. He introduced a bill for the building of a national museum of war. He made remarks on convict labor, on the eight-hour law, on labor legislation, on the pay of letter carriers, and on prison-made mailbags.

In the next session, in 1904, he again pressed his amendment to the naval appropriation bill and made remarks on armor plate, the eight-hour law, the Navy, railroad rates, special mail facilities, and also on the Passaic River.

In the next session we find again his amendments proposed to the naval bill. It took him years to get through that eight-hour amendment. He also proposed amendments to the penal laws with reference to labor strikes. He made remarks on antitrust legislation, wages at the Panama Canal, the deportation of aliens, the eight-hour law, the causes of financial panics, Government liability to employees, strikes, railway mail pay, and the cause of hard times.

In the next session he made remarks on the copyright law, on industrial peace, the use of the injunction, Lincoln's views on labor and capital, the right to vacation of postal employees, and the protection of aliens.

In the second session of the Sixty-first Congress he made remarks on the arrest of Members, on railroad legislation, on the doctrine of contempt in the courts, on the increase of the Navy, on structural materials, on search warrants, on publicity of campaign contributions, and so forth. But as he went on, and after he was elected to the Senate, his energies found wider fields. He was relied on in the Judiciary Committee. His judgment as a lawyer was always sound. His energy for his country was always determined, and the same feeling that made him care for the laborer and for his associates made him care for the whole people of all these United States, and made him a man beloved and respected by his associates in the Senate, and made his death a real loss to this country.

I have always stood firmly against too much arbitrary restriction of immigration. This poor Irish boy, coming here at the age of 8, is an example of what can be done by and how good an American can be made of some one born abroad.

I have always been a believer in giving a boy a chance to learn something about life. Of course, I believe in the strictest regulation of the work of the young, but I believe that people ought to have a chance to learn what to do in the world at a reasonably early age, and not be kept until they are 23 or 24 years old before they are supposed to have finished their education and gotten to work. This man is an example of that.

I believe that religion and morality make for the benefit of society. This man is an example of that.

Beloved of all, idolized by his family, a despiser of wealth, a lover of his country and his kind, and a faithful public servant, he has gone to his reward.

I believe that the State of New Jersey, as well as the United States, will always be proud of the life, character, and achievements of WILLIAM HUGHES, Representative and Senator from my own State.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, the great emancipator, who said, "God must love the common people, because He made so many of them," also said:

The prudent penniless beginner in the world labors for wages a while, saves a surplus with which to buy land or tools for himself, then labors for himself another while, and at length hires another beginner to help him. This is the just and generous and prosperous system which opens the way to all, gives hope to all, and consequent energy to progress and improvement of conditions to all.

The Senator of the United States whose passing we mourn to-day was a "prudent penniless beginner and labored for wages." With few advantages and overcoming many obstacles—by dint of the courage, industry, and persistence of the bright Irish lad that he was—he so builded upon the foundation afforded in the few years he was privileged to attend school that when the opportunity came and he entered the law office of Judge Griggs, who afterwards became the governor of New Jersey and later the Attorney General of the United States, there was no danger of failure for this boy. Nor was it wonderful that he forged ahead in the legal profession and became a lawyer sought by the client who wanted a jury convinced of the righteousness of his side of the case in controversy.

Rugged, honest, direct, Lawyer HUGHES, in a manner peculiarly his own, was successful in presenting to a jury the real facts as they existed, and his case was won.

So much for the "tools he had bought for himself and his labors for himself another while" in his successful practice of the law.

But WILLIAM HUGHES did not see fit to continue his labors in a vineyard where he might in a decade have readily accumulated a competence. He failed to "hire another beginner to help him" go on and on and build up a large and lucrative practice and thus take further advantage of the opportunities open to the "penniless beginner."

Instead, he came to Congress, where he gave to his constituents, his State, and his country the best there was in him.

Many of us had the pleasure of serving in this House with him, and we all know that his splendid mind, his good heart, and his fullest energy were poured into his untiring labors.

Not only did this man enjoy the admiration and confidence of the membership of this House, but he could not help knowing that he was regarded with the deepest affection. We enjoyed his ready wit and humor; we admired his honesty, ability, and industry; and we loved his human kindness and sympathy.

It was characteristic of the man to prefer to reenter the legislative branch of the Government, where his responsibility was to the people who elected him as well as to the whole American Nation, rather than to preside as a judge in the high office to which he was called by the then governor of New Jersey, now President of the United States.

After his election to the United States Senate I found myself in a new relationship with WILLIAM HUGHES—one which might, in the order of things, have been difficult, strained, or possibly unpleasant, but just the reverse proved true. Times without number I visited him in the Senate or in his office to consult with him on matters of interest to the people of the district I represent. I invariably found him most courteous, interested, and ready to cooperate fully in every matter I brought to his attention, and I always felt stronger in having the support of his opinion and wise judgment.

Mr. Speaker, I pay sincere tribute to-day to the memory of Senator HUGHES.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I knew the late Senator HUGHES intimately during the last 12 years of his life, and each and every day I knew him to be a man in all that the term implies. I first knew him as a Member of this House, and served with him. He had been a Member of the Fifty-eighth Congress, out in the Fifty-ninth Congress, and back in the Sixtieth, and I served with him during his subsequent service until he went to the Senate.

My first recollection of him was his energy and his desire to ever hold aloft and aid the man who seemed to need help. The 20,000,000 men and women of the Republic who serve in one capacity or another for a salary never had in the last 12 years, I am sure, a more honorable, able, and effective friend in either branch of the Federal Congress than Senator HUGHES. In season and out, he always offered some amendment, always made some contention, to help them; always striving for their welfare; always guarding their every ache and pain; always alert to their every desire.

Life is so short and so uncertain, almost like the passing of a day, it seems to me that no tribute could be more beautiful and appreciative than that he was a man who fought for the man who really needed fighting for.

So many of us in the country are able to fight for ourselves; still there is a much larger number, for one reason or another, that are unable to fight for themselves. Senator HUGHES devoted his attention, energy, and ambition to them. He was all they would have him be—he was their friend.

Death always comes too soon, and when it strikes down a man so full of usefulness, so full of activity, so full of true worth, so full of accomplishment, so full of achievements, it makes the maxim seem more real and better understood.

Born across the seas in a land other than this one, coming to our country, I believe, at 8 years of age, it seems to me it sets a beautiful example of what can be achieved by a healthy, earnest, honest, faithful endeavor.

As the onrushing tide of time knocks at the hearts of all of us our ambitions are interrupted so many times, the hills in front seem so high and difficult to climb, still the highest summits are reached one by one, one after another. This life that has passed must in the very nature of things be a true beacon light of hope to the struggles of the poor boys of the land everywhere. We first find him here as a Congressman serving a district with a determined interest and capability, and his capabilities were recognized on both sides the aisle and throughout the length and breadth of the country.

Then we have him selected for the bench as a judge, to pass upon the rights and liberties of men. He served there with distinction. Later he achieved what must be almost the topmost pinnacle of party desire to a man in public life, a place in the Senate of the United States. How painful it must be for men who toil for better days and legislation throughout the country to know and to think that his life was stricken down at the age of 46, and everyone must feel and know that it came too soon. Always unselfish, always generous, always hopeful, always dependable, always true, are encomiums that are entitled to be placed about the life and character of the late Senator WILLIAM HUGHES.

But his life and character appeal to me most strongly for another reason. He spent no time and devoted none of his energies to teaching himself or the populace that he was not as are other men. He preferred to be as other men; he preferred to be one of them. He was one of them. He was among them; he shared their aches and pains; he enjoyed their hopes and ambitions; he enjoyed their pursuits and successes; he mourned and grieved at their defeat and their disappointments. The Nation may well pause this Sunday morning and pay tribute to the life and character of this brilliant, worthy, and distinguished son. He was all that we would have him be. He was all his loved ones would have him be. He was all the Nation would have him be. He was a man. He was an American.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I loved Senator HUGHES. It was my good fortune to be closely associated with him personally. We disagreed occasionally in legislative matters. Our minds did not always run in the same channel, but he was one of the fairest of antagonists. He was one of the most ingenious of advocates for that which he believed. His frankness was proverbial.

He came from the great land of poetry, of song, of philosophy, of all the things that go to make up the splendid features of human history. He was typical of the good things of the great race from which he sprang. I think he never had a selfish desire even in his political aspirations. He did not seek so much for himself the honors of his country, but rather he sought his country's honors that he might serve his country's good. It has been said by speakers who have preceded me that special emphasis was placed by him upon legislative activities for the laboring man. That is true. That undoubtedly was the passion of Senator HUGHES's life, but the fact that that was his great passion is not to be taken as an evidence of his failure to realize all the deep, broad questions of national policy. That he did realize these things was evidenced by the fact that his colleagues in this House, when the change in party control came and when the change came in the rules of the House in the selection of committees, by unanimous vote made him a member of the great Committee on Ways and Means, and in the caucus of his own party he was made a member of the Committee on Committees. When he left us here and went to the Senate of the United States he at once became a member of one of its highest committees.

Personally he was a man of most lovable disposition, happy, humorous—not only humorous, but witty. I suppose he had enemies, but he had none here. I never heard aught said of Senator HUGHES among those who were associated with him here, except that his was one of the most lovable characters that had ever been known to those with whom he was associated. He had a nimble intellect, a wonderfully adroit manner. He saw not only the big things but he saw the little things in relation to the big things. He studied them with much care. He knew a great deal intuitively, and to that intuitive inspiration with which God had gifted him he added by a close and careful study of not only the fundamentals of the law but the fundamentals of human nature and human character. He was a strong, youthful, powerful man, and it seems a pity to us, who grope here through the darkness of our misunderstandings, that he should have been taken at so early an age from the sphere of the activities of the Nation and of the world.

Mr. FOSTER. It was my pleasure to be associated with the late Senator HUGHES during most of his service in the House of Representatives beginning with the Sixtieth and each succeeding Congress until he was elected to the United States Senate, except for a short period of time when he acted as judge of the court in New Jersey under appointment by then Gov. Wilson, now President of the United States.

Mr. HUGHES was a young man at his death, having but reached his greatest usefulness. His life was an example of what a man with industry, honesty, and integrity can do for himself.

He was born in Ireland in 1872 and came with his parents to the United States in 1880. He worked in the mills in Paterson, N. J., when a boy, and so his education in school was limited. While working in these mills he saw the injustice being done his fellow workers and so became a leader among them in an endeavor to correct the wrongs that then existed. While employed in the mills he studied stenography and typewriting at night, afterwards studied law, and as attorney he defended the employees of these mills against what he believed to be tyranny of their employers and against the outrageous injunction of the courts which deprived them of their just rights as American citizens. In his legislative capacity he endeavored to correct these wrongs which were suffered by the working people throughout the country by legislation which would be fair and just to all concerned. He was not a radical and unreasonable advocate of labor legislation but was fair and just in his work to better the conditions of those who toiled for a living.

He served his country with honor during the Spanish-American War, though not participating in any active fighting at the front, yet he did his duty as a true soldier in whatever capacity the Government chose to place him.

He was a true American, and in the late war with Germany he was true to his country, working zealously for the success of our country in its efforts to overthrow autocracy and firmly establish liberty of all people of the world and right the wrongs they had suffered. To be a Member of Congress, judge of the court in his State, and United States Senator before he had reached the age of 46 is a high honor which but few men attain.

Mr. HUGHES abhorred hypocrisy. He was always frank and straightforward in all his acts, both public and private. He did not hesitate to declare his position on any public question when he investigated the subject under consideration. He loved his friends and was always happiest when he could do something for them, though he would not favor a friend when he believed it was not for the best interest of the public.

Always generous, true to his friends, and always fair and considerate with those with whom he differed. As a soldier, judge, Member of the House of Representatives, and United States Senator, he measured up to the full requirement of each. His home was ideal, and he leaves to mourn his death a wife and two daughters.

Mr. HUGHES, or rather "BILLY" HUGHES, as we called him, was my close personal friend and associate. He will be missed, but we will cherish a fond recollection of him through this life.

The late Senator HUGHES and the late Senator OLLIE M. JAMES, of Kentucky, were close personal and political friends, having served together in the House and entered the United States Senate at the same time. In the House they served on the Ways and Means Committee; in the Senate together on the Finance Committee. They were both intense Americans and exerted great influence in both legislative bodies. They were true, capable legislators, and always stood for the principle of equal and exact justice to all men, with special privilege to none. Their service was conspicuous, honorable, and it was their endeavor to do the best that was possible for all the people of their country. They truly represented their States and the Nation; both will be missed in the legislative bodies of which they were able and honest and capable Members.

Mr. RAMSEY. Mr. Speaker, I have always considered it a privilege to have had a personal acquaintance with the late Senator HUGHES and a great honor to know that there existed between him and me a very close friendship. I believe his great successes were very materially brought about by the many friends that he made, who so loyally supported him during his whole life. Real friends are difficult to make and quite impossible to retain if one has an ulterior design or feels that through friendship he is to be personally benefited. He then can not be natural. But the friends of "BILLY" HUGHES were such as were created by the personality of the man and not because of a designed influence or for a far-reaching thought of personal advancement; they were such as arise and exist from the irresistible influence of the proper conduct of man in all of his undertakings and because of the true worth and value of such undertakings. His career was a most remarkable as well as successful one. Born in a foreign land and arriving in this country at an early age—I think he was about 8 years old—he made Paterson, N. J., his home. His father was without means, and while his son had the advantages of our liberal school system, his opportunities for educational advantages were necessarily limited. As a youth we find him employed, earning his own living in one of the silk mills of the city of his adoption. But he was an energetic, systematic young man, with an indomitable will and with the push that meant success and accomplishment. His career afterwards became varied but consistent—a lawyer's clerk, a student of stenography, a court stenographer, a lawyer, a Member of the House of Representatives, a judge of the court of Passaic County, N. J., again and for several terms a Member of this House, and then the distinguished United States Senator of his State—a wonderful advancement in a short time and one of great accomplishment, especially with only the meager opportunities that were his in the beginning. Is it not an inspiring actuality to the young men of to-day to stir themselves to higher endeavors, that they might attain an honored and respected position in governmental affairs and statesmanship?

Mr. Speaker, permit me to give somewhat in detail my knowledge of and association with our late Senator. I first knew him when he was a very young man. Our acquaintance became of a more intimate character when he acted as the official stenographer of our courts in Bergen County. There I saw him frequently, associated with him, and often we lunched together. I learned to know him well and liked and admired him. Little did he think at that time of the future that was before him and the important part he was to play in the activities of the Government of his State and Nation!

Admitted to the bar of our State at or about that time, he entered upon his new duties with zeal, determination, and success. He participated in important litigation and legal work in his home county, which brought him prominently before the people, and this undoubtedly was the stepping stone to his future political and brilliant career. In the year 1902 the Republican Party of the sixth congressional district of New Jersey had placed in nomination as its candidate for Member of the House of Representatives Col. William Barbour, of Paterson. Col. Barbour was a most delightful citizen, a manufacturer of magnitude, and a business man of recognized ability and capacity. It was generally accepted that he would be elected by a big vote. A short time after, the Democratic convention was held in the city of Paterson. This party had no active candidate for the nomination of Congressman. A personal friend of mine, Col. Alfred T. Holley, of Hackensack, was sought to accept it, but he declined, believing it impossible to defeat Col. Barbour. At last the convention turned its attention to the popular young man and able lawyer of Paterson, "BILLY" HUGHES, and he was selected as its choice and candidate to run for the office. During the campaign I distinctly remember meeting him at the Ho-ho-Kus fair grounds with a Republican friend of mine, Hosey Osborne by name, who was introducing him to the Bergen County people. "BILLY" said to me, "BONE, you know I am in the congressional race and am trying to win. I hope you will not fight me too hard." I answered by saying, "Well, you know, BILLY, I am on the other side of the fence and have always been quite active; however, I will say that whenever an inquiry is made concerning you as to your fitness and character, I will always tell the truth." He replied, "I thank you, and am satisfied."

"BILLY" HUGHES won that election, and by doing so started upon an upward career, which brought honor to himself, happiness to his friends and acquaintances, and beneficial results to his district and State. But he had an interruption in his congressional privileges, being defeated at one time. He, however, was not long out of public service, for his legal knowledge, sound reasoning, and recognized stand for true justice brought to him the appointment of judge of the court of common pleas of his county. In this position he acquitted himself well and won the respect and good feelings of all the lawyers who practiced before him. He seemed to be restless with judicial work, it being of a different character than any of his former activities, and he again became a candidate for Congress. He was successful in the election and was ever after and up until the time of his death continuously engaged as a legislator in the Federal Congress. In the Hall of this House he improved himself wonderfully, applying himself strictly to his work, participating actively in legislation, increasing in popularity not only among his colleagues but also with his constituency at home. Senator HUGHES had perspicuity and initiative. These characteristics were forcefully and prominently illustrated in his election to the United States Senate. The dominating power of the Democratic Party in New Jersey was anxious that John W. Westcott, subsequently the attorney general of the State, should be elected to the Senate. James Smith, of Newark, and a former United States Senator, was a candidate, and whose defeat was seemingly especially desired by the then governor, Hon. Woodrow Wilson. There was also a third candidate, a Mr. McDermott, I think was his name.

"BILLY" HUGHES, with his keenness of intellect, truly observed the situation, and, practically without consultation with anybody, concluded to be a candidate. He had been in public life for a number of years, had a large personal acquaintance, and realized that in all parts of the State he was known by reputation at least. His candidacy resulted in the withdrawal from the contest a few days before the primary of Mr. Westcott, in order to make certain the defeat of Mr. Smith, and "BILLY" HUGHES received a sweeping victory by the preferential vote cast. At that time United States Senators in New Jersey were not elected by the direct vote of the people, but there was a provision of law which permitted the voter to express his preference for the office upon the official primary ballot. The moral obligation which such a vote carried with it resulted in the legislature electing Mr. HUGHES United States Senator at its next session—a striking illustration of the man as he really was, undertaking practically alone so great a thing and accomplishing it. He was not a great and distinguished statesman nor was he a wonderful orator. He did attain such a position that it can be truthfully said of him that he was a statesman, and had he lived I believe that, in the consideration of great matters of government which necessarily would have been brought before him, he would have attained an eminence of superiority.

In his public expressions he had force; he portrayed fine reasoning and excellent logic. He believed in the subject matters he advocated and in himself, and so was a very pleasing and convincing talker and speaker. He was a true patriot and evidenced by his actions and expressions the highest standard of Americanism, for he loved the country of his adoption, and conformed to its teachings and its demands. He, too, was fond of all outdoor sports, and had a keen interest in nature's beauties. He was real human. He was the possessor of a bungalow, situated on the easterly side of Greenwood Lake, probably the most beautiful and picturesque lake within many miles of New York City, with its high mountains on either side and natural scenery quite unsurpassable in grandeur and beauty in our part of the country. The time he spent there was most delightful to him. He indulged in aquatic sports and was an ardent and expert fisherman. The surroundings would almost make one conclude that he was of a poetic nature; and while he possessed beautiful thoughts and had a true conception of the ideals which make the imaginative mind bigger and broader, he was too busy with his public duties to give time to matters of lesser importance.

But, Mr. Speaker, the star that shines brightest ofttimes becomes dull and finally fades from view. We watch it nightly with feelings of interest and admiration. The star of our dear Senator, brilliant as it was for years, gradually, though perceptibly, grew dim, and as time went on it became more obscure, until it finally disappeared from view, and so went out the life of "BILLY" HUGHES, a real man, a true man, beloved by those who knew him well, admired by his constituency, and respected by all.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, BILLY HUGHES, and that is what I always called him, and I were very warm personal friends. His was a typical American life. He was a common, everyday citizen. He knew his friends, and he was not afraid to associate with them. He devoted his life to the upbuilding of better conditions for the masses. He knew American problems, and he knew how to approach their solution. He was devoted to America and her advancement. He was a true patriot. That was exemplified in its fullest sense when America's honor was questioned before we entered the war. He was an advocate of every measure calculated to sustain American prestige. He made no pretense at superiority, and because of that fact he proved himself superior to many. His simplicity of life, his unassuming character, his clean morals, his attitude toward the best things in life, always stamped him in my mind as a man who eventually would become a great power in the land, because I always assume that power is brought about more by approaching the situations that confront us in a simple, straightforward, unassuming way, rather than in any other way. BILLY HUGHES had friends everywhere. You could not know him without loving him. He was intense in his devotion to the cause of the oppressed. He gave more of his time, I think, to the amelioration of conditions that needed improvement than to any other one thing. His heart went out to the lowly. He spoke the language of the man on the street. He was reared with him, and he never broke away from him; and in his daily life he associated with him. In his thoughts he always remembered him. He began with the man on the street, he rose above him officially, but never left him. He understood his ambitions, his hopes, his fears, his dangers. He realized that the man on the street makes up the bulk of America, and that the more contented this man is the better Government we will have. He realized that contentment among the masses is one of the essential needs to the happiness of the people of the Nation, and yet he was always just to those who were not of the masses. He realized that men in this country grow up from the ground, so to speak; that the great body of successful men come from the ranks; that the rich man in nine cases out of ten is not born rich, that his success is not due to the environment in which he was born, but that the great, successful men of the Nation come from the average men, compelled to toil, to struggle, to save, to pinch, to sacrifice, come from the men who learn to associate with other men who struggle, and he realized that that is the safety valve of the Nation.

I am proud to have associated with him, not only as a private citizen but as a Member of this House. I was proud to know him as a Senator. He approached all the questions that came before him with a conscientiousness with which few men approach these questions. He was interested only in the country's welfare. He had no ulterior purpose. He had no ambitions that would conflict with his country's welfare and advancement. He would make any personal sacrifice that others might reap the reward due them for the sacrifice which they made.

He regarded public office as an opportunity to serve the people. He did not aspire to power because he cared for power; he aspired to it because he realized that it would give him an opportunity to do something for his country and his people. He conceived that public office meant that the man who occupied it was the public servant, and he always acted as though he realized it to its fullest extent. It is a pity that men are taken away just as they begin to reap the full fruition of their usefulness. It takes a long time for men to learn the intricate problems of a given vocation, and there is nothing more intricate than the problems of the Nation and to understand and to realize the importance of the work of public officials dealing with nation-wide problems, world-wide problems, if I may say so, one must have had long training and experience, and it is because of the long training and experience that men have that we are able to meet the great problems that confront the country with intelligence and success. BILLY HUGHES had reached that point in life where he understood the Nation's needs. He had a knowledge of the country's history, of its legislative problems, of its complications. He was close to the Executive power of the Nation, justly so, for he was true and loyal to the Chief Executive in every trying hour.

He was true to every man with whom he came in contact. He was able to learn from personal contact with other men things that he might not have had the time to study for himself. It is through contact with men who have made special study that in most cases we are able to become familiar with the things with which we have to deal. No man in this great body can be familiar with everything that comes before it, and so men here specialize. A man who specializes may take two or three years to study the conditions that surround a given problem and the methods by which those conditions must be met. I frequently go to those men and ask them to tell me in five minutes what they took three years to learn, so that I too may be able to get some knowledge of the intricate problems with which they are so familiar. That is what we have to do here; and it was because Mr. HUGHES did that to an extent that few men did that he was familiar with nearly every question that came before the Congress. And it was because he was familiar with these things that he was a power, but he used the power that he had sparingly. He used it only for the public good. He never assumed a dictatorial attitude. He was always approachable, sweet, truthful, honest, moral. His life was one that can well be emulated by those who are to follow. It should be an inspiration to the youth of the community in which he lived. We who are here miss him. We sympathize with his family. We regret his early taking off, but we who believe in a future still hope he has not gone from us forever; that we shall have communion with him in another place; and the time is not far off when most of those who are here will be called hence. My hope and prayer to-day is that at the end we may be considered by those whom we leave behind to be as worthy of the confidence and respect of the public whom we have tried to serve as I consider BILLY HUGHES to be.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I count it a very great privilege to have numbered Senator HUGHES among my good friends. In common with the entire membership of both branches of Congress and the people of the State of New Jersey, whom he had so faithfully and efficiently represented in both the House and Senate, I was greatly grieved when death visited him in the very prime of his life and at the height of his powers and usefulness.

I first met Senator HUGHES 10 years ago when I entered the House, of which he was at that a Member. I very soon learned that there was no Member of the House on either side of the big aisle who was more universally beloved by the membership than "BILLY" HUGHES, as he was familiarly and affectionately known by all of his many friends and associates. As I began to know him more intimately, I formed a warm attachment for him and a strong admiration for his many splendid qualities of mind and heart, his never-failing good humor, his fine ability and sound sense, his earnest devotion to duty, and his intense loyalty to his people, his State, and to his country.

Senator HUGHES was an optimist. He never failed to take a cheerful view of life and its problems. His good humor was infectious, and, I dare say, if the truth were known, that it has caused many a man who was feeling despondent and upon the verge of despair to take a fresh and a stronger grip on life. At the same time he did not fail to fully realize the very serious nature of the many problems which are now confronting the people of our country and the entire world, but his own courage was such, and his confidence in the sound sense of all the people was such, that he never wavered in the firm belief that these problems would be finally solved to the best interest of the people, and that our republican institutions would be fully maintained in all of their purity and solidarity as planned by our forefathers and guaranteed by the Constitution. And, Mr. Speaker, it was this calm confidence that the right would prevail, coupled with his ability and his great popularity with all classes and men of all opinions, that made him one of the real leaders during his terms of service in both branches of Congress.

Senator HUGHES was distinctly the friend of the working classes. He never forgot that he had once been a hand toiler himself, nor did he scorn the various steps of the ladder by which he had ascended to the highest honor his State could bestow upon him. He knew from personal experience something of their trials and difficulties, and he never failed to ardently espouse their cause when they were threatened with unjust or unfavorable legislation or when an opportunity offered to promote their welfare and happiness. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, he had the moral courage and honesty of purpose to stand only for what he believed to be right, and to speak frankly and firmly when legislation on any subject was offered which he considered improper or unwise from the standpoint of his country's welfare. There was nothing of the demagogue in Senator HUGHES, neither was there anything narrow in his make-up. He was a broad-minded, clear-headed, loyal American citizen and statesman, anxious always to know and do the right. And this clear course of conduct actuated him throughout his career in Congress and won for him the very warm regard of his colleagues and the confidence and affection of his countrymen. This to him was worth infinitely more than all of the honors which had been bestowed upon him or which the future might have had in store for him if he had lived.

Senator HUGHES has left us. The cruel hand of death has torn him from his friends and loved ones, but his spirit still lives, and his memory will always be kept green in the hearts of those who knew and loved him.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, in paying my tribute to the achievements, services, and qualities of the late Senator WILLIAM HUGHES, of New Jersey, it is not necessary for me to repeat in detail his life's story. It is a veritable romance, crowded with dramatic incidents, with startling contrasts, with brave battles with superior forces, and wherein he, by sheer mental and moral force, conquered for himself power and place. In boyhood a hand in a Paterson silk mill, in manhood as lawyer battling in the courts for the cause of his former fellows; at first the factory hand in the employ of Col. Barbour, later the one political opponent who succeeded in defeating him for a seat in Congress; in youth stenographer and clerk in the office of John W. Griggs, former governor of New Jersey and Attorney General of the United States in the Cabinet of William McKinley; in the maturity of his powers a leader of political forces that overwhelmed with defeat the great party in which his earlier patron held so conspicuous a place; elected, defeated, then repeatedly elected again to Congress in a district wherein political strife was unceasingly waged; for a brief time a judge of the Court of Common Pleas of New Jersey; and finally a Senator of the United States—truly a story that as forcefully gives the lie to those who assert that in America the path of opportunity no longer lies open to one who has the ability, industry, and courage to tread it as Senator HUGHES himself was wont to give it to the traducers of Americanism as embedded in our traditions and written in the Constitution of our Government.

Throughout his career he was the avowed champion of those with whom in his early years he toiled, aggressive in supporting measures for their advantage, unceasing in his insistence upon what he conceived to be their rights. Yet he was a profound believer in American institutions and hated those who in the guise of solicitude for the worker sought to undermine them. In these times, when it is sought to sterilize our national spirit and destroy the fundamentals upon which our democracy rests, by inculcating foreign doctrines abhorrent to the genius of America, the Nation can ill spare the services of WILLIAM HUGHES. The implicit confidence which those who labor with their hands placed in him would give weight and authority to the message of Americanism he undoubtedly would deliver.

Until I came to Congress I had not become closely acquainted with him. In the two years I was here, before his illness put an end to his legislative activities, I had frequent occasion to confer with him and to meet him socially. The "BILLY" HUGHES I thus came to know was sincere, unaffected, warm-hearted, and altogether lovable. To have known him was a privilege. His departure is an irreparable loss.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, again the flag upon the Capitol has hung at half-mast, and again death has invaded the ranks of the great congressional family. One of our bravest and best men has paid the debt that we must all one day pay.

I had the pleasure of serving in this House for a number of years with BILLY HUGHES. He was my warm personal friend. I probably knew him as intimately as did any Member of the House. I loved him devotedly. I watched his growth and development here with a great deal of interest and pleasure. I found him faithful in all the high engagements of his public life. Sincere, conscientious, industrious, and enterprising, he was truly a great American patriot, and he rendered great service to his State and to his country.

I believe the first eight-hour law ever introduced in the Congress of the United States was by a gentleman from New Jersey, by the name of Rogers many years ago, but it remained for BILLY HUGHES, of New Jersey, to exalt labor more than any man with whom I have ever served or of whose service I have known in the American Congress. Paul said, "This one thing I do," and BILLY HUGHES dedicated his service to organized labor. He believed that labor was being imposed on, and that it should have better treatment at the hands of the Government, and that measures should be enacted to protect the great army of industrial workers in the United States. He set himself to that task, and the great constructive laws that are now upon our statute books upon that subject are due more to him, I believe, than to any other man in the American Congress. As a result of his work and preaching in this House in the interest of labor and the magnitude of labor, I believe, more than to any other man, is due the creation of the Department of Labor and a member in the President's Cabinet, a Secretary of Labor. I think BILLY HUGHES is more responsible for that than any other Member in either branch of Congress. It is a pleasure to have served with him, to have known him, to have had his friendship. His example will be an inspiration to boys who desire to accomplish something in life when they see that this man, who used to stand at the loom, hired by the day, afterwards served in this great American Congress, and died a United States Senator at the age of 46 years. We mourn him and we miss him, and a truly great man has gone.

Mr. BROWNING took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. SCULLY. Mr. Speaker, the depth of the regret which I feel for the death of my friend, Senator WILLIAM HUGHES, is greater, perhaps, at least in some respects and for certain special reasons, than that of any other Member of this House.

It was in my home that Senator HUGHES became ill with what proved to be his last sickness. The attack came upon him suddenly, when he was apparently in the full vigor of lusty health. From that first blow he never completely rallied. He made a brave fight for life, but his task here was completed, and death claimed him at last. When he died I suffered not only a great personal loss but it seemed to me also that something of what service to my country at the National Capital had meant to me passed away with him. And there was a reason for this.

When I came to Washington as the Representative from the third congressional district of New Jersey, Representative WILLIAM HUGHES was one of the first men to greet and welcome me. He had had experience in Washington, and knew legislative Washington as only a small proportion of our Members ever know it. I can not help feeling that the flow of the Democratic tide which was at its height when I first came to Washington, and as a result of which the control of the legislative and later of the executive branches of the Government passed to the Democrats, was one of the great historic movements in the history of the development of the law and institutions of the United States.

At such epochs big men rise to the surface, and because of their gifts of leadership and native energy and physical and mental vigor are forced into the vanguard.

Coming to Washington, as so many Members did at that time, fresh from contact with the people, and dominated by the impulse of a splendid idealism, they sought to signalize the change in control of the House by reforming its procedure so as to make it more truly democratic and more fully responsive to the will of the citizens of the United States.

This desire furnished Representative WILLIAM HUGHES with his opportunity. Many of us were inexperienced. He was able to furnish experience and that knowledge of what can and what can not be done that great parliamentary leaders must possess. And it is unquestionably true that the rules by which this House is governed to-day are in great part the work of Representative WILLIAM HUGHES. These rules are not perfect, because nothing in human life is perfect, but the change was a change in the direction which the great public mind of the country wanted.

Meeting Representative HUGHES as I did at that time, and finding him always ready to share the fruits of his experience, I learned to know him well and to value deeply his friendship. He was, above all other things, a man with a strong man's virtues and passions, and with that inherent strength of character which compels a strong man to follow the great, dominating aims of this life, however much lesser aims may confuse and hinder.

We are all familiar, to some extent, with the life of Senator HUGHES. Whatever he became—and he became a powerful and influential figure in the Government of this country—he owed to his own practically unaided efforts, unless we consider that the opportunity which our country affords to all its citizens to rise to positions of trust and influence is an aid.

Senator HUGHES went to work in a silk mill in Paterson at an age when most boys and girls are only leaving the grammar school, but he had in him that desire to accomplish something in life, that determination to overcome obstacles, which is inherent in the race from which he sprang, and the results of which we see in this great country that stretches from Maine to California, with the evidences apparent on every hand of the results of man's work and man's ingenuity and energy.

Working in the daytime and studying in the evening and in his other spare time, Senator HUGHES achieved an education superior to that obtained by many persons who pass through all the grades of grammar school, preparatory school, and college.

When the War with Spain broke out Senator HUGHES was one of the first to offer his services to his country, distinguishing himself as a soldier whenever opportunity offered. He returned to civilian life at the close of the war and immediately took up the study of law. His attainments as a lawyer were great and were recognized not only by his fellow members of bar associations, but by the governor of his native State and by all his fellow citizens who knew him.

Having in his bosom the ambitions and aspirations to leadership which all true men have in one form or another, and having also that inherent and inherited desire to do what he could to improve the condition of his fellow men, it was inevitable that WILLIAM HUGHES should interest himself in politics.

I will not dwell on the number of times or the manner in which he was elected to this House, or to the equally emphatic way in which he was recognized by the citizens of the State of New Jersey and elevated to become a Member of the United States Senate. I will only note the fact that time and time again, in a constituency conceded to be strongly Republican, he was so able to teach and to exemplify the principles of the true democracy which he understood and believed in that he was elected by the votes of citizens who by the ordinary rules of the partisan game would have been understood as opposed to him.

Some one has said that the history of a country is the story of the lives of its individual citizens. I think that that is most readily seen in the lives of such men as Senator WILLIAM HUGHES. Whatever may have been his human weaknesses, he always fought on the side of right. However great may have been the obstacles which he perceived in the path of progress, they never for one moment stayed his determination to make progress. Even when his health failed him he did not yield in his determination to see that the country was a greater and better country because he had lived in it. He sought always to do his share, to so use his influence and his vote that justice and righteousness might more generally prevail in the land.

A fighter by instinct, he learned that a little persuasiveness is more effective than the hardest blow in overcoming legislative obstacles.

Himself a Spanish War veteran, he showed his courage and his disinterested devotion to principle by opposing, on grounds of sound public policy, measures in the interest of war veterans, doing so although warned that his action would cost him his political future.

Cut off in the prime of his life at a time when it seemed that he had a long and useful career before him, at a time also when, I believe, he cherished more closely than at any other time in his career the thought of devoting the remainder of his life to his family and to their interests, there can be no doubt that he gave his life as truly and as fully to the service of his country as many of the boys who have just died on the battlefields of Europe.

As he himself was a typical American, so his life was a typically American life, sparing not himself in the service of his country, but giving his all in the hope that by so doing progress might be maintained and liberty and equality more truly prevail in the land.

As one who knew him well and loved him well, I desire to say again that the life of WILLIAM HUGHES was one of sacrifice for ideals which he cherished and revered and in which he believed so earnestly that he was willing to pay the ultimate price of those who claim that a man does not believe in a thing till he is willing to die for it. Senator HUGHES lived for his country and died for his country.

Mr. EAGAN. Mr. Speaker, this is the fourth time during my service in the House of Representatives that it has been my sad privilege to participate in exercises in honor of the memory of a Member of Congress from my native State. During the past six years three Members of the House from New Jersey—Representatives Lewis J. Martin, Robert Gunn Bremner, and John H. Capstick, and the senior United States Senator from New Jersey, WILLIAM HUGHES, have been stricken down during their service in Congress. By a strange coincidence Senator HUGHES represented in the House substantially the same congressional district that was later represented by Congressmen Bremner and Martin. By an equally strange and sad coincidence, this day has been set aside not only for addresses on the life, character, and public services of Senator HUGHES, but it has also been set aside for like exercises in honor of one of his dearest friends, Hon. OLLIE M. JAMES, late United States Senator from Kentucky.

For a good part of their public life BILLY HUGHES and OLLIE JAMES were inseparable. They were elected to the House of Representatives in the Fifty-eighth Congress and they entered the United States Senate at the same time.

Senator JAMES was one of those who followed the remains of his friend to its last resting place. I was one of the group of Senators and Representatives who attended Senator HUGHES's funeral in company with Senator JAMES. Little did I think that the first of that group to follow Senator HUGHES in death would be his friend OLLIE JAMES, then apparently in vigorous health. But a few months, however, were to elapse before Senator JAMES lay cold in death—a sad commentary on the uncertainty of life.

Born in Ireland in 1872, he came to this country with his parents when a lad of 8. At the tender age of 10 he left school to take a position as a reel boy in the mill of the Barbour Flax Spinning Co. at Paterson. After he had worked two or three months he returned to school, but in a short time resumed his work in a silk mill. He worked in several of the mills of Paterson as a weaver until 1893. He then took a course in stenography and typewriting in a business school, on the completion of which he secured a position as a stenographer in New York City. He remained in this position for a year, leaving it to enter the law office of William M. Rysdyk, of Paterson, and shortly thereafter began the study of law.

At the outbreak of the Spanish-American War, in 1898, he enlisted in Company A, of the Second Regiment of the New Jersey National Guard. During part of his service he acted as stenographer to Maj. Gen. Fitzhugh Lee. He returned to Paterson with his regiment at the close of the war and entered the law office of William Nelson. He subsequently entered the office of former United States Attorney General John W. Griggs, remaining in this office until he was admitted to the bar, in June, 1900.

He was elected to the House of Representatives in 1902, defeating his former employer, Mr. Barbour, the Republican candidate. He was defeated for reelection in 1904, but was again elected to the House of Representatives in 1908 and in 1910. He entered the United States Senate on March 4, 1913.

Senator HUGHES, or, as we all knew him, BILLY HUGHES, was essentially a man's man. He was robust, strong limbed, splendidly proportioned, and a lover of all outdoor sports. He had an unfailing sense of humor and a very ready wit.

In many respects BILLY HUGHES was a contradiction. Under what I might call his rough and ready exterior there beat the gentlest of hearts. He was a keen judge of men, yet his heart was so big and his opinion of his fellow men so generous that he was frequently imposed upon. It was not in his nature to impute unworthy motives to men, and he was always ready to make excuses for a man's shortcomings and frailties. But when he was convinced that a man was not on the level he was quick to tell him so and in language that could not be misunderstood.

He abhorred the demagogue. He had a supreme contempt for the public man who through forced publicity succeeded in keeping himself in the limelight—for the man who, as he frequently expressed it, was "playing to the galleries." Yet none was more sensitive of thoughtless or hostile criticism when he knew it was undeserved; none could be more unhappy when he learned that a friend, no matter how humble, was speaking ill of him. On the other hand, none could do his duty, as he saw it, more courageously; no Member of the House or Senate could take a stand on any public question with less regard for his political future than BILLY HUGHES.

He had a wonderfully clear mind and was a tireless worker. Had he chosen to devote his time and energy exclusively to the practice of the law, he would have achieved very great success as a lawyer. He chose a legislative career, however, and devoted his time, his brain, and energy to it without thought of self. While he achieved notable results in several lines of legislative endeavor, he will always be remembered because of his interest in legislation affecting labor.

He had the faculty of making friends, as well as the rarer faculty of keeping them. He made many friends throughout New Jersey and many friends in the House and the Senate, but the friends who loved him best and those whom he loved best were the friends of his boyhood. Nothing gave him greater happiness than to be able in one way or another, when opportunity afforded, to show his gratitude to the friends of his youth.

His rapid rise in the affairs of his State and of his country never turned his head. Whether as a worker in the mills of Paterson, a Member of the House of Representatives, a judge on the bench, or a Senator of the United States, he was always the same whole-souled, witty, rough and ready, plain BILLY HUGHES.

In his death his city, his State, and his country lost a broad-visioned, courageous, efficient public servant, and his sorrowing wife and children a devoted husband and father.

Mr. DRUKKER. Mr. Speaker, over a year has passed since the unrelenting hand of death claimed WILLIAM HUGHES and took from the Senate and State of New Jersey one of the most energetic and active of men.

"BILLY" HUGHES was a self-made man. At 12 or 14 years of age he was operating a silk loom in Paterson, N. J. He took up stenography and typewriting, and when employed in the law offices of former Attorney General John W. Griggs he determined to study law, and a few years later he was admitted to the bar. His keenness, his ability, and power of observation, working with his ambitions and aspirations, led him to seek bigger opportunities and to grasp the advantages that came within his reach. From a mill hand to a national legislator, step by step he climbed the ladder of success.

In 1902, though young and comparatively unknown, he was chosen by the people of a great manufacturing section to represent them in Congress. He soon became prominent in the House and in his own city; as the years passed evidences accumulated of the respect and confidence in which he was held. From near and far throughout his district the struggling and unfortunate learned to come to him, their Representative, and his ready sympathy and kindness never failed them. A friend of the working people and with a first-hand knowledge and a wise understanding of their problems, he was always the ready sponsor of any legislation that was for their betterment and welfare.

His distinguished career as a Member of Congress was brought to a close by an appointment at the hand of President Wilson, then governor of New Jersey, to the position of county judge of Passaic. He was permitted to serve only a short period on the bench before his elevation to the Senate.

The same qualification which made him a potent factor in the House of Representatives soon brought him a position of responsibility in the upper House. His instincts were for order and voluntary subordination to a common purpose. So, in politics, from first to last, he was always for party organization and party responsibility.

One of Senator HUGHES's most striking characteristics was his gift of making friends. Modest and unassuming, steadfast in his friendships, he was a genial companion and a friend to be depended on. Mourned by a host of friends, it is in the county which saw the beginning of his remarkable career and which was the field of his early struggles and triumphs that his death is felt as a very deep and lasting personal loss.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Speaker, I do not know of any announcement which smote so heavily with sorrow the hearts of those who heard it as the one which told us "BILLY HUGHES is dead."

That was on January 30, 1918, over a year ago. The news created a sense of personal loss; all felt that an affectionate and true friend had gone from among us. In knowing BILLY HUGHES we recognized those traits which made him universally popular. He was courteous and genial to all with whom he came in contact. It is not of Senator HUGHES that I would speak.

It is of BILLY HUGHES, the man, the companion, the friend, that I would speak, and whatever simple tribute my tongue or pen can frame shall be laid not at the pedestal of the monument with which a grateful constituency has already commemorated his public virtues, but at the feet of that picture of him that memory has left to those of us who were his closest associates and warmest personal friends during the years of his service to the people of the great State of New Jersey. Gifted to a most remarkable degree, dowered by nature with that peculiar combination that makes a man loved by his fellows, I doubt if any man has served the people of any State in the whole history of our country who was more widely known and more universally loved than was BILLY HUGHES. The finest tribute I can pay his memory to-day is to say that those of his associates who knew him best mourn him most.

He was not of the hypocritical, self-righteous tribe of scribes and pharisees, but was a generous-hearted, warm-natured, red-blooded man, and intensely human and always lovable. Such was the personality we now miss and mourn; fortunate, indeed, will each of us be if when the fight each of us is making shall have finally ended and we stand at last before the Omnipotent Judge we shall leave behind us as many sincere, loving, faithful, mourning friends as BILLY HUGHES has left behind him, at home, in the Halls of Congress, and wherever the currents of his life have touched. To-day, while we are giving this expression of our sorrow at his death, our friend has already lifted the impenetrable curtain that veils eternity. Its time-old mystery is mystery no longer to him. Its unknown shores are no longer chartless for him. He has solved the mystery of human life and mortal death, and to those of us who have a faith that after death there is life everlasting the hope does not seem vain or ill-founded that our friend, with his lovable personality, his splendid qualities of mind and heart and character, has found favor in the eyes of that Great Judge who never errs.

The life of BILLY HUGHES at home was marked for its frankness and simplicity. His greatness in office erected no barrier between him and the humblest citizen, while, under our theory of Government, he was a representative of the "whole people." His intimate personal acquaintance at home was restricted to no certain portions of the State; he knew the people not casually, but his individual knowledge of them was marvelous. The people did not know "of him"—they knew him. He was the champion of their interests always.

Time has not assuaged this feeling of love we had for our departed friend, and we keenly experience it to-day as we gather here during the busy ending of a momentously important Congress to revive and reverence his memory.

Beneath the flower-decked sod at Cedar Lawn Cemetery lies all that was mortal of BILLY HUGHES. No more shall we gaze upon the familiar form of our friend and associate.

But not even death itself can deaden the power of recollection or curtail the sweep of our affections. While memory shall hold sway over our intellects we shall have before us the kindly smile, the sympathetic speech, the generous act of him who, though now sleeping the last great sleep, yet still liveth in our thoughts and in our emotions.

His was a record of public service which will perpetuate his fame as long as the history of this great Republic shall be known to mankind.

Mr. EAGAN. Mr. Speaker, a number of Members are unavoidably absent to-day who desired to speak at these exercises in honor of the memory of Senator HUGHES. I ask, therefore, that all who wish to do so may have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that Members who wish to do so may extend in the RECORD remarks on the life, character, and public services of the late Senator HUGHES. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BIRCH. Mr. Speaker, once more the hand of death has been laid upon one of New Jersey's distinguished citizens, and we are gathered here to-day to pay public expression to the sterling character and the life and public work of our late senior Senator from New Jersey, Hon. WILLIAM HUGHES.

Born in the beautiful Emerald Island, Senator HUGHES migrated to the shores of America at a very early age and took up his residence in the thriving industrial city of Paterson, N. J. He secured employment in the mills of that city, and a singular coincidence in his life is that he was at one time employed in the mills of the late Col. Barbour, whom he afterwards defeated for Congress.

During his spare hours in the evening Senator HUGHES, who was then just plain "BILLY HUGHES," perfected his education; he gave particular attention to the study of stenography and became so proficient that he was appointed as court reporter.

This line of work brought him in close touch with the legal profession, and he soon determined that he would become a lawyer. He entered the offices of the late Gov. Griggs, where he studied and mastered the intricacies of the legal profession and was subsequently admitted to the bar.

He first began to attract notice as a lawyer by his vigorous championing of the cause of the silk strikers of the city of Paterson, and so earnestly did he represent his clients that the late Vice Chancellor Pitney threatened to put him in jail.

He became very popular among the working class for his efforts in their behalf, and when he became a candidate for Congress he had their united support. In his first campaign, which was for the Fifty-eighth Congress, he had as his opponent the late Col. Barbour, of his own city, a man who was well and favorably known and possessed of much wealth. Senator HUGHES was not so well known outside of his own community and he had no other wealth excepting that of ambition and popularity. His defeat of Col. Barbour was a very remarkable achievement and was the beginning of his career in public life.

He was defeated for reelection to the Fifty-ninth Congress by Henry C. Allen, but was reelected to the Sixtieth, Sixty-first, and Sixty-second Congresses. During all of his time in Congress he championed the cause of the laboring man, and was looked upon as one of the strongest friends of labor in the House of Representatives.

During his last term in the House President Wilson, then governor of New Jersey, appointed him to a judgeship of the court of common pleas of Passaic County. He filled this office for about six months, when he again became a candidate for public office, and this time for the United States Senate, opposing former United States Senator Smith in the Democratic primaries. The primary law in vogue in New Jersey at that time was nothing more that a preferential expression on the part of the voters, and it was necessary for the candidates to be elected by the State legislature. Accordingly, having received a greater number of votes than Senator Smith at the general election, and the State legislature being in the control of the Democratic Party, Senator HUGHES was formally elected by the legislature on January 28, 1913. He was the last United States Senator from New Jersey to be elected by the State legislature.

Senator HUGHES was a man of extraordinary physical strength. Always the champion of the "underdog," he was ever willing to do a good turn for a friend and to extend a helping hand to the poorest beggar on the street. He was broad minded and possessed a multitude of friends. He was typically an American, and though he reached the topmost rung of political honors, he always remained "BILLY HUGHES," and he never forgot his friends.

Monetary wealth had no attraction for him and he died a poor man. But he left to his family a reputation for honesty, integrity, efficiency, and service that will long outwear the glitter of gold.

In his death not only has New Jersey lost a distinguished statesman, but the United States has lost an able legislator and a loyal, patriotic, and staunch citizen.

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Speaker, we gather here to-day to pay our respect and to express our appreciation and admiration for one who has gone from amongst us. It is a beautiful and time-honored custom of the American Congress to eulogize its Members who have been called to the great beyond, but how much more beautiful would it not be if we were to sing the praises of our colleagues and tell of their wonderful life work if we had the opportunity to do it before they have come to the end of life's journey.

To-day we come to honor one of New Jersey's adopted sons—the late WILLIAM HUGHES, senior Senator from the great State of New Jersey, a man of singular abilities, a typical American, and a distinguished citizen of our State and Nation.

Nowhere in history can there be found a greater or a more realistic exemplification of the opportunities which are offered in this glorious country of ours than in the life, character, and public services of Senator HUGHES.

He was born in Ireland and came to America at a very early age, possessed of little else than the knowledge that America offered wonderful opportunities through her system of government and her institutions, even to the foreign born, provided he was willing to swear allegiance to her laws and become a good citizen. In addition to this knowledge, Senator HUGHES possessed a wonderful store of vitality and ambition and the desire to forge ahead.

Soon after his arrival he accepted humble employment in the silk mills of the city of Paterson, in which community he always retained a residence. He applied himself to the improvement of his education in the night schools, and when he had mastered sufficient knowledge to take up work outside of the factory he began his career in the business world. He mastered the art of stenography and with this as a stepping-stone he became an official court reporter. This seemed to have determined for him his life's work and he took up the study of law and was subsequently admitted to the bar.

Success seemed to follow his ambitions and he soon became a political power in his community. His first appearance in public life was his election to Congress. He served in the House of Representatives for a number of years, and during his last term in the House was appointed to a judgeship by the then Gov. Wilson.

By this time he had become recognized as one of the two or three real leaders of Democracy in the State of New Jersey, and upon the expiration of the term of United States Senator Smith Mr. HUGHES was agreed upon as the choice of the Democratic Party leaders, and he opposed Mr. Smith for renomination in the primaries. He received the highest number of votes and subsequently was elected by the Democratic legislature of the State. Direct primaries for the election of United States Senators was not the law of the State at that time; it was nothing more than a preferential expression. That Senator HUGHES had become a real power in Democratic politics at that time was evidenced by the fact that he was selected by the State leaders and approved by President Wilson to be the primary candidate over Judge Westcott, who nominated President Wilson at the Baltimore convention.

All during his public career Senator HUGHES was recognized as a friend of the working class, and he always carried a warm spot in his heart for the man who was "down and out."

It was not my good fortune to know Senator HUGHES intimately. We resided in the extreme opposite ends of the State and therefore were not thrown in contact with each other. I consider this a great personal loss, for since coming to Congress I have had an opportunity to know him better and to appreciate what a genial, whole-souled fellow he was.

His death is a great loss to the State of New Jersey and to the Nation as well. He was loved and respected by the thousands who knew him, and in return he loved and respected them.

THE LATE SENATOR JAMES, OF KENTUCKY.

Mr. SHERLEY took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the special order.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. BARKLEY, by unanimous consent,
Ordered, That Sunday, February 23, 1919, be set apart for addresses upon the life, character, and public services of Hon. OLLIE M. JAMES, late a Senator from the State of Kentucky.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolutions, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 603.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. OLLIE M. JAMES, late a Senator of the United States from the State of Kentucky.
Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House, at the conclusion of the exercises of this day, shall stand adjourned.
Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.
Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

The resolutions were agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, of those who speak of OLLIE JAMES upon this occasion I knew him longer. When he was only 13 or 14 years of age he went to Frankfort as a page in the Kentucky Legislature, of which body I was then a member. Well do I recall him as a rollicking boy, in knee pants. There, away from the care of father and the watchful solicitude of mother, one might have feared for him lest the seeds of vice be sown in his young mind. But, even then, all his thoughts, as evidenced by his conversations and acts, turned not to youthful frivolities, but to the more serious problems of life. Of evenings my room at the hotel was his customary place. Many, many times I found him closely engaged in studying and asking questions full of thought about pending legislative measures, although he was but little more than in his teens. At that time the opposition to corporate greed, which later was developed into real issue by the lamented Goebel, found serious public expression in Kentucky. I noticed the trend of the thoughts of this mere boy; and, as time went by, I saw the development of his mind. Then, after only a few years, although not yet a man, I saw his mind and heart in their molding. Before he had reached man's full estate I introduced him to a public audience in the courthouse at Bardstown, Ky., the place of my residence, and there heard him make a speech which presaged the orator and statesman to which he grew. Nearly 25 years later I introduced him for a speech to another audience at the same place. On this occasion his well-recognized statesmanship and his fame as an orator preceded him, and filled the town with people, whose faithful champion he ever was. No greater speech has even been made on the hustings than was his of that day. Our country was all but in the throes of a terrible war with the most powerful, the most ambitious, the most savage autocrat that ever came into this world in human form.

Such a word picture of Belgium's horrors; such a vivid description of the destruction of France by the German hordes who were then almost at the gates of Paris; such a detail of danger to the existence of Great Britain; such a placing before the minds of others of the pending menace to our own country and the world no man before or since has presented. His audience knew real intellectual effort when it came along. Bardstown, Ky., where he made that speech, is not the easiest place to be found in the world for a speech. Long before Kentucky was admitted to the Union she was known as the "Athens of the West."

There Jesuits, the best educated of educators in the world, found their way before the Indian had gone; there in the wilderness they erected a great college; there was established the first Catholic bishopric east of the Allegheny Mountains, extending from New Orleans to Montreal and from the upper Ohio River to the Pacific. There hung the paintings of such masters as Rubens and Van Dyck, the gifts of Louis Philippe, King of the French; there, where Foster composed and set to music the soul-stirring strains of "My Old Kentucky Home"; there, where the gifted S. S. Prentice met more than an equal in the renowned Ben Hardin; there where John Rowan, ambassador to Italy, United States Senator, lawyer, and statesman, had left his impress; there where Charles A. Wickliffe, Cabinet officer and profound lawyer, spent his life; there, where William H. Grigsby, eminent jurist, set a high standard for expression of thought; it was there that OLLIE JAMES made one of the most impressive and patriotic speeches of this generation.

I have heard men speak of OLLIE JAMES having climbed the ladder of fame to almost the topmost rung. OLLIE JAMES never had to climb. He simply rose from year to year as occasion came for an uncovering of his wonderful gifts. To him nature was most prodigal, indeed, in her generosity. He was given size that brought attention; a personality most pleasing; a voice heavy and strong, yet musical; a manner most engaging and prepossessing; always gentle and kind; ever charitable; never envious nor detractive; and, still more, an intellectuality that challenged the admiration of all.

In the common acceptation of the word OLLIE JAMES is dead. That of him which was only clay is dead; but as long as Americans may be able to read his mental achievements will live.

We are taught that in the beginning God molded a form out of clay, a form which became that of man. But, when it had been so molded, it was inanimate. It could neither move, speak, think, nor in any way acknowledge even its own Creator.

God leaned over that form of clay and breathed into it. Then it arose, endowed with the Heavenly attributes of justice, charity, mercy, and the other qualities so generously given OLLIE JAMES.

That form of clay has been given back to earth whence it was taken. But those splendid endowments will survive on earth, while that soul, given of God, has but been taken back to God.

With the "golden rule" as the test, his sojourn here was most beautiful, indeed. Those who shared his generosity and received his charity are countless, while no one can be found whom he ever wronged. Such as OLLIE JAMES live always.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, the State of Kentucky has no bronze or marble in Statuary Hall, but her sons need no monument to perpetuate their fame. We of the Northwest owe to the Pioneer State a debt of historical and political magnitude that we can never repay. Had it not been for the daring of Daniel Boone and David Harrod and George Rogers Clark, and men of their kind, the Northwest territory would in all probability now be a part of Canada, and we of Michigan and Ohio, and Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, and Minnesota would be going with the members from Ontario and Manitoba to sessions of the Dominion Parliament at Ottawa, instead of coming to Washington to the Congress of the United States. There is no page of our history brighter than the story of the first of our bursting buds of empire, the first chapter of the Winning of the West. Before the Revolution the sons of Virginia began going over the top of the forest-darkened Alleghenies in a stream of home builders, whose progress has never stopped. God made the North Temperate Zone for the home of the white race, and he put Kentucky in the center of it. Forest and prairie, river and rock, soil of eternal fertility, climate mild yet bracing, its landscape and its people are pure American, and we, the neighbors of Kentucky, are proud of every minute of her history. It was the men of Kentucky, headed by George Rogers Clark, who waded through miles of icy spring floods, surprised and defeated the British forces under Hamilton at Vincennes, sent him a prisoner to Virginia, and dealt the death blow to British dominion south and west of the Great Lakes. If Kentucky had done no more than that her place in the history of American independence and American development would be forever secure.

But every student of our early days must realize that while the Revolution passed the bill, the War of 1812 was a motion to reconsider; and it was not until Andrew Jackson and his riflemen from Kentucky and Tennessee mowed down Pakenham and his British regulars at New Orleans that the motion to reconsider was laid on the table. Again all glory to the wild men of the blue grass.

I love to think of the battle of New Orleans, because its diplomacy and its shooting were so characteristic of Americans,

Pakenham, scorning the backwoods general and disdaining ordinary courtesy, wrote:

Jackson, surrender New Orleans!

Jackson wrote back:

Pakenham, come and take it.

Pakenham wrote:

Jackson, I expect to take my breakfast in New Orleans Sunday morning.

Jackson responded:

Pakenham, if you do, you will take your supper in hell Sunday night.

And the tradition of all good Kentuckians is that the Kentucky riflemen were in the front rank that fired the fatal first volley, which blasted Wellington's veterans like chaff in a blaze. That was American diplomacy and American shooting, both straight and to the point. It was that battle, the ending of the War of 1812, which made possible the treaty that put the United States of America beyond the experimental stage, and made permanent our dominion from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Because in the negotiations about Oregon and Texas later Great Britain dealt with a nation she could not fail to respect.

Meantime from the limestone soil of Kentucky there was springing up a race of giants, sons of those long Scotch-Irishmen, improving the breed with every generation. In 1808, 16 years after Kentucky was admitted to the Union, was born a boy destined to lead the South in the great Civil War, and a year later there saw the light in that State the boy who, as sixteenth President of the United States, was to do more than any other man to save the Union and live to see our Nation preserved. It is a remarkable fact that Jefferson Davis and Abraham Lincoln were born within a year of each other in the same State, which about half a century later furnished to each Army, the South and the North, thousands of its best sons, and which again became, as it had been once before, the dark and bloody ground.

Into this State, with this history, with these inspirations, there was born in 1871 the man whose memory we honor to-day; the son of a lawyer, who at the age of 20 was admitted to the bar, and whose personal qualities brought him almost at once into prominence. Other speakers here to-day will give the details of his early life. He was chosen a delegate to Democratic national conventions for 20 years, beginning, when only 25 years of age, in 1896, and in 1900, 1904, 1908, 1912, and 1916. He was permanent chairman of the conventions of 1912 and 1916. For 10 years he was a Member of this House; and beginning March 4, 1913, was one of the Senators from his State, an honored Member of the illustrious company of great men who have held that office, of whom Henry Clay and John G. Carlisle are only two of many who might be recalled.

Perhaps Senator JAMES attained his greatest prominence in 1912, when he was permanent chairman of the Baltimore nationed convention, which nominated Woodrow Wilson for his first presidential term; and later was chairman of the committee that formally notified him of his nomination. In his speech as permanent chairman Mr. JAMES said:

The Civil War is over, and that flag—the brightest, dearest colors ever knit together in a banner of the free—waves above a united people, where it is loved by every heart and would be defended by every hand. And coming from the South as I do, I can say that if Abraham Lincoln were alive this night there is not a foot of soil under Dixie's sky upon which he might not pitch his tent and pillow his head upon a Confederate soldier's knee, and sleep in safety there.

That this is one united country has been shown again, more gloriously than anyone could have dreamed seven years ago, by the history of the great war since April, 1917.

Mr. Speaker, for many years the joint sessions of the Senate and House were held only once in four years, to count the electoral votes for President. But in the last six years there have been many joint sessions; and every time I see the Members of the Senate march into this hall and take their places in the front rows reserved for them I think of the power and greatness of the States they represent. Why, such has been the increase in the efficiency of men in war that if the troops raised from the little State of Rhode Island, with their rifles, machine guns, and field artillery, could be turned upon the Persian hosts that thronged the field of Marathon, there would be no battle, but only a massacre of the barbarians. In the small State of Delaware there was made last year enough of high explosives to have destroyed all the armies of all the wars of antiquity. And the advance that has been made in methods of destruction has been equaled in the arts of construction and production as well. To be a Senator now from one of the States of this Union is a prouder privilege, a far worthier place in the procession of human progress, than to have been any tyrant or monarch of old. Our dead friend was chosen by his State to be one of her Senators. It is honor enough for any man.

Mr. Speaker, when one gets to talking about Kentucky, he never knows when to stop. Her pioneers, her warriors, her statesmen are an inspiring topic. The great Speaker of this House is one of her illustrious sons. In literature and song, as well as in sterner things, Kentucky has an immortal place. Who does not love Stephen C. Foster's "Old Kentucky Home" and "'Way Down Upon the Suwanee River"?

It was Kentucky's heroes in the Mexican War who called forth from Theodore O'Hara, one of her own people, what is probably the most perfect memorial poem ever written in any language, and which will be repeated over soldiers' graves as long as the English language is spoken. And with that immortal poem I close this eulogy:

THE BIVOUAC OF THE DEAD.

The muffled drum's sad roll has beat
The soldier's last tattoo;
No more on life's parade shall meet
That brave and fallen few.
On fame's eternal camping ground
Their silent tents are spread,
And glory guards, with solemn round,
The bivouac of the dead.

No rumor of the foe's advance
Now swells upon the wind;
No troubled thought at midnight haunts
Of loved ones left behind;
No vision of the morrow's strife
The warrior's dream alarms;
No braying horn nor screaming fife
At dawn shall call to arms.

Their shivered swords are red with rust;
Their plumed heads are bowed;
Their haughty banner, trailed in dust,
Is now their martial shroud.
And plenteous funeral tears have washed
The red stains from each brow,
And the proud forms, by battle gashed,
Are free from anguish now.

The neighing troop, the flashing blade,
The bugle's stirring blast,
The charge, the dreadful cannonade,
The din and shout are past;
Nor war's wild note, nor glory's peal,
Shall thrill with fierce delight
Those breasts that never more may feel
The rapture of the fight.

Like the fierce northern hurricane
That sweeps his great plateau,
Flushed with the triumph yet to gain,
Came down the serried foe.
Who heard the thunder of the fray
Break o'er the field beneath,
Knew well the watchword of that day
Was "victory or death."

Long had the doubtful conflict raged
O'er all that stricken plain,
For never fiercer fight had waged
The vengeful blood of Spain;
And still the storm of battle blew,
Still swelled the gory tide.
Not long, our stout old chieftain knew,
Such odds his strength could bide.

'Twas in that hour his stern command
Called to a martyr's grave
The flower of his beloved land,
The Nation's flag to save.
By rivers of their fathers' gore
His first-born laurels grew,
And well he deemed the sons would pour
Their lives for glory, too.

Full many a norther's breath has swept O'er Angostura's plain,
And long the pitying sky has wept
Above its moldered slain
The raven's scream, or eagle's flight,
Or shepherd's pensive lay,
Alone awakes each sullen height
That frowned o'er that dread fray.

Sons of the dark and bloody ground,
Ye must not slumber there,
Where stranger steps and tongues resound
Along the heedless air.
Your own proud land's heroic soil
Shall be your fitter grave;
She claim's from war his richest spoil—
The ashes of her brave.

Thus 'neath their parent turf they rest,
Far from the gory field,
Borne to a Spartan mother's breast
On many a bloody shield;
The sunshine of their native sky
Smiles sadly on them here,
And kindred eyes and hearts watch by
The heroes' sepulcher.

Rest on, embalmed and sainted dead!
Dear as the blood ye gave;
No impious footstep here shall tread
The herbage of your grave;
Nor shall your story be forgot,
While fame her record keeps,
Or honor points the hallowed spot
Where valor proudly sleeps.

Yon marble minstrel's voiceless stone
In deathless song shall tell,
When many a vanished age hath flown,
The story how ye fell;
Nor wreck, nor change, nor winter's blight
Nor time's remorseless doom,
Shall dim one ray of glory's light
That gilds your deathless tomb.

Mr. ROUSE. Mr. Speaker, the great sovereign State of Kentucky has been represented in the Senate of the United States by forty-four of her citizens, OLLIE M. JAMES being the forty-second Senator. To John J. Crittenden belongs the honor of the longest years of service, he having served 18 years. Joseph C. S. Blackburn served 17 years and Henry Clay served 15 years. The remarkable part of the senatorial history is that the service of two of the ablest statesmen, Henry Clay and John J. Crittenden, extended over the same period of years but not at the same time. It was 44 years from the time each entered the Senate until his last term expired. Eight of these men so honored served less than one year, and one was expelled.

OLLIE M. JAMES was born in Crittenden County, Ky., on July 27, 1871. From the beginning his career was notable though humble, and with only the education that he acquired from the common and academic schools of his county he rose in a very short period of time from a page in the Kentucky House of Representatives to the highest position in the gift of the people of his native State, and this he accomplished without the means of a political machine but with the confidence of the people.

He was a firm believer in the principles of the Democratic Party in its best and broadest definition. He always believed and declared in the supremacy of the people. When at the age of 25 he was elected a delegate to the Democratic convention in Chicago which nominated Mr. Bryan and afterwards campaigned for the nominee, his devoted friend and admirer, in many of the States. He was a delegate from the State at large to the Democratic convention held in Kansas City in 1900, to the St. Louis convention in 1904, the Denver convention in 1908, to the Baltimore convention in 1912, and to the St. Louis convention in 1916. At the conventions of 1900, 1904, and 1908 he was elected chairman of his State delegation. He was defeated for the chairmanship of his State delegation in 1912, but was elected permanent chairman of the national convention a month later, which was a higher honor and one sought by many of the able men of the party. His fairness and ability was so demonstrated that at the convention of 1916 the President insisted that he be made the permanent chairman of the convention, which was done by acclamation, and which convention renominated Mr. Wilson for his second term.

Well do some of us remember the happenings of the State convention held in Louisville in June, 1912, when Senator JAMES resorted to the unusual. He made one of his able speeches, and concluded by placing himself in nomination for the chairmanship of the convention. He was defeated in this ambition, and it was with great regret that some of us were compelled, for the sake of party organization, to cast our vote against the beloved Senator. However, though defeated for the chairmanship of his State convention, he was chosen a delegate to the national convention at Baltimore, and it was here that he was elected by acclamation permanent chairman of the great convention which gave to the people Woodrow Wilson. JAMES was one of the leaders of Speaker CHAMP CLARK for the Democratic nomination in Baltimore in 1912, but after his candidate was defeated he supported the nominee of his party, and was at once the leader and spokesman of Mr. Wilson, and soon became the mouthpiece of the present administration in the Senate of the United States. His last speech made in the Senate, a little more than a year ago, was a masterpiece in defense of the President and his policies in the conduct of the war.

OLLIE JAMES rendered more distinguished service to the party which he loved and gave more time to the success of his party in the State and Nation than any other public man during our time. He took a leading part in the last six Democratic conventions, was the foremost man to enunciate the principles of the party, and with his towering figure and wonderful voice was seen and heard in a majority of the States of the Union during the campaigns, both State and national, during the past 25 years.

He was elected to each Congress from the Fifty-eighth to the Sixty-second, inclusive, and left the House to enter the Senate, where many of his friends predicted that he would be when the death angel called him to his final reward. He was a conscientious legislator of the Congress, a powerful debater, and one who possessed the oratorical ability to meet any speaker of his day. He was a giant in physique and possessed a striking personality, always attracting attention no matter what the gathering. At all Democratic meetings in the State and Nation he was one of the most prominent figures and wielded a powerful influence. The public knew OLLIE JAMES as an orator and statesman. As a speaker in a political campaign he had no superior, and but a very few equals. No person in public life of the age of OLLIE JAMES, in Kentucky or elsewhere, has ever contributed to the history of his State a more distinguished career, not having reached the age of 50. He had served five terms in the House of Representatives and had been chairman of two Democratic national conventions and was rounding out a term in the United States Senate and renominated by a tremendous majority for a second term, receiving the indorsement of the people as no other candidate ever received in Kentucky, and this renomination was honored him while he was near the end of his career and on his death bed in the hospital in Baltimore.

His attention to his duty, his fidelity to his trusts, his ability and his integrity made a deep and lasting impression upon those he served, and the announcement of his passing away brought from the people throughout the entire country the deepest regret and expressions of heartfelt sympathy such as has been rendered to but few who preceded him to the great beyond.

No one of his acquaintances could accuse the Senator of being a politician; so far as I knew, he made no attempt to build for himself a political organization, always relying upon the people, and his faith was never misplaced. He was a power in the Democratic Party and used his influence freely and ably in all the campaigns. However, his purpose was solely for the good of the party he loved and of the policies for which it stood and in which he was a firm believer.

Senator JAMES passed away at Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore on the morning of the 28th of last August, where he had made a brave and hard fight against a disease that had claimed him as one of its victims, and only surrendered when his feeble nature was overcome by the inevitable. The familiar figure of Kentucky's Democratic giant will for many years be missed among those who loved the party and the people and until another is found who can take his place in the hearts of those who love what the poor man is entitled.

To be admired is an honor which many public men experience, but to be loved and admired by nearly all of one's acquaintances is an honor and distinction that but few men attain. Our friend was one of the rare creatures of God who could claim this distinction.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the life of a conspicuously able and faithful public servant is an inspiration and help to the youth of the country and a blessing to his race. The most interesting and helpful history is that which tells the story of success achieved in spite of the hardships and hindrances born of ill fortune. The greatest intellects and benefactors of the race have come from the moderately well-to-do and from the ranks of the world's struggling poor. These, by their example, inspire and encourage those who purpose in their hearts to succeed in spite af adverse circumstances.

The House of Representatives is assembled to-day to pay a tribute of love and reverence to the memory of a truly great American, born in Kentucky amidst the hardships and privations of the reconstruction period that followed the War between the States. His parents were poor in the things that make up the sum of this world's goods. His father was a Union soldier and his mother had four brothers in the Confederate Army. At the end of the war his father, like many other soldiers on both sides, had to start life over again amidst hard and trying circumstances.

OLLIE JAMES as a boy worked upon the farm and cut wood and made fires and did other work about the home. During spare time he worked for neighbors needing help, making a little money whenever he could. He told me of one of his first experiences, that of carrying brick up a ladder to the workmen on a building for 10 cents a day. He was appointed to the position of page in the Kentucky Legislature when a youth of 14. He was educated in the common schools of Crittenden County and the high school at Marion. He studied law with his father, who had become a splendid lawyer, and was admitted to the bar when 20 years old. It was not long until he was recognized as one of the ablest and best young lawyers in Kentucky. Older lawyers who knew him in those days told me that he acquainted himself with the law and with every detail of his case and presented it to court and jury in such masterful fashion that he soon became one of if not the greatest trial lawyers in the State.

OLLIE JAMES was born for public service. When 29 years old he was elected chairman of the Democratic State convention of Kentucky, and every four years, from 1896 to 1916, he was elected a delegate from the State at large to the national Democratic convention. In 1912 he was elected chairman of the national Democratic convention at Baltimore, and he presided over its deliberations when Woodrow Wilson was nominated to the office of President. His speech before the convention at Baltimore had so thrilled and electrified the delegates and the country that in 1916 he was the unanimous choice of the President, the national Democratic committee, and the delegates to the national convention, and when the convention assembled at St. Louis he was made its chairman by unanimous vote. His speech on that occasion was the greatest treat and triumph in American oratory that I have ever witnessed. His speech there was even greater than his great speech at Baltimore. When he left the convention at St. Louis, the idol of Democrats from every section, he was acclaimed by all who heard him as the greatest orator in America. Delegates from all over the country told him at St. Louis that he was their choice for President in 1920, and if he had lived I believe that he would have been nominated and elected.

From his youth he cherished the ambition to be a Member of Congress, and when 31 years old he was unanimously elected to the House of Representatives from the largest Democratic district in Kentucky. When I came to Congress in 1904 he was serving the last half of his first term. Mr. Speaker, the first time that I ever heard him speak in the House I was drawn to him and wonderfully fascinated by his frank manner, his splendid argument, and pleasing eloquence. Before he had served three terms in the House he had become a leader, a member of the Ways and Means Committee, and the ablest and most powerful debater on either side. He was magnetic, courageous, brilliant, and fascinatingly eloquent, and in his service of 16 years in the House and Senate he was the able and faithful friend of the masses and was always the champion of fair and honest government. The people—the plain people, as Lincoln used to call them—never had a better friend in Congress than OLLIE JAMES. He wanted to see everybody have a fair chance in the struggle of life, and no man in my day has done more to bring justice, prosperity, and happiness to the great masses of our people than this big-hearted and brilliant son of Kentucky. At the age of 41 he was elected to the United States Senate from the great State of Kentucky—a State that points with pride to her illustrious Senators, Clay, Bibb, Crittenden, Beck, Carlisle, and Blackburn—great men, all of them, but none greater than he. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that Kentucky ever elected a United States Senator so greatly esteemed and dearly loved by the people of all classes as was her big, brave, and brilliant son, OLLIE JAMES. He loved Kentucky. Every throb of his big heart beat loyal to her. He recounted with pride her loves, traditions, and patriotic incidents and illustrated in his own great life and character the magnificent and enduring qualities of her people.

In the debates in the House and in his speeches on the hustings he had already made a national reputation, and when he took his seat in the Senate Kentucky had in him the ablest and most popular Democrat in that distinguished body. During the first year of his service in the Senate he became the mouthpiece of the Wilson administration, and from that time on until stricken down with illness the President leaned on his strong arm for support.

In February, 1918, when German propaganda was rampant in our country and thoughtless critics in high places were attacking and belittling our Military Establishment, Senator JAMES arose and in a brilliant and powerful speech arraigned a Senator in terrific fashion for certain unwarranted criticisms that he had made. It was a great speech—his last speech—and made in support of the administration and in the interest of his country and humanity. He silenced the thoughtless critics, and from that day on till the end of the war no one else over there dared to attack the country or the country's program for the prosecution of the war. For 16 years he had been the pride and idol of the Democrats of Kentucky, and at the time of his death he was the pride and idol of the democracy of America. His great qualities of mind and heart made him the ideal public servant and won for him the admiration and love of the American people. Like Lincoln, he sympathized with the poor and unfortunate, and, like Clay, he pleaded their cause on the hustings in the House and Senate of the United States. In presenting the doctrine of his party of equal rights to all and special privileges to none, I have seen him sway the multitude by the power of his great eloquence and convincing logic. I have seen the House and Senate thrilled and stirred by his wonderful speech, and I have seen President Wilson sit pleased and charmed under the spell of his mighty eloquence. His speeches reflected the splendid genius and brilliancy of his big brain and the sympathy and love of his big, brave heart. In the stormy days of 1910 and 1912 no one man contributed quite so much as he toward electing a Democratic House and Senate and a Democratic President. He was in deed and in truth a great leader of men and a man of the people, one that they loved, honored, and trusted. He was the friend of every honest man and the foe of every crook. He loved his country and gave the best years of his life to her service. He was a terror to those who would use public office to pillage and plunder the people. His ideal government is found in these words that he used to quote from Christy's proverbs: "That is the best government in which an injury to one is the concern of all." In his ideal government the welfare of the citizen is the highest concern of all. He fought governmental favoritism and special privilege, and to the day of his death contributed to good government and the welfare of our people. In pleading for the perpetuity of the Republic, he said: "The Government must be so fair and square and just to all its people that every heart will love it and every hand defend it." I never knew a man with a keener sense of justice or one who would do and dare more to see justice done in all the walks of life. Mirabeau rendered signal service to his country when in the French assembly. He defied a proud and haughty nobility and denounced a powerful and unscrupulous clergy, and with the battle-ax of truth broke down the idols that corruption had erected in the temple of liberty. In 1910, when the agents of special privilege infested the Capitol and a Cabinet officer was aiding predatory interests in robbing the Government of its coal lands in the West, OLLIE JAMES preached a crusade against the evil and with the battle-ax of truth drove Ballinger from the Cabinet, prevented the plunder of the Government's coal fields, and prepared the way for the coming of Woodrow Wilson and the regeneration of the Federal Government. He helped to frame and pass the great constructive measures that now adorn the statutes of our country and bless and benefit the American people.

When the war with Germany threatened and his country called this brilliant son of Kentucky was at the forefront, with head erect and the light of perfect loyalty upon his face—a 100 per cent American. He was for his country in heart, mind, and purpose. His last speech in the Senate was in defense of Americanism and in behalf of human liberty. In that great speech he predicted the overthrow of Germany and the triumph of American arms. He said that our troops would return victorious and amidst the applause of a happy Nation march in triumph down Pennsylvania Avenue. The war ended as he said it would, and our brave boys are going to march down Pennsylvania Avenue, as he predicted. The pity is that he could not live to witness the victory achieved, the home-coming of our boys, and the triumphant march of the American Army. But he has passed from the scene of a busy, brilliant life. He lived up to the full measure of duty and destiny, and at the noontime of life, in the midst of an active, successful, and useful career, he fell asleep, with the blessings and benedictions of the Nation upon him. He was an able, courageous, and conscientious public servant. He devoted his whole time and attention to the duties of his high office. The prosperity and happiness of Kentucky and America constituted the great end and aim of his public career, and no man in my knowledge has contributed more to the strength and glory of his State and Nation than he did during his service in the American Congress. Besides being a great patriot, a great Democrat, and a great orator and statesman, he was a commanding figure, a unique and picturesque character.

He was a man of great personal magnetism and was wonderfully blessed with a fine sense of humor. All in all, I have never known a more attractive and pleasing personality or a better, braver man. There was nothing mean nor little in his life. He was the essence of sincerity and the soul of honor. Truly can it be said of him, to know him was to love him. His big heart was a veritable treasure house of the noblest traits and sentiments of the human heart. He was an optimist and always looked upon the bright side of life. To him every cloud had a silver lining. He was of a genial and happy disposition. Life was beautiful to him. He loved it and enjoyed it to the full.

He possessed a big, generous, and sympathetic heart, and no one in distress ever called on him in vain. If all those for whom he has done some act of kindness since he has been in public life in Washington could speak to-day, a multitude of witnesses would rise up and bear testimony to the generosity and goodness of his big and loving heart.

Three years ago on Christmas eve, late in the afternoon, he walked down Pennsylvania Avenue. Close up by a show window where "Santa Claus" and Christmas toys of every kind were displayed were three little boys whose dress and general appearance told the story of their poor surroundings. The Senator from Kentucky stopped and for a moment looked on with keen interest as the three little boys talked about "Sandy Claus" and the toys in the window.

He could remain silent no longer. The memory of Christmas eve in his boyhood days came vividly back to him, and he said, "Boys, old 'Santa Claus' will be coming to see you tonight, will he not?" They looked up quickly and shook their heads. He then said, "Do you see anything in the window that you would like to have?" And they all answered quickly and with enthusiasm, "Yes, sir." And he said, "Well, let us go in and see what they have got." They followed, and their little faces were wreathed with smiles of perfect joy. He told them to select the toys that they wanted. They did so, and thanked him from the depths of their grateful, happy hearts, and then went running home.

This is only one of the many kindly and beautiful things that this big and noble hearted man did in his day. He loved and honored his father and mother and was warmly devoted to his brother and sisters. For 14 years of happy, uninterrupted friendship I shared his love and blessed comradeship, and he was by most intimate and best-loved friend. During the fatal illness that took him away I visited him at the Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore twice a week as long as the physicians would permit anyone to visit him. He was cheerful and brave to the last. The summons came in August, 1918, and Kentucky's big, brave son fell asleep as sweetly and as peacefully as a little babe in its mother's arms. His devoted brother Edgar had watched with him and ministered to him till the end came. Mr. Speaker, during his long illness the constant and tender devotion and watchful care of his loving wife was one of the most beautiful and sublime things that I have ever witnessed. She who had been the pride and idol of his heart, his inspiration and joy in health, and had made his home and life supremely happy was now his good angel, keeping vigil at his bedside, speaking words of cheer, praying for his recovery, and blessing him with her love. Happy pair! God never blessed a woman with a better husband or a husband with a better wife, and I know that up yonder, where God's angels' faces smile, she will see again this princely man that she has loved long since but lost awhile.

Mr. Speaker, the Bible tells us that in the midst of life we are in death, and this is true. "The finger of the destroying angel is at every latchstring. His foot tracks are in every path."

I have seen a rosebud in its freshness and beauty bursting into bloom. Then in all its beauty and glory I have seen the full-blown rose basking in the sun and filling the air with its fragrance. And just as I was praising its beauty and enjoying its perfume a gust of wind came. I looked again and the rose was gone. I have seen the meadow, the field, and wood, with carpet of green and buds and blossoms and leafy foliage, stripped of their beauty and verdure in a single night. And I said the rose is like the charm and glory of a beautiful life—just as we bask in its sunshine and are happiest in its presence, death calls and the adored one is gone. The buds and blossoms and leafy foliage that bless and adorn the earth every year are like youth, middle life, and old age. Once a year nature sends the frost god to call the buds and blossoms and leaves back to mother earth, and every year death invades the ranks of our friends and loved ones, and from the plains of youth, middle life, and old age God calls His children home. There are broken links in the chain of every family circle, and death has placed crêpe on the doorpost of every home. No one escapes his sad visitation. The old and the young, the high and the low, the rich and the poor must all pass muster at the portals of death. Is death the end of our earthly joys and the final end of us, or is it God's gateway through which we pass into another state of existence, where, freed from the ills of the flesh, we shall enter upon the joys of the life eternal. Is death a thing to be dreaded? Is it the enemy of mankind, or is it as Plutarch said, "God's greatest gift to man"? At the entrance upon the journey of life is the glorious awakening at the luminous dawn. At the other end is the sunset and the gloaming, where twilight deepens into darkness and we sleep through the night of transition. Death is but the castle at the end of the road, where we pause for a moment to shake off the raiment of the mortal and put on the robes of immortality. In the time that is to come we shall know and understand.

> Oh, blindness to the future kindly given,
> That each may fill the circle marked by heaven.

I believe in the resurrection of the dead, as he did, and in the life beyond the grave. My friend OLLIE JAMES is not dead. He has passed into the higher life, and we shall meet again. He was a distinct blessing to his day and generation, and the world is better and brighter because he has lived. America has lost one of her ablest and most faithful sons. Peace to his ashes. God rest his great soul.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House of Representatives, when the immortal spirit of OLLIE JAMES, at the Johns Hopkins Hospital the latter part of August, 1918, winged its flight back to the God who gave it, one of the most brilliant stars that ever shed its luster upon the intellectual firmament of Kentucky went out.

Prodigious of stature, endowed with a brilliant mind, unexcelled oratorical powers, and a magnificent voice, he, like Saul, towered above his brethren.

He was born in Crittenden County, Ky., maintained his residence there through life, and his remains were interred beneath a wilderness of flowers in the beautiful little cemetery in the suburbs of Marion.

He was admitted to the bar in early manhood and practiced law extensively for many years, participating in some of the most important and sensational cases ever tried in Kentucky, notable among which was the celebrated contest case of Gov. William Goebel for governor of the State of Kentucky.

When a mere youth he became interested in politics and arose with unparalleled rapidity to distinction in the councils of his party by the force of his own genius. He was always a partisan Democrat, believing in the cardinal principles of the Democratic Party, but at the same time he was always fair and courteous to a political adversary.

He was a delegate to the Democratic national convention in 1896 and a delegate from the State at large from Kentucky to every Democratic national convention since that time. He was elected permanent chairman of the Democratic national convention in 1912 at Baltimore, which nominated Woodrow Wilson for President, and was unanimously elected again permanent chairman of the Democratic national convention at St. Louis in 1916, which renominated President Wilson, and was selected by both of the conventions to deliver the speeches of notification of his nomination and renomination. These two honors which came to him are without a parallel in the political history of this Republic. The speeches which he made at those two conventions are political masterpieces and electrified and aroused the delegates of both conventions.

At the age of 31, in 1901, he was elected a Member of Congress from the first congressional district of Kentucky, and served in this capacity for 10 years. He arose to prominence almost immediately after beginning his service, was for several years a member of the Ways and Means Committee, and was one of the ablest leaders on the Democratic side.

In a State-wide primary in July, 1911, he was nominated by the Democratic Party of Kentucky for United States Senator, and was elected by the Kentucky Legislature to this exalted position the following January. Like in the House, he arose immediately to distinction in the Federal Senate. No Senator was more in the confidence of our great President than he, and the President had no more able champion and defender of his administration than OLLIE JAMES.

It was my good fortune to know OLLIE JAMES intimately, having lived within half a square of him here in Washington ever since I have been in Congress. Every impulse of his being was in sympathy with struggling humanity. He had a heart that was capacitated for an ocean of human love and for human sympathy as boundless as the fathomless depth of space. His motto always was that the helpless are the ones that need help, and he was continually exerting his best endeavors to alleviate the sufferings of those who needed it. I never knew a public servant more diligent, proficient, and faithful in serving his constituents. Every constituent, however humble, could always get an audience with him, and his plea was patiently heard. He not only rendered service to those who needed it, but he did it in a quiet and unassuming way and without the blare of trumpets. As an evidence of his sympathy for those in distress, the following incident occurred here in Washington. It was never told by Senator JAMES, but by his secretary, Mr. Vernon Richardson, who witnessed it. About three years ago Mrs. James visited her good friends Mr. and Mrs. Post Wheeler, at Tokyo, Japan. On one Sunday morning she was to meet them in Philadelphia to start on their trip, and Senator JAMES accompanied her as far as Philadelphia on that day. When they arrived at the Union Station here in Washington he saw a lady in mourning sitting in the depot sobbing and apparently in distress. He approached her and asked her the trouble. She replied that she had recently lost her husband, and that she was just returning from Lynchburg, Va., where she buried her only daughter, on her way to her home at Jersey City, and on arriving at the station she had lost the balance of her ticket to Jersey City and her pocketbook containing $6, which was the last cent she had. Senator JAMES, without telling anyone, went to the ticket agent and bought her a ticket to Jersey City and gave it to her, together with a $10 bill. When he did this the good woman asked him who it was that was bestowing this great favor upon her and he replied as he bade her good-by, "It is just a sympathetic friend," and the good woman never knew who it was.

No man was ever more strongly attached to his friends. It was well known, not only in Washington but throughout the country, that he and my good friend Congressman J. THOMAS HEFLIN, of Alabama, were not only devoted to each other but were at times inseparable. Miss Julia O'Donaghue, of Philadelphia, a sister of Mrs. Nancy Doyle, of Washington, who is a very dear friend of Mrs. James, expressed very aptly the devotion of Senator JAMES and Congressman HEFLIN in the beautiful poem which she wrote, entitled, "My Comrade," and dedicated it to the memory of Senator JAMES, which poem is as follows:

Last night, as in a sepulcher of thought
I paced in silent anguish my lone room,
Bemoaning my friend OLLIE; he that fought
To conquer the inevitable doom
That waits on man; he, the proud statesman, bold,
And of gigantic structure, tow'ring height,
Cut off ere his bright gems of thought were told
To man from that rare intellect of might;
Dismember'd in the zenith of his prime
And at a crisis when his word might sway
The hand of tyranny, dissolving crime,
The grief in fields of wretchedness allay,
I asked why death should claim him for its own
And chill a heart all generous and true.
Thus, while I catechized the great unknown,
A spirit presence closely to me drew.
I shudder'd not, but wept with joy. 'Twas he.
We met; ah, not in fear but ecstasy.

Then, slowly, and with deep and res'nant tone,
He spoke: "My Comrade, you whom I have known—
Friend of all friends—oh, do not for me grieve.
Draw near and hearken to me and believe.
Death cut the branches of a withered tree
That it might bloom in immortality.
When I embark'd from out my shattered urn,
I claimed one great request, that I return
To clasp your hand and speak one word with you.
My time is brief; my words, they must be few.
There is not a dissev'rance of true souls,
Each renders unto each the love it holds.
Great is my love for you, dear Comrade. Trust
That in th' celestial regions of the just
My spirit feels your invocation sent
For justice and your country's betterment.
Submerg'd in darkness are the pow'rs of state,
Soon shall His hand—the great, just Potentate—
Quell the grave madness that o'ershadows earth.
All shall be changed, as in the bow'r of mirth
Man shall abide with man in faith and peace,
Wars amid pestilence forever cease.
I can not tell thee more. I must away.
Adieu! The spirit mandate I obey.
When next we meet—ah, not in life's abyss—
We'll quaff the chalice of eternal bliss.

This beautiful poem aptly expresses the fidelity of this great man, not only to TOM HEFLIN, but to all of his legion of friends.

I was at his bedside several times in the beginning of his last illness and saw him at the hospital in Baltimore shortly before the end. He suffered intensely, but was always cheerful and faced the inevitable in the same spirit in which he faced the problems of life, coolly and bravely.

He was one of the most epideictic and panegyric orators of his time. On the political hustings he could arouse the enthusiasm of his audiences as no other man. He was one of the ablest champions of the principles of the Democratic Party that this Nation had. Struggling humanity never had a more devoted and competent leader.

I have often thought since his death that his old father, stooped with the load of years and bending under the burden of sorrow and grief, should take some consolation in the fact that his life was spared long enough to see his boy reach the exalted position in life which he did. The pages of Kentucky and American history will be made brighter by the endeavors of OLLIE JAMES.

I shall cherish his memory and the intimate associations with him in the sentiment of the poet, when he said:

Long, long be my heart with such memories filled,
Like a vase in which roses have long been distilled;
You may shatter, you may break, the vase if you will,
But the scent of the roses will hang round it still.

His life was a benediction to all of those who were fortunate enough to possess his friendship and enjoy his association.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, OLLIE JAMES was a great American. His name is known from ocean to ocean. He was a great Democrat; but while a great Democrat and advocating Democratic policies, he was still a greater American. His political beliefs were based on fundamentals, but his Americanism was based on the heart that believed that no men in all the world were such friends to humanity as is afforded here.

It was my privilege to know Senator JAMES long before he dreamed of becoming a Senator. We came here together, I think, and served together during his service in the House.

Notice that OLLIE JAMES was going to speak always brought an audience to the floor. Sometimes—in fact, frequently—it happens that notice that a certain Member is going to speak clears the House of all but those who are ashamed to go, but OLLIE JAMES was always an attraction as an orator. He was clean of habit; he had a logical mind; he was a good speaker, a profound reasoner, and he had the ability to express his thoughts more forcibly than any other man with whom I have associated during my term in this House.

He was physically and mentally great. His mentality was not less great than his physical powers. He was a man of simple habits. His treatment of all questions was frank. He was truthful in his dealings with men. His integrity was well understood everywhere. He had a model character, of which everyone who knew him was proud. He lived a life that everyone could afford to emulate. He had a great record as a public servant. That record will stand in history for all time to come. It will be an inspiration in the future for those who are to act upon questions similar to those involved in the activities that Senator JAMES was called upon to indulge in.

Senator JAMES was a true lover of America and her institutions. He was devoted to everything that bore the name "America." He believed that the word "American" should mean more as the result of our participation in this war than it ever had before. He wanted to see the American flag respected in every land and upon every sea, and he wanted America to give all she had and all that she was to preserve her honor. He wanted the institutions of America to be preserved and protected. He wanted them handed down without stain to the generations that are to people this continent in the ages to come. He believed in the kind of patriotism that loves the country; that is loyal to the well-being of the country. He believed that patriotism should be as strong as the love of a son for a mother; that we should make any sacrifice for the Nation that gave us birth and which we have the honor to serve without hope of reward. His was a public life devoted to America's cause. His life was inspired by a desire to do the thing that would best promote the welfare of our country and our people. He was not only willing to have the country make any sacrifice to that end, but was willing to make any sacrifice himself for his country. I have always had the greatest admiration for the Americanism of Senator JAMES as exemplified in word and deed.

No man in the history of my experience was better qualified to express his beliefs in the spoken language than was OLLIE JAMES. No audience could listen to him without being convinced of his sincerity. No audience could sit at the feet of such an orator without being inspired by his eloquence.

OLLIE JAMES, like other boys who started without hope of success, is but another evidence that America is the land of opportunity; that here, and here alone, such a thing as the success achieved by OLLIE JAMES and men of his ability and eloquence could be possible, because here alone the people rule. Here the power comes up from the people to the State, and while the people elect men to office for a temporary period and give them power, the people themselves always remain the governing authority, and it is because men rise from poverty and obscurity and can understand the trend of the thought of the people with whom they associate that they reach the high places in the life of our Government. In no other land can such a thing be possible, because in other lands the rights of the people heretofore have come down from the State to the people. OLLIE JAMES realized that in other lands they depend upon the sword and the cannon for the maintenance of the government, while here in America he realized full well, and practiced what he realized, that our Government is maintained by the citizen's respect for the law. OLLIE JAMES was not only a good lawmaker, but he understood how these laws should be enforced. He understood that laws should not be oppressive. He knew how to sympathize with the common mass. His mind met the mind of the common man.

He was a great man. He was simple, as all great men are. It is only the man who thinks himself great and refuses to come in contact with the masses, lest they might understand that he is not so, who fails to understand the masses. OLLIE JAMES was not one of these. He understood them as few men do. His record, his life, the words that he had uttered, will live to inspire those who are yet to follow. I am proud to have known him, to have understood him, to have been permitted to associate with him, to have loved him, as I did, for his integrity of purpose, for his honesty, for his high character, for his Americanism, for his devotion to his country's cause, for his unselfishness, for his sacrifice in behalf of others.

I believe, too, that this is not the end of life; that we are yet to meet in another place. I believe that when the soul is separated from the clay of the body it moves onward to perform other and more important functions, and that we who have been proud in days gone by to have associated with OLLIE JAMES and to have participated with him in the work of government will meet again to separate no more, forever.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, Kentucky has always been a State made up of men of marked characteristics. Their faults and their virtues are obvious, outstanding, and of their virtues the greatest lies in their individuality, an individuality that makes them act from a free, untrammeled standpoint, and as a result Kentucky has been the forum ever since it was a part of this great Union, a forum for the settlement of the great issues that have vexed the people of this Nation. And it is a forum where they settle issues in a forensic way. There are fought out before the people the issues of the day and of the time. Flowing from this habit, during Kentucky's entire history there have always arisen great leaders, great orators, but, even more than orators, great debaters, men who were able to present their view of those questions.

For 25 years in Kentucky's recent history one man stood out foremost as the orator and debater of Kentucky in the highest sense of those terms. OLLIE JAMES came into prominence in Kentucky before he held office. He was a power in political conventions before he was old enough to vote. He helped to influence and determine party complexion, party platform, long before he spoke with the advantage of position and the power that flows from position.

In 1896 he became a national figure, as he had been a State figure for many years before. No one who attended that memorable Democratic convention in Chicago, who remembers the stormy scenes, who knows, as all of us who have had some part in public life know, that underneath the speech making, underneath the routine of the convention, is being done much of the great work that determines the result of a convention, can forget the figure of OLLIE JAMES, his heroic size, his determination, his zeal. His was the zeal of a crusader for a cause that he believed in and for a man that he believed in, and that made him one of the dominating figures of that remarkable convention. From 1896 on there was no great national scene of his party in which he was not a prominent, and frequently the most prominent, figure. In the four succeeding conventions he had a leading part and in the past two was chosen permanent chairman, and, as such, delivered speeches that will live as models of convention eloquence.

OLLIE JAMES and I came into public national life together in the Fifty-eighth Congress, he representing a rural constituency, I a city one, with the necessary differences of local viewpoints that grow out of different environments, but during all of these years that service only brought us closer together, and to-day I feel like speaking of him, not so much as a statesman—others can more splendidly portray his achievements than I—but as a friend. I saw his growth.

Men who come into public life, particularly into the Congress of the United States, either grow very much or they deteriorate very much. No man stands still in the Congress of the United States. The forces that here meet and contend are too dynamic for men to remain in fixed positions. Either they are moved forward to broader, bigger, deeper things, or they fall back into obscurity from which by chance they may have come. From the hour that he came here he was an influence—an orator, yes; but I think of OLLIE not as an orator as we usually use that term, but as a debater. I know no man who had a more ready adaptability to meet an issue as it might be presented on the moment; and no man had more capacity to sum up, at the end of a debate, and present the real factors that should determine judgment.

And so he grew constantly here, broadening his viewpoint. He was always sympathetic, always in touch with the real aspirations of the people of the country, the everyday sort of folk. As his horizon broadened, as his opportunity grew, so grew his knowledge of need and of cause and of complex conditions that confront men who really endeavor to solve the problems of a great empire like this.

Placed always on important committees, he never needed them. They were simply a medium for him, but not a necessity to him. The House of Representatives and the Committee of the Whole were his forum. Here he could command an audience and a result, not because he spoke as a member of some committee having the matter in charge, but because he brought to the consideration of the question judgment and thought and information that were of value to the House.

It was inevitable from the beginning that he should go from here to the Senate. It was inevitable that Kentucky should give to him the highest honor that she could. And from the very day he sought her favor, not for himself, but in order that he might serve her, she never faltered in her loyalty to him. When OLLIE JAMES offered himself for the Senate no one ever questioned that he would be nominated, no one ever questioned that he would be elected. Yet the State is one of doubtful political allegiance.

As a Senator he immediately took first rank, and on many occasions proved himself there as he had so often in the House, the peer of all his opponents. He became the foremost champion of the administration, but he was more than this. He was the champion of his country, in a sense broader than a mere party champion, and in her days of stress his voice was ever raised to fan into whiter heat the flame of the people's patriotism. An American whose devotion to country had no qualifying factor, his love of the right, his sympathy for the weak and oppressed, caused him literally to dedicate himself to the furtherance and success of a war that he knew was waged only for righteousness' sake. His fine scorn of those who sought to temporize with great fundamental issues, through fear of political results, burst forth again and again in words of scathing denunciation.

It was in the midst of this intense activity that illness overtook him. He chafed at an enforced idleness that denied him the opportunity of further service when service meant so much. Kentucky followed day by day the news of his health, hoping and praying for his recovery. Had he been spared, how gladly she would have given him again to the service of his country. He could have continued as a Senator of the United States as long as he desired, and he would have continued adding to his fame and to the fame of his State if the end had not come so suddenly and so tragically for him and for us.

No man ever gave more generously of himself than he did. Few except those who knew him intimately knew to what extent he gave of his vitality, of his time, of his thought, to help those who were his friends and those whose cause he believed in. Perhaps beyond any other man whom I can recall he has lifted his voice on behalf of his party and his party's candidates, not only at home, not only where it might be thought to be worth while to himself, but everywhere, at any time that he thought he might be of real service. The day was never too disagreeable, the journey never too long or difficult, and nothing caused him to refuse. It was because of that continuous outpouring of himself, that giving of all that was in him that perhaps the end came when it did come.

He died while yet a young man. And yet length of life is not all. We like to think of men living their full span of life, their threescore years and ten. And yet when men are judged, they are not judged by length of life, but by achievement. OLLIE JAMES compressed within the forty-odd years of his life more of service to humanity, more of achievement for his country, more that makes life worth while, than is given to many men who live twice that long. To those of us who knew him and loved him his loss means something more than the passing of a great national figure. It means something more than a realization that it is difficult to fill his place and to carry on his work. It means the loss of the sympathy, the friendship, and the personal help that will always be to us the most cherished memory of a splendid, loving friend, a man of noble heart.

Mr. KINCHELOE took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, death claimed a shining mark when OLLIE M. JAMES crossed the silent river which divides us from the broad eternity that stretches out beyond. If one short year ago I had been asked to name those public men whose careers would be prematurely shortened in the next 12 months, his name would have been absent from the list. So strong and vigorous he appeared, so full of life and boyish zest he was, so sure of long tenure of office and distinguished service he had a right to feel, that we never associated him with thoughts of death.

Yet it but illustrates the truth, which is as old as humanity, that—

> The boast of heraldry, the pomp of power,
> All that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave,
> Await alike the inevitable hour;
> The paths of glory lead but to the grave.

The death of no man in recent years has produced more genuine and universal sorrow in Kentucky than that of Senator JAMES. When the sad news, not wholly unexpected, was flashed across the wires to the people of Kentucky, men and women of all shades of political belief paused to mourn the loss of their most distinguished public servant. The rich, the poor, the ignorant, and the lettered alike mingled their tears in a grief which all men felt but none could express. The banker, the merchant, the professions, the plowman, the fireman in his cab, the blacksmith at his anvil, the carpenter at his bench, the schoolboy at his desk, the mother whose son had gone to fight and die for the land he loved and honored, all turned their thoughts to the stalwart and familiar figure now fallen and to be seen no more.

I shall not attempt to review at length his public career. That is the task of the historian, who by the nature of his calling and equipments can do fuller and more complete justice to the subject. But I can not refrain from reciting a few of the characteristics which made OLLIE JAMES one of the most beloved and popular men of his time.

I am not old enough to recall the time when he was not a commanding figure in the politics of Kentucky. When the great Bryan campaign of 1896 was gathering force and strength, though but 25 years of age, OLLIE JAMES had been chairman of the Kentucky delegation at the convention which nominated him. Mr. Bryan once told me that one of the impressive things which he always remembered about that convention was the massive figure of OLLIE JAMES leading the Kentucky delegation in starting the famous "march of States," which had much to do with the Nebraskan's nomination for President. It was entirely fitting that Mr. Bryan should remember this incident, for from that day forward he had no more loyal or devoted follower than the man from Marion.

The first time I ever saw Mr. JAMES was during this famous campaign. I can never forget the impression he made on my boyish mind. It was on a train, and he had been somewhere to make a Democratic speech. I thought I had never seen a man so large, or one who filled so completely my ideas of what a Congressman ought to look like. At that time he had never held a public office. But it was inevitable that sooner or later he would enter public life, for he was fitted by nature, equipment, and inclination for the political leadership which he afterwards enjoyed.

In 1902 he was elected from the first congressional district of Kentucky, known as the Gibraltar district on account of its great Democratic majority, to a seat in the House of Representatives of the United States. By reason of his great size, which always made him a central figure, his magnificent voice, his powers of keen and quick repartee, he soon became recognized as one of the leading debaters in Congress. His support was welcomed by those with whom he agreed and feared by those whom he opposed. During the 10 years of his service in the House his personality was so impressed upon the people of Kentucky and his abiilty was so universally recognized that he was elected to the Senate practically without opposition, and while his service in the House had been marked by a constant growth in experience and broadening of vision, I think it may be truthfully said that his greatest services to democracy and to the Nation were rendered as a Member of the United States Senate.

In the Democratic convention which met in Baltimore in 1912 Mr. JAMES favored the nomination of CHAMP CLARK for President. He had been largely instrumental in swinging Kentucky into line for Speaker CLARK. While this was well known by all the opposing candidates, such was the esteem in which he was held by them that he was made the permanent chairman of the convention. This convention ultimately nominated Woodrow Wilson for President, and from that time until the day of his death no President and no administration ever received more constant or unswerving support than President Wilson received from OLLIE JAMES. He became not only his trusted spokesman on the floor of the Senate, but his adviser in many matters of which the public did not always hear, and his advice and counsel were always held in great esteem by the President.

His last public appearance in the Senate was in response to what he believed to be his duty, when the President and the whole Government were viciously attacked in regard to the conduct of the war, around which revolved our hopes as a Nation, if not the welfare of civilization itself. While others might seek to destroy the people's confidence in their chosen leaders in a great crisis, he chose to hold aloft the banner of his country. While others might seek, for selfish and political purposes, to tear down the miraculous achievements of a peace-loving Nation called to arms, he chose to uphold the President in his great task as leader of a free Nation and Commander in Chief of its Army and Navy. This speech was one of the greatest of his career. It revealed him more clearly than ever, not as a politician, nor as a self-seeker after the plaudits of the moment, but as a statesmen, a patriot of vision and imagination in whose heart burned the fires of devotion to the ideals for which millions were ready to die.

During the nearly 16 years in which OLLIE JAMES was a Member of the House and Senate he never forgot whom he was sent here to serve. He knew that he was elected by the people to represent them and their interests. He knew that the people had confidence in him, and he knew, as all men knew, that he would never knowingly violate that confidence nor betray their interests. Neither the temptations of wealth nor the seductive voice of flattery could wean him from his interest in the common man; and I have seen his indignation rise like a menacing storm when he discovered the strong and powerful seeking to fasten some form of injustice upon the poor and the weak. It is not strange that he was the idol of the rank and file of his party in Kentucky and the Nation. He was their friend. He represented them whenever they needed a spokesman or defender.

He looked beyond the domes of capitols, beyond the surging pit of selfish, grasping greed, which sought special favors not enjoyed by all, and saw the force and caught the inspiration of what President Wilson so recently described as "the strong tide running in the hearts of men."

Kentucky has throughout her history been known as the home of statesmen and orators. Not only has she sent to the forum of national life a long and illustrious list of great men; she has poured her rich blood into every State of the Union. History, tradition, and romance have mingled to make the true Kentuckian a little different from other types of men. Mental and physical courage, chivalry, a strong sense of justice, pride in ancestry, and love of native land have combined to form in that fair State the nearest approximation of the typical man. Historians have wondered at and sought to explain the mystery which seems to be fused from soil and air and stream and sky into the men and women of our State. But we need not tarry long in attempting to analyze it. The inspiration of such a history, of such romantic traditions, of such sacrifices, of such devotion to the highest ideals of our race, of such beauty of face and character and landscape, sweeps us on and up toward the goal of human perfection. The life stories of her great men and women accumulate to enrich the experience and inspire the hopes of each succeeding generation; and each generation adds its towering figure to shed light upon the groping footsteps of the next. Such a figure was OLLIE JAMES.

Among all the names which have made Kentucky a household word throughout the Nation, none could catch with more unerring judgment the throbbing heart of the masses. He knew the people, because he had grown up with them and had endured with them and shared their hardships. His heart was big and full in sympathy with them.

And this trait, Mr. Speaker, is one that lingers in our memory when we think of Mr. JAMES. We can not forget his bigness of heart. In his sympathies he was as tender as a woman. He never became calloused to the griefs and sorrows of humanity. I stood with him once at the railroad station in Lexington when a poor woman alighted from the train in mourning and in tears. Senator JAMES looked on for a moment, then turned to me, with tears in his own eyes, and said, "Isn't it terrible to see a woman weep like that?" This touch of humanity softened and sweetened his outlook upon life and drew to him a host of devoted and admiring friends.

So, whether we measure him as statesman, as lawyer, as citizen, as son, brother, husband, or friend, he measured up to the full stature of greatness. His name will be entwined in the deepening memory of the people of his native State; and when men foregather to dwell upon the richness and fragrance of our historic men and traditions their minds will turn to the name of OLLIE JAMES. He will be missed in the Senate; he will be missed in Washington, where every man, woman, and child knew him by sight; he will be missed in national conventions, where his voice and figure inspired the enthusiasm of delegates; he will be missed on the stump in Kentucky and throughout the Nation; he will be missed in the councils of his party, where his judgment and wisdom were acknowledged.

He will be missed in the great Gibraltar district of west Kentucky, which he honored and which delighted to honor him. He will be missed in many a courthouse in Kentucky, where anxious and enthusiastic crowds surged and clamored to hear his voice. He will be missed in the hearts of all who knew and loved him. We honor his memory, and thus we honor ourselves. We honor him as statesman, as citizen, as friend. We honor him for his great gifts of mind; but we honor him more for his great gifts of heart. We honor him for his work as legislator and orator; but we honor him more for the knowledge that he held firm to the principles instilled into his heart at his mother's knee, which made him incorruptible in every relationship of life. We honor him as public servant and as man. Nature will soon carpet his grave with green, and loving hands will journey there to lay sweet flowers upon it. But in our hearts his memory will live forever fresh and sweet, until the trumpets shall call us to the shores of that land beyond the stars.

A man,
Too little to count in the plan,
I do my destiny day by day,
I live my life and I go my way,
And what does it matter? And yet—and yet—
The child or the deed which I beget
May alter the course of human history.
A man? Ah, yes; but a mystery.

A man,
A being of briefest span.
Just one of the myriad millions spawned
Who have fluttered a moment and swept beyond
Into seeming nothingness. Yet, ah, yet,
Some word I may utter and half forget
May echo along to eternity's portal.
A man? But perhaps an immortal.

A man,
Whose race, since time began,
Nadir to zenith and brink to brink,
Is hardly more than the hasty wink
Of a deity's eyelid. And yet—and yet—
In this infinitesimal self is set
This boundless thought we have called infinity.
A man? But why not a divinity?

And as we think about the passing of Senator JAMES at the noontide of his life, we can but recall that beautiful stanza in the poem "Crossing the Bar":

Twilight and even bell, and after that the dark;
And may there be no sadness of farewell when I embark.
For though from out this bourne of time and space
The waves may bear me far,
I hope to see my Pilot face to face
When I have crossed the bar.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, we are here to eulogize one of Kentucky's great sons, OLLIE M. JAMES, for 10 years an active, useful, and influential Democratic leader in this House, until a grateful people rewarded him by an election to the United States Senate, where he won by zeal, ability, and worth high rank as a leader among leaders.

Those of us who observed his conduct as a Member of the House of Representatives willingly bear testimony to his unceasing devotion to the interests of his constituents, his usefulness in promoting beneficial legislation for the Nation, and his influence and power as a popular leader.

In debate he was able, eloquent, and convincing; a strong partisan, but a fair and manly opponent; a political gladiator, who fought in the open, scorning to take an unfair advantage and never asking for quarter; a believer in everything Democracy stood for, but, above party fealty, he was, first, last, and all the time, an American. He was genial, whole-souled, and generous. He was as true as steel to his friends, and they were countless in both political parties. His fame was not confined to his beloved State, for he was known and admired throughout the Republic. His eloquent voice was heard North and South in the national campaigns, and his attendance for years at the Democratic national conventions brought him in touch with the leaders of his party from every State in the Union.

In and out of Congress his political advice was sought and followed, and his death was a great loss to the party he delighted to honor and to serve.

He was the idol of the Kentucky democracy, and his hold upon the loyalty and affections of the people was never broken. The people believed in him. They had reasons for trusting him. They had unwavering confidence in his sincerity, his honesty, his courage, and his leadership. They followed him with the same fidelity, loyalty, and enthusiasm as the people of Kentucky had in former years followed their great "Harry of the West"—Henry Clay.

In every position of trust and responsibility, in private and public life, Senator JAMES did his duty—his full duty. His career was one of usefulness—unselfishness—and his busy life full of private and public deeds which will be remembered and cherished.

We were from adjoining sister States, which have much in common, and during our joint service in this body were personal friends. While we were not in political accord, I admired Senator JAMES for his many noble qualities; for his open, frank, manly methods; for always having the courage of his convictions; for his great ability; for his untiring work for his district and State; for his fair and courteous conduct toward his political opponents; for his fealty to party pledges; for his loyalty to the Republic; and for his love and tenderness to his devoted wife.

Mr. Speaker, a Tennessee friend offers this brief but heartfelt tribute of respect to the memory of OLLIE M. JAMES, the brave, generous, and knightly son Kentucky gave the Republic, to whose interest he was ever loyal and devoted.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker, when the Angel of Death took the hand of OLLIE JAMES to lead him into the Great Unknown the State of Kentucky bade farewell to her most illustrious and beloved son and our Nation lost one of her noblest and most patriotic servants.

No word spoken here to-day can add anything to the fame of OLLIE M. JAMES, of Kentucky. His place is secure in the history of our Nation and his memory will be forever cherished in the hearts of our countrymen.

That death loves a shining mark is forcibly illustrated in the early passing of Senator JAMES. Struck down by disease and death at the age of 47, yet he had attained a reputation of national scope and was beloved and trusted by millions of his fellow citizens throughout the length and breadth of our great Republic. To be known, honored, and loved so universally at such an age could mean but one thing, and that was that he was a man of unusual ability and of great force of character. To be loved as Senator JAMES was loved by the American people means that he had in his big heart love of the noblest type for his country and for humanity. No man can be genuinely loved by his people unless the people know and realize his genuine love for them and their interests. In my opinion, the greatest trait in the character of Senator JAMES was his love for his fellow men and his earnest desire at all times to help them onward and upward.

During the last year of his life I have seen him drag himself to the departments here at Washington to speak a word for his friends in trouble—time after time—when it was evident that deadly disease had fastened on him and that his prime duty was to himself. Yet, in disease, he forgot himself, and was always ready and anxious to help others. His heart was so big that there was always a place for the one in trouble, whether friend or stranger. Well do I remember seeing the tears stream down his cheeks when appealing for help for one who had been his loyal friend. Kind of heart as a child yet possessing the courage of a lion to defend his convictions against all comers—and with what great eloquence did he speak his thoughts and convictions. His was the eloquence which swept all before it and brought multitudes to their feet as he pleaded his cause with logic and power of speech that could not be resisted. And be it said always that his power as an orator was used in protecting the interests of the great common people of his country, who by the millions looked to him as their champion in times of stress.

No man in the American Congress during the last 10 years could hold the attention of his colleagues or of the country by his spoken word and magnetic power as closely as did Senator JAMES. Read his speeches during his terms in the House of Representatives and his term in the Senate and you will always find an earnest and eloquent plea for the oppressed or a patriotic appeal for the safety and betterment of his country. His mind and heart were too big for little things, and when he spoke the Nation listened. During his service in the House and Senate Senator JAMES was ever recognized as the spokesman of his party when great questions of party policy were debated, and when his country was assailed party friend and party foe alike looked to him as their leader to voice their sentiments with his characteristic force and natural eloquence, and never once in his career as a public servant did he fail those who believed in him.

When OLLIE JAMES died the poor and oppressed of the land lost their greatest champion. When he passed over the river thousands of homes in this great land of ours felt that a personal loss had befallen them, and the funeral train, as it sped to his home in Kentucky, was met at every station by hundreds and thousands with tears and sympathy. At one station hundreds of miles away from his old home a working woman pushed her way through the crowd, and placing a small coin in the hands of one of the Senator's friends requested that he buy a flower and place it on the grave when the body of the great statesman was laid away in the soil that gave him birth. A tribute like this from a working woman in a distant State would have been prized by Senator JAMES more than tributes from kings and potentates, and this humble woman's tribute to his memory was more eloquent and spoke in greater volume for his great career as a statesman and champion of human rights than we can speak here to-day.

During the 10 years that OLLIE JAMES served in the House of Representatives and his 6 years in the Senate he was assigned to the highest places of leadership and statesmanship, and never a single time did he fail to measure up to the expectations of his friends and of the patriotic citizens of his country. As he lay on his sick bed he was given an overwhelming vote of confidence by his party in Kentucky for its leadership for another six years in the Senate. What a calamity for his native State and his country that death did not permit him to carry out the wishes of his friends and admirers.

Shortly after the election in 1916 I called a conference of some of his friends at Louisville, at which Senator JAMES was present, and suggested that we form an organization to present his name at the proper time to the country as a candidate for President in 1920. The plan was rejected by Senator JAMES over the protest of his friends, but I believed then, and believe now, that had he permitted us to have carried out our plans that in the next election, had he lived, he would have been looked on with favor as the standard bearer of our party. Having been the spokesman of his party in the last two national conventions, where is the man in the Nation to-day who could have had a greater claim to the confidence and love and trust of the American people?

All who knew Senator JAMES loved and trusted him. That love was never betrayed and that trust was never misplaced. Beginning early in life a public career, as the years swiftly passed new honors were rapidly conferred on him, and rapidly his fame grew from that of the idol of his party in his native State to the trusted leader and spokesman of his party in the Nation.

We are proud that Kentucky gave him to the Nation. His last speech was a wonderful oration, defending the honor of his country and worthy of the greatest traditions of that glorious flag of our beloved country.

The body of OLLIE M. JAMES lies in the soil of the country in the old Kentucky home which gave him his birth, but his spirit moves on, inspiring those left behind to higher and nobler things. The great and honorable career of Senator OLLIE M. JAMES will be an incentive to Kentuckians and Americans yet unborn to labor for the highest ideals of democracy and the betterment of humanity. The devoted wife and the idolizing father and brother and sister left behind have the deepest sympathy of all who knew and loved OLLIE JAMES, and if on this occasion they could speak millions of loyal, patriotic American citizens would wish them Godspeed.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague [Mr. LANGLEY], who is unavoidably detained, may have unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD upon the life of Senator JAMES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks that his colleague [Mr. LANGLEY] be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the life of Senator JAMES. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, it is appropriate that we assemble here on this Sabbath day out of respect for and to commemorate the public service of OLLIE M. JAMES, late a Senator from Kentucky; but nothing that we can say will add to the splendid record which he made for himself as a public servant and statesman.

Mr. JAMES was brought up in western Kentucky and first attracted the attention of the State as a page in the Kentucky Legislature when a mere lad.

During the session of the legislature, in which he served as a page, it was learned that he possessed the ability to speak, and members of that body amused themselves by assembling in the hall of the house of representatives each day, or frequently, 30 minutes before the convening of the session to have him address them, the privilege to do so being granted to him by consent of the members and house officials. And in those speeches he convinced all who heard him that he possessed natural ability as an orator, that he was full of courage and fairly ablaze with enthusiasm and possessed the qualities of leadership, which elements destined him to be a great man and a great leader among men.

By the time he had reached the age of 25 he was recognized throughout Kentucky as one of the State's greatest lawyers, its greatest speaker, and as his party's champion.

At the age of 31 he was nominated by the Democrats of the first congressional district of Kentucky and elected to Congress. His election, however, was not regarded as the victory of the first district alone, but as the victory of his party throughout the State, for at that age he had spoken throughout Kentucky from the Mississippi to the Big Sandy and from the Ohio River to the Tennessee line and was, therefore, acquainted with the entire State and was idolized by his own party and respected by his political opponents for his ability and courage.

In Congress he soon became a leader and a national figure. He wielded a dominating influence in the organization of the Sixty-second Congress and was a leader in the measures enacted during that Congress. He retired from the House at the end of the Sixty-second Congress to enter the United States Senate, where he was again recognized as a leader and where he was from the beginning the champion of the policies and measures of the national administration.

Time will not permit me to recount or refer to many of his achievements, but it is sufficient to say that the fact that he was chosen to preside over the Democratic national presidential conventions of 1912 and 1916 is conclusive of the high esteem in which he was held by his countrymen. And, Mr. Speaker, I pause here to say that had he lived he in all probability would have been the nominee of the next presidential convention of his party, instead of its presiding officer, but, alas, the hand of death levied its toll upon him, and the spirit which made him great returned to the God who gave it.

OLLIE M. JAMES was a man of superior mental and physical strength and stern in his dealings with competing forces, but tender-hearted and sympathetic in his dealings with those who needed assistance and apparently never as happy as when administering to the needs of those who were unable to care for themselves.

He was a hard student of national and international questions, but along with these duties it was remarkable how closely he looked after matters of detail. He was always ready to give such time as was necessary to constituents and friends whose interests needed his attention in the various departments of the Government, and the success of his friends in matters of that kind always made him happy.

Mr. Speaker, I shall never forget the last time I ever accompanied him on a departmental errand. It was the day before his mother's death, which occurred only a few months before his death. On that occasion I accompanied him to the Department of Justice in the interest of a constituent in whom we both were interested. As soon as I met him I observed that he was not normal, but that he was apparently greatly disturbed. I had been with him but a few minutes when he told me that he was greatly worried; said he had dreamed the night before that his mother was dangerously ill, and that the family had wired him to hurry to her bedside. "The dream," he continued, "woke me, and I could not go to sleep again, as a result of which I had an early breakfast and went to my office earlier than usual, trying all the time to dismiss and forget the dream that I had had, as I had no word that my mother was ill. But soon after my arrival at the office my wife called me by phone and informed me that she had received a telegram to me from my sister stating that mother was dangerously ill and for me to come at once." He, with Mrs. James, left for Kentucky on the first train at 2 o'clock that afternoon. I accompanied them as far as my home town in Kentucky and talked with him a goodly portion of the afternoon and evening, and many times during our conversations he referred to his dream of the night previous, which seemed to impress him that his mother would not recover, and that he would not reach her bedside before death laid its claim upon her. I read in the Louisville papers the next evening that a telegram had been delivered to him by the conductor in charge of the train announcing the death of his mother. He was hurrying to her bedside, but the guardian angel with its "steeds of wind and chariot of fire" preceded him to the old home and bade her go.

He was then in the prime of life, the vigor of manhood, and apparently in the best of health, and little did I think that my next journey to Kentucky would be to accompany his remains to their last resting place. But who can prophesy against death or foretell its coming, even to the strong and vigorous?

His death, his going, in what seemed to be the middle of an unexcelled career cast a gloom over the Nation and filled the hearts of the men, women, and children of his native State with sorrow and sadness.

After the funeral train which bore his remains and the funeral party crossed the Kentucky line at Big Sandy River, it was met by vast crowds at practically every station, hoping and asking for an opportunity to look once more upon the face of him who until a few hours before had been for many years Kentucky's foremost citizen. There was strong contention from every crowd, from everywhere, that his remains should be interred in the State cemetery at Frankfort; that the State might continue to claim all that was left of him. With that contention I did not agree. He had served his State and the Nation and served them well; but that service having been concluded, I felt, and now feel, that it was fitting and proper that his remains be returned to his family and childhood associates, who had first claim upon him, and be laid to rest, as they were, at the feet of his mother, who gave him to the State and the Nation. But it matters not where rest his remains, his memory will live in the hearts of the people of Kentucky.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, several of the friends of Senator JAMES who wish to pay tribute to his memory are unavoidably absent at this moment, therefore I ask leave that they may be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the request of the gentleman will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, Senator OLLIE M. JAMES was a masterful man. He died while still in the prime of his splendid powers—in the very flower of his years. He was a typical Kentuckian and was therefore very popular in Kentucky—his native State. Since Henry Clay, John J. Crittenden, John C. Breckinridge, and John G. Carlisle, he was probably the most popular man in Kentucky. Yet young as he was, his fame breaking over State lines made him a popular national figure. He served in both House and Senate and stood in the front rank in both. I heard an old farmer say once that no man can be truly denominated popular until he was generally called by his Christian name. If that be the correct test, Senator JAMES was certainly one of the most popular men betwixt the two seas which wash our shores. He was rarely spoken of as Senator JAMES or even as Mr. JAMES. He was known and talked about as "OLLIE" JAMES all over the land. Frequently people left off the JAMES and discoursed about and quoted "OLLIE." The name "OLLIE" seems to have differentiated him from all his fellows. On account of his vast bulk he was known by sight to everybody in Washington. As he walked the streets of the finest Capital in the world even the urchins would say to each other, "There goes OLLIE JAMES!" or "There goes OLLIE!" In a certain sense he had become a sort of national institution. House and Senate guides say that nearly all the visitors and sightseers asked to have OLLIE JAMES pointed out to them.

Being born a Kentuckian myself, and most of my mother's people having lived and being buried in his congressional district, when he came into the House I cultivated him and we became fast friends, and I greatly enjoyed his companionship and highly prized his friendship. His friendships were not lukewarm but intense and enduring. He was simple as a child and he remained to the end a big-hearted boy, although a great Representative and a great Senator.

I am inclined to believe that his unusual stature and physical massiveness were valuable assets in his political career.

He was a strong debater and participated in many hot verbal contests in both branches of Congress. He was neither timid nor half-hearted. There was no trouble to discover on which side he was on. He was either wholly for a proposition or wholly against. He was an enthusiast as to both men and things. He was exceedingly in love with the noblest of quadrupeds and "the sport of kings." He knew the running record of every horse in America worthy of mention. If he had been rich, he would undoubtedly have owned the finest string of horses in Kentucky, which is saying a great deal, as Kentucky is the home of the running horse, and has been always. Next to a splendid man or a beautiful woman Kentuckians love a fine horse most of all animated nature. In love and affection for a horse Kentuckians rival the Bedouins of the desert. That love and affection for the horse remain with Kentuckians who expatriate themselves wherever their feet may wander or under whatever stars they pitch their tents.

I have already stated that Senator JAMES was a strong debater. He was also a most successful stump speaker, as stump speaking is still a favorite recreation in Kentucky. No State in the Union can show a longer roster of distinguished stumpers than Kentucky. Of these John Breckinridge, Mason Brown, Henry Clay, Cassius M. Clay, Richard H. Menifee, Thomas F. Marshall, Edward Marshall, Humphrey Marshall, John J. Crittenden, John Pope, Archibald Dixon, John C. Breckinridge, William C. P. Breckinridge, J. Proctor Knott, John Marshall Harlan, John W. Stevenson, James B. Beck, John S. Williams, Roger Hanson, Elijah Hise, Thomas L. Jones, Leslie Combs, and James A. McKenzie are among the most conspicuous.

In one field of oratory OLLIE JAMES was supreme—the national convention. There is only one nosier place on earth than a national convention—that is a boiler factory. His Brobdingnagian size and his lion's roar compelled both silence and attention. He spoke in sweeping, all-embracing sentences which aroused the convention to wildest enthusiasm, which was largely a personal tribute to the mighty Kentuckian. He enjoyed national conventions to the full and was permanent chairman of two of them—an exceptional honor and compliment to any man. It was no more than he richly deserved, for a more thoroughgoing or a more enthusiastic Democrat never lived. He made no apology for being a partisan, but above and beyond all things he was an American, and love of country was his master passion. He could see no incompatibility in both a partisan and a patriot. He was honest in both and gloried in them. Kentucky has lost a noble son; the Nation a great citizen.

THE LATE SENATOR HUSTING, OF WISCONSIN.

The resolutions were agreed to.

Mr. VOIGT. Mr. Speaker, we are gathered here to-day to pay tribute to the memory of one who rose from humble beginnings to the high place of the United States Senate, PAUL O. HUSTING. Although Senator HUSTING was a resident of my district, it was my misfortune not to have had an intimate acquaintance with him, and I therefore can not speak of him with the same authority as my colleagues present here, who knew him long and well. I must speak of Senator HUSTING more as one who draws his information from a book which is open to every one, rather than one who gets it from close personal contact and friendship.

The one leading thought which forces itself upon me when I contemplate Senator HUSTING's career is that in this great and glorious Republic a man may achieve practically anything he aspires to, if he is willing to pay the price in preparation and perseverance. He may step from the hovel to the palace, from the plow to the Presidency. We do not ask who were his ancestors, or whether blue blood flows in his veins; we make no artificial distinctions. There are but two qualifications that we recognize—ability and character.

Senator HUSTING was a self-made man. He was born at Fond du Lac, Wis., on April 25, 1866, and on his mother's side was a grandson of Solomon Juneau, founder of the city of Milwaukee, and one of the romantic figures of Wisconsin. He was denied the advantages of a college or even a high-school education. At 16 years of age we find him working as clerk in a general store at Mayville, Wis., which place was to become his permanent home. He became in turn assistant postmaster, railway mail clerk, and clerk in the office of the secretary of state. All these positions gave him an education in the great school of experience. He studied law in the office of a brother-in-law, and also attended the university law school a short period. To illustrate his perseverance, let me quote what he is reported to have said of his early career:

I had only one book—a law dictionary—and little money. I could not make the headway I wanted this way, so I returned to Mayville. My brother-in-law, C. W. Lamereux, and Frank Lawrence were law partners. I told them I would collect accounts and bills due if they would allow me to study in their law library. At the end of a year—I still had but the one book—Lamereux and myself entered into a partnership which continued for 14 years—until he was elected a judge.

In 1902 and 1904 the Senator was elected district attorney of his home county. In 1906 he was elected State senator and reelected in 1910. He rose to prominence in the legislature almost immediately. He stood for the rights of the people and won fame in advocating and fighting for legislation for the preservation of the State's natural resources. It was only natural that with his ability and gift for leadership his party should single him out for its highest honors, and accordingly the Democrats in 1914 nominated him for United States Senator to succeed the late Isaac Stephenson. Although Wisconsin is ordinarily a safe Republican State, after a spirited contest Senator HUSTING was elected by a narrow margin.

The Senator was a man of the people in every sense of the word. He was entirely free from affectation. Indeed to his democratic manners he owed much of his success. Anyone could approach him, and he met the man in overalls with the same cordiality as those of wealth and fame. He possessed that absolute simplicity which is always the accompaniment of true greatness.

Senator HUSTING had a fondness for outdoor life. His friends tell me that he was never so happy as when he could disconnect himself from the toils and troubles of the world and with a few chosen friends could go on a hunting or fishing trip. His passion for life in the open cost him his life, as he met with a fatal accident on October 21, 1917, while on a hunting expedition. Not only the State of Wisconsin but the whole Nation was shocked to hear of the Senator's tragic death. The funeral in his home city of Mayville was participated in by practically every man, woman, and child, and there were men from all parts of the State and beyond to show their affection and respect.

The career of Senator HUSTING should be an inspiration to every American boy, and especially a poor boy. It proves that in this country a young man may attain fame and fortune if he will apply himself. There are no barriers which can not be overcome by reasonable intelligence and grit. May his example inspire others, and may the opportunities for achievement always remain open to the young men of the country as they were open and seized upon by our deceased Senator.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have incorporated in the proceedings of this day a eulogy delivered by Circuit Judge Martin Luech, of Wisconsin, at the funeral of Senator HUSTING.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to print in the proceedings the eulogy delivered by Judge Luech. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The eulogy is as follows:

EULOGY DELIVERED BY CIRCUIT JUDGE MARTIN L. LUECH, OF WISCONSIN, AT THE FUNERAL OF SENATOR HUSTING AT MAYVILLE, WIS., OCTOBER 24, 1917.

The grim reaper never gathers in anyone, no matter what may be his age or condition, without leaving behind some relative or friend to lament his departure, but the feelings aroused by death are as varied as the circumstances under which it occurs. When a person dies after mortal illness has long preyed upon his vitals, death is regarded as an angel of mercy, a friendly hand that leads from this valley of shadows and tears to the blessings of an everlasting abiding place. If it be one whose whitened locks, dimmed eyes, and stiffened joints inform us that his "race is run," we are prepared for his death; his departure is accepted as the natural consummation of his earthly career; and if he has "fought a good fight and kept the faith," the sorrows of the parting are mingled with the joys of victory achieved and duty finished. When the summons comes to the child before the duties of life begin, we console ourselves with the reflection that pain, suffering, sorrow, and labor have been spared it. But in the sudden call of the Master to a man in the prime of life, in the very morning of usefulness, with what seems to be a bright and beckoning future, full of reward, with unsatisfied desires and opportunities for service, nothing but a faith unquestioned and profound can find anything to dry the tears or relieve the suffering. The visitation of death to one in the roseate hours of hope and promise passes our understanding, disappoints our fondest expectations, and shocks our most loving hopes. However, inquiry as to why cherished ties are thus sundered is useless, because it is not for us to say when the proper time has come to die. It is but an example of the uncertainty of life, and reminds us that—

"Death takes us unawares,
And stays our hurrying feet,
The great design unfinished lies,
Our lives are incomplete."

We have gathered here, filled with emotions of sadness to pay our last tributes of love and respect to one whose tragic end has covered an entire community, a whole State, with gloom, shocked this great Nation, and brought fourth spontaneous and widespread expressions of deep sorrow and regret at his untimely death. The sad privilege has come to me of giving public utterance to the sentiments of sorrow, affection, and esteem that throb in the hearts of myriads of friends and admirers of Senator PAUL O. HUSTING in this sad hour. But what shall I say? What can I say? How can language which, at its best and when skillfully employed is but an imperfect instrument for the conveyance of thought, describe with any degree of accuracy the emotions that overwhelm us? I was stunned by the unexpected news of his quick response to the swift messenger that bore him the summons to quit this earthly existence, and have been unable to calm myself. When I was first told of his death my reply was the common one: "It can not be; it can not be." His rugged nature, his buoyant spirit, everything, pointed to a long, useful, and successful career. Even now it all seems too impossible to be true. But this coffin, as it holds the cold and lifeless form of him who once was all life and action, loving his family and adored them, honored by hosts of admirers and friends, reminds us that he, too, had to bow to the Divine decree; and although it leaves the bitterest cup of grief for the father and mother, the sister and brothers, universal experience is again confirmed that death has no season and no time.

"Leaves have their time to fall
And flowers to wither at the north wind's breath,
And stars to set; but all,
Thou hast all seasons for thine own, O death!"

Senator HUSTING was my friend; he was the friend of thousands in this county and of multitudes in the State and Nation. An acquaintance formed between us in early life soon ripened into a friendship which continued uninterruptedly and unbroken to the day of his death. It is not a part of my purpose to speak of any of the incidents of that long period that was very dear to me. His whole life as it was thus unfolded bears witness to the fact that he possessed in a marked degree those sterling qualities that gather men around him. His friendships were warm and strong. He clung to his friends with tenacity, was faithful to them, and attracted strong friendships to himself. There was in his nature so much of deep and true loyalty, so much of fidelity to the advancement of his friends that this is perhaps one of the most beautiful phases of his life. Next to his family, his friends will miss him most. In his death I feel I have experienced a keen personal loss, and I join with the hosts who enjoyed his friendship in the full chorus of respect and affection for him:

"Friends are in life's exchange the sterling coin,
True tender for all the rarest forms of joy;
The only pauper is the friendless man."

Perhaps a brief reference to his career as a lawyer might not be entirely out of place. He was generally recognized to be a very able lawyer. In the court room, in the trial of cases, he had few superiors. Lawyers who had to appear against him always knew that they had to deal with a formidable opponent. His mind was clear, active, and decisive. A splendid judge of human nature, he was quick to discern the probable effect of every point as it arose upon the trial, and with almost unerring judgment and prompt decision he met it so as to best serve the interests of his client. In his arguments he was direct, earnest, fearless, and convincing. Through him no client ever suffered for want of proper presentation of a case.

PAUL O. HUSTING had received many honors at the hands of the people among whom he lived and among whom he died, and he never occupied a public position that was not deserved and in which he did not reflect credit upon himself. With all his honors he never assumed to elevate himself above the general level of the community of which he was a part. He always associated with all classes and was proud to keep himself constantly enrolled as one of the plain people, as one of the great rank and file. He had a kind and generous heart and was always willing to divide with others and respond to the appeals of those less fortunate. He had that charity which assisted the needy and overlooked the faults of others. But with these kindly qualities there was combined the other more rugged characteristics of determination, self-control, and firmness, which he possessed to a marked extent and which were the predominant elements of his character.

He was always fair, with a mind open to reason, but when once convinced upon any subject he became firm as adamant. He had convictions upon all important questions and was ready to defend them against all adversaries in all places and upon all occasions without regard to the effect upon his personal fortunes. He was governed solely by his convictions, knew no fear, and never turned aside from the path of right or duty as he was given the light to see it. In all of his many contests, whether in the court room, before the people, or upon the floor of the senate of this State or in the United States Senate, he was an open, fair but fearless fighter and in prosecuting his cause never resorted to subterfuge or deceitful tactics.

It can truly be said of the departed that his life fairly illustrates the great possibilities of the American youth in this country of free institutions and equal opportunities. Starting without the aid of fortune, without any early advantages except such as are enjoyed by boys with parents in ordinary circumstances, but with a resolute and resistless spirit, he forged ahead from the beginning and by force of his own ability and industry reached a high plane among his fellow men, occupying at the time of his death a public position second only to that of President of this great Republic. How eloquently that argues for free America and its institutions. What an example, what an inspiration it is to every American boy. His whole life, private and public, his entire career, and all the elements of his character combined to make him what he proved himself to be from the time he represented the great State of Wisconsin in the United States Senate, namely, a true American citizen, an American statesman, and above all an American patriot.

He could not be otherwise than the most loyal citizen because he sincerely loved his country, had an abiding faith in its mission, and a deep sympathy with its institutions. He was a statesman not only because he brought a high order of ability and talent to the discharge of his duties as Senator but because he took a broad view of questions and treated a public office not as an instrument for his own aggrandizement but as a means through which he might serve his country and contribute in some degree to the well-being of his fellow citizens. His patriotism was of the kind that was willing to make sacrifices for the country he loved.

In the present crisis that hovers over the Nation, the gravest since the Civil War, Senator HUSTING, patriot and statesman, adhered with unwearied perseverance to the course that his convictions assured him would best safeguard the liberties and institutions of this Republic. Tried by the severest tests, he was never found wanting, and was to the last a steadfast and fearless advocate of a united America, the outspoken champion of a country unified in sentiment, united in purpose, and undivided in everything essential to intensity of action. His clarion call for unity, delivered in the Senate on the 4th day of April, will live to inspire the generations that are yet to come.

"Let us all," he said, "stand together, united in spirit, purpose, and determination, and let us rise to meet the issue with the same faith, courage, devotion, and resolution that have sustained, inspired, and distinguished the American people always."

In the midst of his greatest usefulness, at a time when he can not well be spared, death called him. To his country the loss is almost irreparable, and in the affection of the people a void is left that can not be filled.

It can truthfully be said of Senator HUSTING that his home life, as well as his private career and public activities, were ideal. He died with the words on his lips that characterized his whole existence, "I did the best I knew how." A good and useful life actuated by noble purpose. No man can do better.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, Wisconsin has been called upon to mourn during this Congress the loss of two of her distinguished sons. Last Sunday we eulogized the life and character and public services of our late colleague, James H. Davidson. To-day we eulogize the life, character, and public services of the late Senator PAUL OSCAR HUSTING. In the death of these two distinguished men our State has suffered a distinct loss. So far as their public services are concerned, the Nation has likewise met with a distinct loss.

Senator HUSTING did not have a long service in the Senate of the United States, due to his untimely death, caused by being accidentally shot by a brother while on a hunting trip on October 21, 1917. There was no relief immediately at hand. The heartbroken brother got the wounded Senator to a near-by farmhouse as rapidly as possible and summoned medical aid, but upon its arrival it was found that death was inevitable.

The Senator knew that his end was near. He did not lose consciousness, but calmy discussed his impending fate, giving directions as to his funeral, insisting that it should be as simple as possible and be held as quickly as possible on account of his mother.

Thus ended the career of Senator HUSTING. His life began in humble surroundings, as my colleague [Mr. VOIGT] has already stated. He had few advantages, but toiled on and got an education in the hard school of experience. His labors as a clerk, as a railway mail clerk, as a clerk in the secretary of state's office, all served as stepping-stones to attain his ambition to become a lawyer.

It was while he was acting as a clerk in the secretary of state's office at Madison that he took a course of reading in law and fitted himself for the bar examination. He was admitted to practice law in 1895. He had little to begin with, no means with which to purchase a library, but he had that which was invaluable to the success of a lawyer—determination and a purpose to win. His career at the bar was eminently successful. As district attorney for Dodge County for two terms he gave to that office a splendid administration. His success commended him to the favorable consideration of the people of that county when they sought a candidate for the State senate. He was triumphantly elected and held that office for a period of eight years. I shall not speak of his experience as a State senator. My colleague, Mr. BROWNE, who was associated with him in the State senate, will give that in detail. Suffice it to say that while he was a State senator he was known as a Progressive Democrat and became the leader of that faction in the State legislature. He was actuated by a desire to conserve the natural resources of our State, and to that end fathered water-power legislation. He was also interested in the income tax, in the popular election of United States Senators, and in the initiative and referendum, and in other matters affecting the interests of our people. His career as a State senator was a successful career, and when in 1914 it became necessary to elect a successor to Senator Stephenson he became the candidate of the Democratic Party for that high office. His opponent was ex-Gov. Francis E. McGovern, whom he defeated by a bare 1,000 majority. Coming to the United States Senate, in this larger forum he was actuated by the same high motives that actuated him while in the State senate. Here he sought to incorporate in our national laws his views as to the conservation of our natural resources. It was here that he made some of his most effective speeches in connection with water-power bills, in connection with the coal and oil leasing bills. These measures were close to his heart, and he gave to their consideration the utmost that was in him.

In April, 1916, the English steamer Sussex was sunk by a German submarine in the English Channel. President Wilson sent a note of warning to the German Government to the effect that the United States could not further tolerate such action on the part of Germany. Thousands of people in the United States feared that this note of warning to Germany might lead to ultimate war, and thousands of telegrams were showered upon Members of Congress, and many letters were sent. Senator HUSTING rose in the Senate and declared that the telegrams were evidently the result of a propaganda, and called attention to the similarity of the language used in the telegrams, and later asked that there should be an investigation to determine the source of the funds back of the propaganda.

His bold attitude in this connection made him a national figure and marked the beginning of his strong and consistent support of America as against propaganda of any class, sect, or creed which sought to weaken the hands of the Government. In maintaining this attitude he knew that he was running counter to the views of thousands of citizens of Wisconsin and of the United States, and he received much criticism. But it was characteristic of the man that notwithstanding this criticism he held to his course until death took him from the scene of his activities.

Upon his death there were many messages of condolence received from people, high and low, from all parts of the United States. Among those was a message sent to the Senator's mother by President Wilson as follows:

Your son's death has come to me as a great personal grief. He was one of the most conscientious public servants I have ever known and had entered upon a career of usefulness to his State and to the country which was of the highest promise. I grieve with you with all my heart.

His sudden death was a great shock to the people of our State, for we had come to know him as a man of ability and of fearless conduct and as one who, having convictions, never hesitated to express or defend them. He was in that respect more of the patriot than of the politician. He did not consider the consequence of either word or act. Once reaching a conclusion, he abided by it to the end.

There are many admirable traits of character in the life of Senator HUSTING worthy of our emulation. It can be truthfully said of him as was said by the great author—

To thine ownself be true, and it must follow, as the night the day, thou canst not then be false to any man.

He was a good lawyer, keen and alert, and made the most of his case. He had a keen perception to find the weak spots in an opponent's case. He was strong before a jury in appeal and was clear in argument of law propositions before the court. He was a man who was generous by disposition, open-hearted, and frank. The wants of the needy appealed to him, and he sought to meet these wants to the extent of his ability. Those who knew him intimately had implicit confidence in him, and he never betrayed that confidence. The friends he had were bound to him by bands of steel. His outspoken word, his frankness, may have aroused enemies, but he did not desist from his plan or purpose, once determined upon. When he was shot and knew that the end was near his last words were, "I did the best I knew how," and those who knew him will believe that to be true. He did the best he knew how; and if all of us would do the same, this would be a better world. In thus paying our tribute of respect to a distinguished man we are doing but justice to ourselves. Wisconsin and the Nation mourn the loss of Senator PAUL O. HUSTING.

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Speaker, Congress has convened this Sunday morning to commemorate the memory of Senator PAUL O. HUSTING, of Wisconsin.

Few United States Senators have ever attained a higher place in the Senate or entered upon a public career that gave more promise than Senator PAUL HUSTING in his two years in the United States Senate.

I had the good fortune to become acquainted with Senator HUSTING in the year 1906, when we both entered the State Senate of Wisconsin. I served in that body with Senator HUSTING for over six years and loved and highly respected him. Senator HUSTING was a Democrat and I a Republican, yet in State matters we frequently conferred and in a majority of cases supported the same measures.

It is interesting to review in some detail the lives and antecedents of those public men who show such splendid traits of character and such marked talents as Senator HUSTING.

PAUL O. HUSTING was born in 1866 at Fond du Lac, Wis. He was the son of John P. Husting and Mary M. Husting (née Juneau), the latter being one of the 16 children of Solomon Juneau.

In the city of Milwaukee, overlooking Lake Michigan, stands the figure of a man fashioned in bronze. This heroic statue, that attracts the notice of the passer-by, is that of the rugged old pioneer, Solomon Juneau, the first white settler and founder of the city of Milwaukee, in 1814.

Leaving his home in the valley of the St. Lawrence, at the age of 21, Solomon Juneau took to his canoe and singing the songs of the Voyageurs followed the course of Father Pere Marquette by river and land through the trackless forests and uncharted waters of Wisconsin, making his way to Green Bay, from thence farther south to Lake Michigan, where he founded the city of Milwaukee.

I will not digress further, only to say that Solomon Juneau, the grandfather of Senator HUSTING, was a man of sterling character, revered and loved by all who knew him, including the various tribes of Indians, who called him "Friend Solomon" and who advised and counseled with him.

He was a philanthropist and gave churches, public buildings, parks, and the first courthouse to the city of Milwaukee. He represented the Government in many of its negotiations with the Indians, and his accomplishments along these lines alone would perpetuate his memory. He lived to see Milwaukee a flourishing city and was its first mayor.

PAUL O. HUSTING finished the public schools of Wisconsin at the age of 17. He became clerk in a general store, railway postal clerk, and bookkeeper in the office of the secretary of state. He attended the law school of the University of Wisconsin, passed the State bar examination, and began the practice of law in his home city in 1895; was elected district attorney in 1902, which office he held until he was elected to the State senate in 1906. He was recognized by the judges and bar of Wisconsin as a well read and very successful lawyer, who carefully prepared his cases, as well as a strong advocate, who could present his case in a forceful, logical way to a court or jury.

His direct, incisive style of argument, his use of the homely, trite phrases of the common people, made him popular with juries and in demand as a campaign speaker.

Senator HUSTING was a student, a great reader, with an accurate and retentive memory. When he entered the State senate he soon became prominent throughout the State as one of the leaders of that body.

During the period Senator HUSTING was in the State senate and largely through his aggressive championship, Wisconsin wrote more progressive legislation in the statute books than in any like period of time in the history of the State. Most of this legislation has stood the test of the highest courts and remains on the statute books of Wisconsin to-day as it was first written. Among the important acts of legislation which will always be associated with Senator PAUL O. HUSTING are laws conserving the natural resources of the State, State income tax, initiative and referendum, election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people, workmen's compensation laws, laws protecting woman and child labor, 2-cent railroad-rate fare law, and the corrupt practices act.

Senator HUSTING took his seat in the United States Senate in 1914, being the first Senator from Wisconsin to be elected to the United States Senate by popular vote. Wisconsin is a strong Republican State, and at the time Senator HUSTING was elected to the Senate no other Democrat on the ticket was elected, which attests the popularity and high regard in which Senator HUSTING was held by the people of his native State. Senator HUSTING is one of the six Democrats that the people of Wisconsin have honored by electing to the United States Senate in the history of the State.

Entering the United States Senate a few months before the beginning of the European war, Senator HUSTING did not go through the probationary period which has almost become traditional in that dignified body but at once took an active part in the important legislation pending before the Senate. His speeches on the conservation of our water powers and other national resources, his speeches on the first revenue bill, and his ringing patriotic speeches in support of the President in all legislation leading up to and after war was declared gave him a high standing with his colleagues in the Senate.

He knew when he voted in favor of the declaration of war that he would antagonize many of his lifelong friends and political supporters, yet this did not swerve him in the least from doing what he believed to be his duty. Senator HUSTING'S speeches on war measures were quoted and commented favorably upon by the press of the country and brought him into national prominence.

The splendid career of Senator PAUL O. HUSTING came to a sudden end October 21, 1917, by an unavoidable accident. While hunting he was killed by the accidental discharge of a gun in the hands of one of his companions.

In the death of Senator PAUL O. HUSTING the State of Wisconsin lost a courageous, manly son and the United States Senate a talented, fearless legislator.

In the brief time allotted me, I have only touched on a few of the many interesting events in the remarkable life of Senator HUSTING.

He was domestic in his tastes and made the parental home his abiding place, and the hearthstone ties were as endearing and bound him as closely when he reached manhood's estate as when he was a little child. His mother, father, brothers, and sisters idolized him, and he found it the greatest pleasure of his life to be with them.

When he was elected to the United States Senate he purchased a home in Washington, where he lived surrounded by the members of his family.

PAUL HUSTING, as he was known by his friends, was a man of the highest ideals, who possessed as great and as splendid a type of courage as any man I have ever met. At all times and on all occasions and on all questions, PAUL HUSTING had the courage of his convictions. He was an original thinker and possessed a strong, logical mind. He respected precedent and authority, but if it did not square with his conscience and stand the test of his logic he was not afraid to advocate ideas that were new or to stand for or prevent the discarding of ideas that were old, no matter if he stood alone and was opposed by an array of talent that impressed upon others absolute infallibility.

Senator HUSTING always had the self-confidence and courage to champion the thing he believed to be right. I once heard him quote after a fight in the legislature when he and his friends were outvoted these words from Lincoln:

"I am not bound to win, but I am bound to be true. I am not bound to succeed, but I am bound to live up to what light I have. I must stand with anybody that stands right; stand with him while he is right, and part with him when he is wrong."

When Gen. Grant lay upon his death bed a friend asked him what, in these final and suffering days as he looked back over his career, brought the greatest satisfaction to his mind. The friend may have expected the old commander to mention something he had done—his plan for the capture of Vicksburg, his scheme for reducing Richmond, his plea for the purely secular conduct of the public schools—but the reply went deeper; not any one deed but the lifelong purpose now sustained him, and he said: "I take chief pleasure in the fact that I have always had the will to do my duty."

PAUL HUSTING took pleasure in the fact that he always had the will to do his duty. He was a man such as the poet describes in these lines:

> His life was gentle, and the elements
> So mix'd in him, that Nature might stand up
> And say to all the world, "This was a man!"

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Members desiring to do so may be permitted to print in the RECORD remarks on the life, character, and public services of Senator HUSTINGS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that Members be permitted to extend in the RECORD remarks on the life, character, and public services of the late Senator HUSTING. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SENATE.

MONDAY, February 24, 1919.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, as we face the most serious problems that ever confronted mankind, the most difficult problems that were ever put with their tremendous burden upon the heart and mind of the lovers of Thy law, we pray that we may have the grace that cometh from Thee, that we may have the vision that only Thy power can open to us, that the spirit of truth and of righteousness may prevail in the earth, that we may be found among those who have the conscious leadership of the spirit of God. We bless Thee that our Nation is seeking the path of peace. We bless Thee that we are united in an effort to establish justice and righteousness in the earth. Do Thou lead us. Preserve us by Thy grace. Correct and change and mold and shape the public opinion of mankind that we may come at last upon the final conclusion that is in harmony with the will of God. For Christ's sake. Amen.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WALSH. I send to the desk a resolution of the Legislature of the State of Montana sent by wire. I ask that it be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

HELENA, MONT., February 22, 1919.

Hon. THOS. J. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

I am directed by resolution of the Montana State Legislature now in session to transmit to you the following resolution:

"Whereas the Congress of the United States passed a law enabling the President of the United States to carry out the guaranteed price for wheat produced in the year 1919 and to protect against undue enhancement in price; and

"Whereas the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives have reported an amendment to the guaranteed wheat-price bill providing that the guaranteed price shall be effective only until the 31st day of October, 1919, instead of until December 31, 1919, as the original law provides; and

"Whereas by the reduction of this limit of time of the guaranteed wheat price it will work great injustice and irreparable injury to the wheat producers of the State of Montana and that the producers of wheat in the State of Montana can not harvest and market their crops for the year 1919 within the limit now sought to be placed for the guarantee of wheat prices; and

"Whereas the limit of time, to wit, October 21, 1919, will enable wheat producers of the States situated in warmer climates to dispose of their wheat within the time limit proposed and thus receive the benefit of the guaranteed wheat price, and it will result in further unjust discrimination in favor of the States more favorably located as to climate conditions to the injury of the wheat producers in the State of Montana: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the Senate of the State of Montana, the House of Representatives concurring, do protest against the changing of the time limit for guaranteed wheat prices to October 31, 1919, as being an unjust discrimination against the wheat producers of Montana; and be it further

"Resolved, That we most respectfully urge upon the Senators and Representatives of the State of Montana that they use every effort to defeat the reducing of the time limit of the guaranteed prices to the end that the wheat producers of the State of Montana and of the Norhwest be given a fair and equal opportunity to compete with the wheat producers of other sections of the United States; be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the State of Montana be directed to transmit by wire the resolution to the Senators and Representatives of the State of Montana at Washington and to the Speaker of the House of Congress and to the legislative assembly of the States of Washington, Idaho, Oregon, North and South Dakota, and Minnesota."

C. T. STEWART, Secretary of State.

Mr. WALSH. I present a further resolution of the Legislature of Montana, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

The resolution is as follows:

House joint memorial 5.

Memorial to Congress of the United States to enact such legislation as may be necessary to permit the honorably discharged soldier, marine, or sailor to retain in his possession such clothing as, under the provisions of paragraph 1165, Army Regulations, he is permitted to take to his home.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States of America:

Your memorialists, the members of the Sixteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, the senate and house concurring, respectfully represent:

Whereas under the provisions of paragraph 1165, Army Regulations, an enlisted man honorably discharged is permitted to wear one suit of uniform outer clothing from the place of termination of his active service to his home, which clothing will be returned within four months after termination of his active service, by mail under a franked label;

Whereas the soldiers, marines, and sailors who have been or are now in the service of the United States that the world might be made safe for democracy willingly went forth to defend the principles of freedom and right, knowing that they might at any time be required to make the supreme sacrifice;

Whereas these soldiers, marines, and sailors have taken much pride in their uniforms and wish the privilege of keeping them in their possession: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house (the senate concurring), That we, the members of the Sixteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, do hereby petition and earnestly pray the Congress of the United States to enact such legislation as may be necessary to change the provisions of paragraph 1165, Army Regulations, and make it possible for an honorably discharged man to retain one suit of uniform outer clothing.

Resolved further, That a copy of this memorial be forwarded by the secretary of state of Montana to the Senate and to the House of Representatives of the United States, and that copies hereof be transmitted by the secretary of the State of Montana to the Senators and Representatives of Montana in Congress.

(Signed) O. W. BELDEN,
Speaker of the House.

(Signed) W. W. MCDOWELL,
President of the Senate.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Montana, ss:

I, C. T. Stewart, secretary of the State of Montana, do hereby certify that the above is a true and correct copy of house joint memorial No. 5, relating to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines retaining their uniforms after discharge, enacted by the sixteenth session of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana and approved by S. V. Stewart, governor of said State, on the 11th day of February, 1919.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Montana at Helena, the capital, this 12th day of February, A. D. 1919.

[SEAL.] C. T. STEWART.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am receiving a great many telegrams with reference to the failure to appropriate for the Federal Employment Service. As a sample of those telegrams and as indicating the sentiment of a great many of our people, I ask that there may be read the telegram which I send to the desk, representing as it does a great many different organizations in my State.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEATTLE, WASH., February 20, 1919.

WASHINGTON DELEGATION IN CONGRESS,
Care of Hon. Wesley L. Jones, United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:

Seattle Soldiers' and Sailors' Placement Bureau, composed of representatives of following organizations, viz: Chamber of Commerce and Commercial Club, War Parents' Association, War Camp Community Service, County Council of Defense, Y. M. C. A., Elks, Jewish Welfare Board, Red Cross, Knights of Columbus, City Council, County Commissioners, Central Labor Council, Building Trades Council, Maritime Council, the Employees' Association American Legions of Liberty, the last named having membership of 7,500.

Returned soldiers and sailors are informed movement on foot to prevent appropriation by Congress of funds with which to operate Government Employment Service. We are sure failure of appropriation would be most unfortunate; in fact, would be a public calamity. We are in close touch with workers of Seattle Government employment office. It has accomplished and is accomplishing good work, and its continuance is necessary in the public interest. Our work of helping to place ex-service men in employment is done through the Government employment office. That branch of the employment work we know to be efficiently performed. We know of no available substitute for it. The records of the employment office show that the Seattle office has in the year 1918 found jobs for 124,000 men. Our work covers last 42 days. In that time 4,000 discharged soldiers and sailors have been placed in employment through the Seattle Government employment office. We respectfully urge you to use your best endeavors to insure the necessary congressional appropriation. Please submit this telegram to Appropriations Committee.

SEATTLE SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' PLACEMENT BUREAU.
By HAROLD PRESTON, Chairman.

Mr. STERLING. I have here a number of telegrams relating to the same subject as the telegram just read at the desk. The telegrams are from State officials, farm bureaus, chambers of commerce, and chairmen of commercial organizations. I send them to the desk and ask that the telegram of the governor of the State be read, and that all the telegrams be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Secretary read as follows:

PIERRE, S. DAK., February 23, 1919.

Senator THOMAS STERLING,
Washington, D. C.:

Mr. McCaffree, our immigration commissioner, has learned the Employment Bureau appropriation may fail. He feels this would have serious consequences. Our cooperation with the Federal Government in the Employment Service was in the main very satisfactory during war times, and it seems to me that it would be unfortunate to have the services discontinued at this time.

PETER NORBECK, Governor.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I send to the desk a telegram which I have received from the secretary of the Michigan State Senate relative to continuing the appropriation for the Federal Employment Bureau. I wish to state that I have received many other telegrams, one from the Detroit Chamber of Commerce, in favor of the continuation of this appropriation, and I have also received, I think, as many as a hundred telegrams in opposition to it. I present this as it comes from the State senate, and ask that it be read.

The telegram was read, as follows:

LANSING, MICH., February 21, 1919.

Hon. CHARLES E. TOWNSEND,
Washington, D. C.:

Michigan Senate to-day adopted resolution unanimously urging favorable action by Congress for Employment Service, which includes returning soldier boys' working reserve and junior section.

D. E. ALWARD, Secretary.

Mr. WARREN. Noting the telegrams that have already been filed, I desire to say that I have received a dozen such. There seems to be a propaganda of that kind. I have also received many letters from those who take the other side of the question. I ask that the letter, which I send to the Secretary's desk, may go into the RECORD, as it comes from the Business Men's Clearing House Co. and takes the other side of the question.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DENVER, COLO., U. S. A., February 4, 1919.

Senator FRANCIS E. WARREN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We note that you are a member of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, and as we are advised that the United States Employment Service is asking an appropriation of several million dollars, you are are no doubt investigating fully matters regarding the service. Accordingly we take the liberty of writing you in reference to same, and especially inasmuch as Wyoming is such a close neighbor to Colorado, and as our company has been serving numerous Wyoming firms for many years past.

We understand that one of the reasons that the United States Employment Service asks such a very large appropriation is in order that they may establish additional offices for the placing of technical, educational, and commercial employees, instead of devoting themselves largely to laborers, as heretofore. We have been placing technical and commercial employees throughout western United States for the past 16 years, and would like to draw your attention to the fact that in this particular field the work is to a small extent only the securing of employment for the unemployed. The work is almost entirely securing better positions and financial advancement to men already fairly well employed. Do you think it is a proper function of the Government to maintain bureaus at public expense the purpose of which will be largely to secure salaried advancement to employees?

Do you think the public would long approve of the Government spending several million dollars annually to maintain offices through which, for instance, a bookkeeper earning $100 per month can secure, free of charge, assistance toward securing a position with some other employer paying say, $140 per month, or through which a mine superintendent earning a salary of $200 can secure a similar position with a larger company paying, say. $250 per month? We know, from our long experience in the employment field, that a Government employment agency handling technical, educational, and commercial employees would necessarily become just such a bureau for securing advancement for men already employed, because, except for a small percentage, our applicants in these lines who are out of employment are either beginners or relatively undesirable employees. If the bureau were to endeavor to serve only the unemployed it could not at all meet the demands of employers in the technical and commercial field, who require experienced, capable men, already demonstrating their ability with some other employer.

We would also like to draw your attention to the fact that if the Government employment offices were to branch out in the field of technical, office, and commercial employees it would be necessary to operate the bureaus at a very heavy expense, and it would cost the Government a large amount for each man placed, as employees of this class can only be secured positions by the bureau submitting to the prospective employer complete typewritten reports upon the applicant's experience and qualifications, together with copies of reference letters which the bureau must have secured by writing to each of the applicant's previous employers. The bureau must employ to handle this work, at high salaries, trained technical men who can pass upon employees of this caliber and comprehend employers' needs. Expensive classification and investigation systems must be employed, as every employee in the technical and professional field has different qualifications and every position different requirements. Heavy telegraphic expenses are often necessary to negotiate the position. Will the public approve of these large expenditures to give employees such assistance?

We understand that the United States Employment Service asks the enormous appropriation that they have requested on the strength of the extraordinary numbers of men whom they state they are placing in positions monthly. May we respectively suggest the advisability of your committee having a thorough check made to verify the results which the Government Employment Service claims to have accomplished?

For instance, we note in daily press statements that 44 State Government employment agencies report the placement of 99,077 men during one week in January. We can not but believe that this is a gross exaggeration. That would be an average of 2,251 per week per State, or 9,752 men placed in positions in one month by each State office. As stated above, we have had long experience in the employment business, have been serving large employers throughout the West, and have an office force of four department managers and seven clerks—nearly as large a force as the Government employment office has here—and if we place 125 to 150 men in definite, permanent positions in one month we have done well. To be sure, we are placing bookkeepers, salesmen, and technical men, while the Government agency has been heretofore handling laborers; still the variance between 150 placements a month and 9,752 is out of proportion.

We question very much if it would be physically possible for the present working forces of the Government Employment Service, in the State of Colorado at least, to approximate the placement of 9,752 employees in definite positions in one month. What is more, with a large percentage of leading companies reducing their forces because of the end of the war, and employers endeavoring in every case possible to reemploy their former men who have been released from military service, we do not believe that anything like 9,752 engagements could have been negotiated in one month in Colorado at this time, and we understand that similar conditions prevail throughout the country.

We understand that the United States Employment Service bases its especial need for $14,800,000 to continue its existance on the grounds of securing employment for returning soldiers, but may we respectfully draw to your attention the fact that an employment agency, either operated by the Government or by private firms, can only secure employment for returned soldiers or others if there is general prosperity—if the mines, mills, and factories are operating full force. If measures were adopted which would tend to increase industrial activity and thereby create a demand for employees, we venture to say that returning soldiers would not have any difficulty in securing employment without requiring the assistance of the Government or any other employment office, because employers everywhere are very anxious to reemploy their previous employees returning from military service if they can possibly do so, newspapers all over the country are running free want ads for returning soldiers, and many colleges, fraternal societies, and civic associations are maintaining free employment exchanges for soldiers. If the demand is created the soldiers will find employment quickly enough.

Yours, truly,

BUSINESS MEN'S CLEARING HOUSE,
S. S. NEWBURY, President.

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask permission to present to the Senate petitions urging the maintenance of the wheat guaranty for the 1919 crop, which I wish to have referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. In this connection I should like to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to the present condition.

There is a guaranty by the President, under a law of Congress, for the crop of 1919, which renders it absolutely impossible for private capital to handle the wheat crop of 1919. There is no appropriation or legislation authorizing it to be handled as it was during the last year by the Wheat Corporation or by the Government. With this Congress adjourned without taking any action on that question, the wheat crop will begin to be marketed in June, and there will be no one to buy it. I merely wish to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to that condition. Petitions are coming in from all over the country. People do not know what to do about making arrangements to handle the crop, as it can not be handled under present legislation.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Minnesota that on Saturday last the House passed a bill designed to carry out the President's guaranty with respect to the wheat price established for 1919. The Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry will meet at 3 o'clock this afternoon to consider that measure, and hopes to make an early report. I have no doubt of the enactment of the legislation at this session of Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. LODGE. I present a memorial of the Board of Trade of Williamstown, Mass., remonstrating against the United States entering into any agreement for a league of nations which will surrender in any degree our right and power of self-defense, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the memorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WILLIAMSTOWN, MASS., February 20, 1919.

Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The Williamstown Board of Trade urges upon Senators and Representatives of Massachusetts in Congress that America should enter into no treaties which surrender in any degree our right and power of self-defense. No nation ever long maintained its freedom which trusted its defense to others. In particular we are unwilling to commit the safety and independence of our country to the decisions of a league of nations made up of our debtors and competitors. Free American has always been one of the greatest influences for world peace and our influence for peace will grow with our wealth and power, provided we maintain our freedom. If we give up our right and our ability to defend ourselves, our growing wealth will be a growing invitation to aggression and will tend toward war, not toward peace. Moreover, Congress has no constitutional right to abandon any part of its jurisdiction or to make a permanent cession of its power to other authorities, either foreign or domestic. The lesson of the war is that the old saying is untrue that it takes two to make a quarrel. One nation made a great war and many nations were needed to restore peace. Our greatest duty now is to strengthen the hands of peaceful nations.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

The resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial 12.

Whereas there is now pending before Congress a measure known as the Kenyon bill, being Senate bill 5397, the intent of which is "To provide for the commencement or prosecution of public works in order to provide increased opportunities for employment during the period of demobilization and industrial readjustment, and for other purposes"; and

Whereas there is proposed the creation of a Federal board with power to cooperate with all Federal, State, and municipal agencies intrusted with the execution of any public work, and thereby endeavor to stabilize industrial and employment conditions during periods of extraordinary unemployment; and

Whereas the measure appropriates the sum of $100,000,000, from which the proposed Federal board may make loans at a low rate of interest to begin or continue such Federal, State, or municipal works that may be temporarily embarrassed for want of funds; and

Whereas we believe such opportunities for immediate relief will materially assist in bringing about more uniform industrial and labor conditions: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be memorialized and urged to use all honorable means to secure the enactment of Senate bill No. 5397.

Adopted by the house February 6, 1919.

SEYMOUR JONES,
Speaker of the House.

Adopted by the senate February 15, 1919.

W. T. VINTON,
President of the Senate.

I hereby certify that house joint resolution No. 12 is a true copy as passed by the house and senate on the dates indicated.

W. F. DRAYER,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I also present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

The resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial 11.

Memorializing the Congress of the United States for the passage of an amendment to the bill introduced by Senator BANKHEAD in the United States Senate on December 4, 1918, known as S. 5088, also the same amendment to a bill introduced in the United States Senate by Senator SWANSON on December 5, 1918, known as S. 5098, also the same amendment to a bill introduced by Mr. SHACKLEFORD in the House of Representatives of the United States on December 12, 1918, known as H. R. 13354, and also to any other similar bills introduced in Congress, in order to provide a more equitable application of Federal aid for post roads in the sparsely settled States, and to provide a more reasonable time limit for the availability of such Federal aid.

We, your memorialists, the House of Representatives and Senate of the State of Oregon, respectfully represent that,

Whereas there are pending in the Congress of the United States, bills known as S. 5088, S. 5098, and H. R. 13354, all of which provide for additional Federal aid for post roads under the terms of the act of Congress approved July 11, 1916, and commonly known as the Federal aid road act; and

Whereas section 6 of said Federal aid road act provides that the United States shall not cooperate in any road project in an amount greater than 50 per cent of the total estimated cost thereof; and

Whereas, although additional Federal aid for road building at the present time is highly desirable, nevertheless those States having large areas and relatively small populations will be unable to avail themselves of the benefit of this act as amended to provide additional Federal aid without a disproportionate burden of taxation;

Now, therefore, your memorialists urgently request that the said bills, and any other similar bills which may be introduced in the Congress of the United States, be so amended that section 6 of the said Federal aid road act will provide that in those States where the average population per square mile of area is 100 persons or more, based upon the census of 1910, the United States shall not cooperate in any road project in an amount greater than 50 per cent of the total estimated cost thereof; and that in those States where the average population per square mile of area, based on the census of 1910, is less than 100 persons, the share of the United States shall be increased one-fourth of 1 per cent for each person, or major fraction thereof, less than 100 per square mile; and furthermore

Whereas section 3 of said Federal aid road act provides that so much of the appropriation apportioned to any State for any fiscal year as remains unexpended at the close thereof shall be available to such State only until the close of the succeeding fiscal year; and

Whereas on account of the said provision of section 3 of said act local conditions existing in some States render it practically impossible to comply with the terms of the act;

Now, therefore, your memorialists also request that said bills now pending in Congress, and any other similar bills which may be introduced, be amended so that section 3 of the said Federal aid road act will provide that so much of the appropriation to any State for any fiscal year as remains unexpended at the close thereof shall be available to such State until the close of the second succeeding fiscal year; and, be it

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be sent to each of the congressional delegation from the State of Oregon to the Congress of the United States, and to each body of said Congress.

Adopted by the house February 6, 1919.

SEYMOUR JONES,
Speaker of the House.

Adopted by the senate February 15, 1919.

W. T. VINTON,
President of the Senate.

I hereby certify that house joint memorial 11 is a true copy as passed by the house and senate on the dates indicated.

W. F. DRAYER,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

The resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SALEM, OREG., February 22.

Senator GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN,
Washington:

The following memorial was to-day adopted by both houses of the Oregon Legislature:

"To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

"We, your memorialists, the Senate of the State of Oregon, the House of Representatives concurring, respectfully represent that—

"Whereas there are now thousands of idle and unemployed men in the State of Oregon, who are anxious for work, but who can not find anything to do for the reason that the Shipping Board has canceled the contracts for wooden ships, thus closing down the shipyards, logging camps, and lumber mills, which, in normal times in this State, furnished employment directly for 62 per cent of our labor and indirectly affect many of our collateral industries; and

"Whereas there is an urgent demand for wooden ships and schooners suitable for the lumber trade, which the wooden ships heretofore constructed are not fit for; and

"Whereas there is a good market and demand for lumber overseas, if ships adapted to that purpose could be secured in which to transport the same; and

"Whereas the north Pacific coast of the United States of America has the largest body of standing timber available to the markets of the Temperate Zone, and lumber manufacturing now is and always will be, by proper conservation, the greatest industry of this section of the United States; and

"Whereas if it is to be the policy of the Shipping Board to construct or own the great ocean tonnage of the United States, then we earnestly submit and rightfully demand that it provide means of transportation, suitable for lumber as well as other products; and

"Whereas we believe it to be more economical to change the specifications for wooden ships to lumber carriers, which are urgently needed, than to pay damages for cancellation of contracts for wooden ships, which can not be economically used; and we are assured that immediate use will be made of said lumber-carrying ships, when completed and thus keep our lumber industry in operation; and

"Whereas if this course were adopted at once, the serious unemployment problem of the North Pacific States would be solved and justice done to this part of the United States; and

"Whereas the timber of this section of the country has been found most desirable for wooden-ship construction and that particular industry rightfully belongs to the North Pacific States; and

"Whereas from 50 years' experience the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon confidently asserts that wooden ships are not only the most available but also economical for use as lumber carriers: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the State of Oregon (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Senate of the State of Oregon urges the Congress of the United States to take such action and provide such means as will carry into effect the purposes of the foregoing resolution in order that idle labor be reemployed and reconstruction facilitated; and be it further

"Resolved, That the chief clerk of the Senate of the State of Oregon be directed to forthwith transmit by wire a copy of this memorial to the President, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to our Senators in Congress, and to the United States Shipping Board."

JOHN W. COCHRAN, Chief Clerk.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I also present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

The resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SALEM, OREG., February 22, 1919.

Senator GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN,
Washington, D. C.:

The following memorial was to-day adopted by both houses of the Oregon Legislature:

"To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

"We, your memorialists, the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon, the Senate concurring, respectfully represent this, that

"Whereas during the month of October and November, 1918, special Government purchasing agents, including the purchasing agent of the Southern Pacific Railroad, visited the different mills of the Western Oregon Tie & Lumber Association and requested them all run to their full capacity until June 1, 1919, as ties were vitally needed, either in war or in peace, and that the United States Railroad Administration would pay therefor the respective prices set forth in posters then issued and published: And

"Whereas said millmen responded to this appeal in good faith, and many of them contracted for logs and other material at then existing high prices to operate until June 1, 1919: And

"Whereas since said date said poster prices have been withdrawn and many orders issued have been canceled, and by order of the United States Railroad Administration said mills can only accept orders from the purchasing agent of the Southern Pacific Co., and said agent is now offering orders only at $3 less per 1,000 feet than said original poster prices, and said mills, not being allowed to solicit or accept orders from other railroad companies, must now accept said price or close their mills: And

"Whereas at a meeting of said Western Oregon Tie & Lumber Association held at Albany, Oreg., on Saturday, February 15, 1919, at which were present over 60 owners of said tie mills, representing a daily production of 14,500,000 feet, board measure, ties, it was unanimously decided that under the present system it was impossible to operate without a loss, hence resolved that all mills of said association should cease operation at once: And

"Whereas there are already thousands of unemployed men in the State of Oregon by reason of the cancellation of Government contracts, which is creating a serious State problem to contend with and fostering the formation of organizations with Bolsheviki ideas, and this new tie condition will add many thousands more to the fast increasing army of unemployed: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon (the Senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be requested to take such action at once as will put an end to United States Government action that continually adds to our serious condition of unemployment and provide some means by which the affairs of this Nation may approach reconstruction without such disastrous results.

"The State of Oregon is now considering a large bond issue to provide employment for idle labor caused by the condition hereinbefore enumerated, and earnestly feels that Congress should do the same: And be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the State of Oregon be requested to transmit by wire at once a copy of this memorial to the President, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the Senators of Oregon in Congress, with the request that some action be taken at once.

W. F. DRAYER, Chief Clerk.

Mr. ASHURST. I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of Arizona, relative to additional pay and allowances to honorably discharged soldiers and sailors, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Arizona Representatives in Congress:

To the honorable the SECRETARY OF WAR, GENERAL MARSHAL, and CHIEF OF THE GENERAL STAFF OF THE UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C.:

Your memorialist, the Fourth Legislature of the State of Arizona, respectfully represents that—

Whereas the majority of soldiers and sailors discharged from the United States Army and Navy are left penniless and without means of subsistence shortly after their discharge, and during this period of unemployment a majority of said soldiers and sailors can find no remunerative employment;

Wherefore your memorialist, the Fourth Legislature of Arizona, respectfully but urgently prays that upon their discharge all soldiers and sailors be given their uniforms, including overcoats, and that a check for $200 be mailed within one week of said discharge to said soldiers and sailors at their home address.

Your memorialist further prays that the Congress of the United States pass legislation providing for an ocean-to-ocean highway along a route most suitable for military purposes, said highway to be constructed under the supervision of the Engineering Corps of the United States Army.

The governor of the State of Arizona is directed to mail an engrossed copy of this memorial to the parties concerned and a telegram setting forth in brief the objects herein shall be sent by the president of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Fourth Arizona Legislature to every State legislature now in session in the United States.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

Mr. ASHURST presented a petition of John F. Davidson, of Kingman, Ariz., praying for an appropriation for the reclamation and improvement of lands, which will provide employment for returning soldiers and sailors, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Tucson, Ariz., praying for Government ownership of railroads, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. HARDING. I present a resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint resolution 15.

Joint resolution relative to good roads for Ohio.

The senate committee in charge of the investigation of labor conditions asks for $400,000,000 to prevent idleness by expending it upon public works. The master of industry states that he expects an era of industrial depression in the United States. The secretary of the American Federation of Labor says there will be bread lines in every industrial center before May 1; and the statesmen declare "the cloud of unemployment in a few months may engulf this country." The governors of the various States have expressed a willingness to cooperate in securing work for the unemployed. Gov. Cox has said: "I am ready to cooperate with any plan along lines which may be suggested by the Federal Government."

America needs roads. Ohio needs roads. The United States is paying a penalty of one-half billion dollars a year in the excessive cost of transportation of agricultural products alone because of this neglect of highways. At our present rate of work, two centuries will be required to improve our roads and a lifetime will not witness the improvement of more than 20 per cent. Roads are the life of a nation. Let us have roads. Let us stop working at this task in a "jitney" way. Let us stop working among the stars and get down to where the mud is.

America spends money for waterways. We built the Panama Canal. The Federal Government will spend $1,000,000,000 for railroad improvements this coming year. We spent $25,000,000,000 to lick the Huns. Why not spend some on ourselves?

Illinois has voted $60,000,000 for roads. New York and Pennsylvania are each spending more than $10,000,000 a year on road improvements.

Be it resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio:

First. That we are for lifting Ohio out of the mud.

Second. That we are willing to cooperate with the United States Government on a large plan for road improvement.

Third. That we request the United States Government to appropriate $1,000,000,000 to be expended during the next five years on the roads of this country in a manner similar to the present plan for Federal aid.

Fourth. That a copy of this resolution be sent to each Member of the Ohio delegation in Congress.

CARL R. KIMBALL,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
CLARENCE J. BROWN,
President of the Senate.

Adopted February 11, 1919.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF OHIO,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, Harvey C. Smith, secretary of state, of the State of Ohio, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of house joint resolution No. 15, as adopted by the General Assembly of Ohio on the 11th day of February, 1919, and filed in the office of the secretary of state on the 19th day of February, 1919, and is now on file in this office and in my official custody.

Witness my hand and official seal at Columbus, Ohio, this 20th day of February, A. D. 1919.

HARVEY C. SMITH,
Secretary of State.

Mr. WARREN. I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wyoming, favoring legislation to authorize the immediate construction of the Goshen Hole or High Line Canal, in the State of Wyoming, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 2.

Memorial to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, requesting Congress to provide for the immediate construction of the Goshen Hole Canal.

Whereas the construction of the Goshen Hole Canal, known also as the High Line Canal, in the Fort Laramie unit of the North Platte irrigation project, will place 180,000 acres of excellent farming land in Goshen Hole, Wyo., under irrigation, and the cultivation of such area will greatly assist in the production of food at a time when increased food production by the United States is made necessary by the unsettled conditions elsewhere; and

Whereas the construction of the Goshen Hole Canal will give an opportunity for employment to many of our returning soldiers, sailors, and marines, and the settlement and cultivation of the area to be reclaimed by the Goshen Hole Canal will give many veterans of the great war an opportunity to secure good homes and farms on the public domain; and

Whereas the United States Reclamation Service have determined and fixed the line of the Goshen Hole Canal and the acreage which will be reclaimed thereby, and have the plans for the necessary diversion dam at or near Guernsey, Wyo., completed, and only congressional action is needed to immediately start the construction of the Goshen Hole Canal; and

Whereas the honorable Secretary of the Interior of the United States has and is recommending to Congress the reclaiming of arid lands on the public domain for the purpose of giving and furnishing homes to returning soldiers, sailors, and marines: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Wyoming (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States be memorialized to authorize and direct, by proper and appropriate legislation, the immediate construction of the Goshen Hole Canal; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be sent to Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN, Hon. JOHN B. KENDRICK, and Hon. FRANK W. MONDELL, Representatives in Congress from the State of Wyoming.

T. G. POWERS,
President of the Senate.
E. J. SULLIVAN,
Speaker of the House.

Mr. NELSON presented resolutions adopted by Local Lodge No. 7, Switchmen's Union of North America, of Minneapolis; of Local Lodge No. 8, Commercial Telegraphers' Union of America, of Minneapolis; of the League of Catholic Women (Inc.), of Minneapolis; of the Political Equality Club, of Minneapolis; of the Men's Club of the Church of the Redeemer, of Minneapolis; of the Twentieth Century Club, of Duluth, all in the State of Minnesota, and of the Church Peace Union of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, favoring the establishment of a league of nations, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. COLT presented resolutions adopted by the Sunday School of the Church of the Mediator, of Providence, R. I., of the Rhode Island Woman Suffrage Party, and of the Rhode Island Branch National Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teachers' Association, favoring the establishment of a league of nations, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Alabama, relative to the nitrate plant at Muscle Shoals, in that State, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE STATE OF ALABAMA,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, William P. Cobb, secretary of state, do hereby certify that the pages hereto attached contain a true, accurate, and literal copy of senate joint resolution No. 55, adopted by the senate on February 14, 1919, and adopted by the house on February 17, 1919, as the same appears on file and of record in this office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State at the capitol, in the city of Montgomery, this 19th day of February, 1919.

[SEAL.]

WM. P. COBB,
Secretary of State.

Senate joint resolution 55.

Whereas no more important industrial activity or business enterprise of more far-reaching significance has ever been projected than the plants at Muscle Shoals designed for the production of nitrate from the air for use in agriculture and industry; and

Whereas the work has called for large expenditures in the construction of transportation facilities, the purchase of locomotives and other railway equipment, and the erection of modern and up-to-date buildings of the latest design and provided with the latest types of machinery; and

Whereas the demand for the product to be manufactured by the said plant is now more than ever in demand throughout the entire country, particularly by the agricultural interests; and

Whereas nitrate secured through artificial agencies can be supplied to consumers at a lower price than has heretofore been possible, thus enabling the production of larger crops and the reduction thereby of the high cost of living; and

Whereas the active operation of the plants at Muscle Shoals will afford an opportunity for the employment of thousands of skilled and unskilled laborers, and will thereby serve materially to reduce the problems of unemployment following demobilization of the armies of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of Alabama (the House concurring), That the President and the Secretary of War and the Congress of the United States be memorialized not only to continue the nitrate development at Muscle Shoals in this State but also to make provision for all necessary enlargement and further development of such industry as may be necessary to the large interests involved.

2. That a copy of this resolution be forwarded by the governor, under the great seal of the State of Alabama, to the President, the Secretary of War, and to the United States Senate, and the House of Representatives.

3. That copies also be forwarded separately to the United States Senators and Representatives in Congress from Alabama.

Adopted by the senate February 14, 1919.
Adopted by the house February 17, 1919.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I also present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Alabama, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

The resolution is as follows:

House joint resolution 49.

Whereas inasmuch as in normal times cotton is the one staple of commerce which brings more gold from foreign countries to America than any other one commodity, thereby turning the balance of the world's trade in favor of the United States, and giving cotton a national importance; and

Whereas the mills of Europe are the largest consumers of low-grade cotton, but, owing to war conditions, the spindles of those countries are practically without a supply; and

Whereas President Wilson in his last message to Congress declared "the war is over," and therefore there is no longer any necessity for retaining the restriction on exports and imports of commerce; and

Whereas the American merchant marine is now an established and assured fact and the slogan should be "American bottoms controlled by American citizens for American commerce": Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That we insist that our senatorial representatives in Congress take immediate steps to see that all embargoes on cotton be instantly removed; be it further

Resolved, That Congress be urged to provide immediately for the enlistment of American steel steamship lines between the Gulf and South Atlantic ports and all foreign ports for the promotion of American commerce, and at reasonable standardized rates; be it further

Resolved, That a cable to this end be sent to President Wilson; that a copy be also sent to the chairman of the United States Shipping Board and to the chairman of the War Trade Board and to each of our Senators and Representatives from Alabama.

Adopted by the house and senate February 7, 1919.

[SEAL.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. I present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Alabama, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

The resolution is as follows:

THE STATE OF ALABAMA,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, William P. Cobb, secretary of state, do hereby certify that the pages hereto attached contain a true, accurate, and literal copy of house joint resolution 27, by Mr. Faulk, adopted by the house and senate January 31, 1919, as the same appears on file and of record in this office.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State at the capitol, in the city of Montgomery, this 4th day of February, 1919.

WM. P. COBB,
Secretary of State.

House joint resolution 27.

Whereas Government ownership of railroads and other public utilities is contrary to the traditions and principles of our Government and people; and

Whereas experience has shown that the Government can not operate such public utilities as economically or as efficiently as private corporations; and

Whereas we believe that the interest of the people will be better subserved by a restoration of the railroads and other public utilities to their private owners: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Alabama (the Senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States take prompt action looking to an immediate return of the railroads and other public utilities now operated by the Government to their owners, reserving such Government control thereof as may be necessary.

Resolved further, That a copy of this resolution, certified by the secretary of state, be sent to each the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives in Congress, and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives in Congress from the State of Alabama.

Adopted by the house and senate January 31, 1919.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I also present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Alabama with reference to an appropriation to combat and investigate the causes of "flu," which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

The resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE STATE OF ALABAMA,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, William P. Cobb, secretary of state, do hereby certify that the pages hereto attached contain a true, accurate, and literal copy of senate joint resolution No. 30, adopted by the senate and house of representatives on February 14, 1919, as the same appears on file and of record in this office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State at the capitol, in the city of Montgomery, this 17th day of February, 1919.

[SEAL.]

WM. P. COBB,
Secretary of State.

Senate joint resolution 30.

Whereas our country and the known world are being visited by an awful and death-dealing disease commonly called the "flu"; and

Whereas the medical world admits its ignorance of the causes and the cure for the "flu": Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of Alabama (the House concurring), That the Congress of the United States be asked to appropriate the sum of $250,000 to investigate and, if possible, to perfect a specific for the elimination of "flu."

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to our Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States.

Adopted by the senate February 14, 1919.
Adopted by the house February 14, 1919.

Mr. KING. I present a telegram in the nature of a memorial from the Utah Associated Industries, of Salt Lake City, Utah, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SALT LAKE, UTAH, February 10, 1919.

Senator WILLIAM H. KING,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

Utah Associated Industries protest against continuation of United States Employment Bureau. Believe the purpose for which it was created no longer exists. Trust you will use your influence against allowing appropriation of $15,000,000, which, we understand, they ask for. Pat Moran, State chairman employment bureau, agrees with us that bureau should close. Letter follows.

UTAH ASSOCIATED INDUSTRIES.
A. C. REES,

Mr. KENDRICK. I present resolutions adopted by the Industrial Club of Cheyenne, Wyo., which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The resolutions were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas our National Government, as a war measure, has seen fit to take over the telephone, telegraph, and cable system; and

Whereas without further legislation these systems will be turned back to private ownership at a time and under conditions inimical to the best interests of patrons and owners alike: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Industrial Club of Cheyenne, That it is the sense of this organization that our Senators and Representative in Congress be urged to use their best endeavors to procure by congressional action the continuance of governmental control for such reasonable time as will enable Congress to pass remedial legislation; and be it further

Resolved, That while neither commending nor criticizing public ownership, we feel that careful investigation should be undertaken in order that fair legislation may prevail; and be it further

Resolved, That an expression of our views be forwarded to our Representatives in Congress.

Mr. GAY presented a petition of sundry citizens of Monroe, La., praying for Government ownership of railroads, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a statement proceeding from Ex-President Taft, dated Stockton, Cal., February 21, on the subject of the league of nations.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WILLIAM HOWARD TAFT SAYS PUBLIC MIND FAVORS LEAGUE—DECLARES IT WAS THE HOPE OF STEP TO PREVENT FUTURE WARS THAT BUOYED UP PEOPLES DURING AWFUL STRAIN OF FIGHTING—POINTS TO SUCCESS OF CONGRESSES OF LEAGUE TO ENFORCE PEACE.

[By William Howard Taft.]

STOCKTON, CAL., February 21.

Six of the congresses of the League to Enforce Peace out of the nine projected have been held. At the New York congress there were registered from New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, West Virginia, and Maryland 2,935 delegates, who attended the half dozen sessions of the congress and took part in the proceedings. At the Boston congress there were 3,740 registered delegates from the six New England States. New Hampshire sent 200 and Connecticut 200. At the Chicago congress there were 3,200, and at the Minneapolis congress there were 2,400 from Minnesota, the two Dakotas, and Montana.

The two congresses on the Pacific coast, one at Portland and the other at San Francisco, have been even better attended than the first four. Audiences of from 3,000 to 4,000 attended constantly upon the six sessions, culminating in a labor meeting in the great auditorium of San Francisco with at least 10,000 enthusiastic listeners. The delegates were a fine body of men, representing all classes in the community. There were clergymen and other professional men, bankers and business men, farmers, and an excellent representation of organized labor.

HALF MILLION FOR PROPAGANDA.

The attendance of the delegates at the sessions was constant and continued throughout. At State caucuses organization of active propaganda by the State associations was perfected. Each State was asked to contribute a fixed quota toward a fund or $500,000 to spread propaganda. The league officers think the full sum will be secured.

In addition to sessions of the congress, chamber of commerce luncheons, meetings of women's clubs, and clerical conventions have been addressed by speakers of the league. The newspapers of each city have devoted much space to the sessions, and the speeches and everything has been done to challenge the attention of the people to the league of nations and the critical importance to this country and the world that we shall enter and make effective the great covenant of Paris for world peace.

FAVORED IN PUBLIC MIND.

Observation justifies the belief that the public mind favors the plan and does not recoil at the proposal that this country shall bear its share of the burden needed to give a bite to the league. Explanations of the proposed plan and operation of the league, especially in the execution of the treaty of peace, the stabilizing of the new republics and the prevention of war between these republics and the countries out of which they have been carved, as well as between one another, are listened to and followed with an attention that shows intense interest.

Everywhere the inquiry is, "What is the league of nations?" The man in the street thinks it is something to prevent war without knowing how. He is in favor of it without knowing why, except for its object. He is glad to hear of its proposed machinery.

Labor is in favor of it without qualification. The American Federation of Labor has declared in favor of a league of nations in several successive annual conventions. The labor commissions sent abroad have brought back to the wage earners on this side of the Atlantic knowledge of the attitude of their brethern in England, France, and Italy toward a league of nations. The labor groups of those nations demand a real league, one that shall furnish a substantial defense against future wars.

It was the hope of this which buoyed them up in the awful strain of the war. It was the promise of this in the addresses and speeches of the President during the war that stiffened their morale. It was this promise repeated by the American labor and socialist commissions sent abroad under Government auspices that confirmed the feeling that America would be found the most insistent on a real league with "a bite" in it.

REGARDED AS BEST COMPROMISE.

It is this confidence thus engendered which has led the plain peoples of our allies to welcome the President with such heartfelt enthusiasm. The definite announcement of the covenant of Paris has given greater zest to the congresses. The League to Enforce Peace has given its whole-hearted support to the covenant as agreed upon by the 14 nations. The league does not contend that the covenant is perfect, or that it might not be made stronger and more effective, but it accepts it as the best compromise that could be secured by unanimous agreement.

It believes that if the covenant can be incorporated in the treaty of peace it will serve to clinch the great purpose of the war and will be the greatest step forward toward the maintenance of peace ever taken in recorded history. It believes that the burdens assumed by each nation in the league are light and infinitesimal as compared with the losses to be sustained in another war.

MONROE DOCTRINE STRENGTHENED.

The league believes that the Monroe doctrine instead of being endangered is strengthened by the covenant, one of whose great purposes is to extend the doctrine to the whole world. If the restriction of that doctrine that foreign nations shall not buy their way into new territorial and political power in the Western Hemisphere is not sufficiently prescribed in the covenant, the league believes it can easily be secured as an addition to the treaty before it is signed.

The league believes that the covenant creates no supersovereignty and that it does not restrict the just sovereignty of the United States. That just sovereignty is the same sovereignty it should accord to other nations, to wit, complete freedom of national action limited by international law and international morality and international justice. The covenant is a mere partnership agreement by which united action is secured to maintain this kind of national sovereignty for each member of the league and prevent the sovereign power of lone nations from being used to impose its arbitrary will upon another.

HAVE SMALL VISION, HE SAYS.

The league believes that those who oppose this league of nations on the ground that we should maintain the now impossible attitude of isolation from the rest of the world and avoid so-called entangling alliances have a small vision of the proposed place for our great Republic in the family of nations. They may be properly said to be small Americans in the narrow view that they take of America's world responsibilities with her enormous opportunities for helping mankind and the small risk and burden she will assume in entering the league and covenant now proposed. The league believes it to be a perversion of the purpose of the Federal Constitution, which, as John Marshall, its great interpreter, adjudged, was framed to make a nation with all the usual national powers to prevent its concert with other members of the family of nations to avoid war and secure peace.

The league believes that the covenant is not the mere consummation of an academic theory in normal times of peace which may be rejected to be taken up leisurely in some future time, but that it is the condition precedent of any satisfactory ending of the war. It believes that without this covenant for peaceably settling differences between the defeated peoples and the dozen new nations now to be carved out of the old empires to hem in Germany from future schemes of conquest the present chaos in the sphere of war will be worse confounded.

WOULD LACK WORLD PRESTIGE.

The league believes that unless the United States with its pure and acknowledged democracy, its disinterested purposes and its great potential power, does not join the covenant, the concert of the other powers will not have the world prestige and strength needed to clinch the purpose of the war and preserve peace and keep Germany down, and that the result will be a recurrence of the old balance of power and its disappointing results.

The league believes that it would be a tragedy in the history of civilization if the Senate can be induced by the protests and narrow views of a small number of Senators who have expressed themselves to defeat this grand covenant of peace, the unanimous agreement of the representatives of 14 nations, facing not a theory, but a real and a fateful crisis for the world.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I also ask to be permitted to insert in the RECORD a statement, entitled "America Should Back Wilson," against the proposition of the letter of Mr. George Bernard Shaw.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICA SHOULD BACK WILSON.

"The influence of party politics and balance of power diplomacy on the peace conference is producing a reactionary combination of the present European war governments with the American republican opposition against the American democratic government and the European oppositions; and as, in view of the electoral weakness of the latter, Mr. Wilson, as a great man, standing for a great idea, must depend on sheer intellectual and moral superiority without regard to election figures, it is important that America should wake up to this situation, and not leave her President in the position of a prophet with less honor in his own country than in Europe, on which he has made a tremendous impression."

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. KENDRICK, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (S. 5305) to stimulate the production, sale, and distribution of live stock and livestock products, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 754) thereon.

Mr. KING (for Mr. SHAFROTH), from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 4479) for the protection of the water supply of the town of Sunnyside, Utah, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 755) thereon.

EXHIBITION OF RED FLAG.

Mr. WALSH. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, the bill (S. 5207) to declare unlawful the exhibition of a red flag, and to fix a penalty therefor; and I submit a report (No. 753) thereon. As the subject matter is deemed exceedingly urgent by a number of Senators, I shall ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. First, however, I ask that the report may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5207) to declare unlawful the exhibition of a red flag, and to fix a penalty therefor, having considered the same, report favorably with the following amendment and recommend that the bill as amended do pass:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"SECTION 1. It shall be unlawful for any person to advocate or advise or to write or with intent to forward the purpose hereinafter mentioned to print, publish, sell, or distribute any document, book, circular, paper, journal, or other written or printed communication in or by which there is advised the overthrow, by force or violence, or by physical injury to person or property, or by the general cessation of industry, of the Government of the United States or of all government.

"SEC. 2. That the display or exhibition at any meeting, gathering, or parade, public or private, of any flag, banner, or emblem symbolizing or intended by the person or persons displaying or exhibiting the same to symbolize a purpose to overthrow, by force or violence, or by physical injury to person or property, or by the general cession of industry, the Government of the United States or all government is hereby declared to be unlawful.

"SEC. 3. Every document, book, circular, paper, journal, or other written or printed communication in or by which there is advocated or advised the overthrow, by force or violence, or by physical injury to person or property, or by the general cessation of industry, of the Government of the United States or of all government, or in or by which there is advocated or advised the unlawful use of force or violence or physical injury to or the unlawful seizure or destruction of persons or property as a means toward the accomplishment of economic, industrial, or political changes, is hereby declared to be nonmailable and shall not be conveyed in the mails or delivered from any post office or by any letter carrier: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to authorize any person other than an employee of the Dead Letter Office, duly authorized thereto, or other person upon a search warrant authorized by law, to open any letter not addressed to himself.

"SEC. 4. It shall be unlawful, with intent to forward the end in or by the same advocated or advised, to import or cause to be imported into the United States or any place subject to its jurisdiction any matter declared by section 3 of this act to be nonmailable, or with such intent to transport or cause to be transported any such matter from one State to another or to any place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

"SEC. 5. Whoever shall use or attempt to use the mails or the Postal Service of the United States for the transmission of any matter declared by section 3 of this act to be nonmailable or who shall otherwise violate any provision of this act shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, while this is a report on the bill introduced by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW], and generally referred to as "the red-flag bill," it is intended as well to meet the evil to redress which a bill was some few days ago introduced by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], and it may be considered as a report upon both of those bills. Briefly, Mr. President——

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GORE. I wish to make an inquiry. My attention was called to the report after the reading of it had begun. Is this a bill that has just been reported from a committee?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; from the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. GORE. Has any request been preferred with respect to its consideration?

Mr. WALSH. I want to ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. GORE. I did not hear the entire reading of the report at the desk, and I will have to object to the consideration of the bill to-day, because I wish to examine the report.

Mr. WALSH. Then I give notice that at the conclusion of the morning business to-morrow morning I shall ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

LANDING OF THE PILGRIMS.

Mr. THOMPSON. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably, without amendment, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 227) creating a committee to consider arranging for the celebration of the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims. I call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the joint resolution.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That a joint commission, consisting of two Senators, Members of the Sixty-sixth Congress, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and four Members elect to the House of Representatives of the Sixty-sixth Congress, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Sixty-fifth Congress, is hereby created, whose duty it shall be to confer with officials of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, or any political subdivision thereof, and with officers of any organizations or societies, and with individuals, relative to any contemplated observance of the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims at Plymouth, Mass. Said commission shall report within 60 days after the Sixty-sixth Congress convenes, with its recommendation as to appropriate legislation for participation by the Government of the United States in the celebration of this historic event.

The expense of said commission shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURT ACCOMMODATIONS IN SACRAMENTO, CAL.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I report back from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds the bill (H. R. 204) for fitting up quarters in the Federal court building in the city of Sacramento for the accommodation of the northern district court of California and its officers, and I ask unanimous consent, because it is an emergency measure, that it may be at once taken up.

Mr. POMERENE. Will it likely lead to any discussion?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Not at all. It is the endeavor to provide quarters for the district court in the city of Sacramento. They have absolutely none at the present time. They sometimes meet in a hotel, sometimes in the court room of the superior court, sometimes in the capitol. The United States grand jury that recently indicted the I. W. W.'s there had to meet wherever they could at different places at different times.

Mr. POMERENE. If it does not lead to discussion, I will not object.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I report back the bill favorably without amendment and ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized, empowered, and directed to cause to be provided and constructed in the post-office building in the city of Sacramento, Cal., quarters such as he may deem necessary and proper for the district court of the northern district of California, and its officers, at a cost not to exceed the sum of $60,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 5658) to authorize the acquisition and operation by the United States of the Cape Cod Canal; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. STERLING:

A bill (S. 5659) granting an increase of pension to William C. Markward (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. RANSDELL. I send to the desk a joint resolution which I ask to have read, after which I ask for its immediate consideration. I invite the attention of the Senate to this joint resolution. It is quite important.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 228) amending a provision of the urgent deficiency appropriation act, approved June 15, 1917, extending the time in which the authority granted the President of the United States thereunder may be exercised, was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the paragraph of the emergency shipping fund provision of the urgent deficiency appropriation act approved June 15, 1917, which reads "All authority granted to the President herein or by him delegated shall cease six months after a final treaty of peace is proclaimed between this Government and the German Empire" be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows: "All authority granted to the President herein, or by him delegated, shall cease 18 months after a final treaty of peace is proclaimed between this Government and the German Empire."

Mr. RANSDELL. Just one word of explanation to the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Louisiana if this is a report from the committee this morning?

Mr. RANSDELL. No, sir; it is not a report from the committee. The matter was discussed in the committee, and we all agreed that there should be some extension of time for the President to dispose of the great fleet, costing about two and a half billion dollars, that we are now constructing. Under the law all of his authority to manage or dispose of this fleet under the provisions of the emergency deficiency appropriation will cease six months after the declaration of peace; and the joint resolution is simply to extend the time for a further period of 12 months, so that Congress will have ample opportunity to legislate.

Mr. SMOOT. I wanted to get the legislative situation. I understand that the joint resolution has not been reported from the committee.

Mr. RANSDELL. It has not been referred to the committee, I will say.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I do not think it is in order. If this is a joint resolution, I will say to the Senator, under the rules it must go to a committee first. If it were a concurrent resolution or a Senate resolution, the Senator could ask for its consideration; but a joint resolution is the same as a bill, and it ought to be introduced and referred to a committee.

Mr. RANSDELL. We sometimes consider even bills without referring them to committees. If the Senator thinks this must be referred, I do not object to its going to the Committee on Commerce. I am sure they will report it out immediately. I believe the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] knows how important this matter is.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington wanted to interrupt the Senator to say that he had no recollection of this being discussed in the committee with a view to acting upon it. I probably was not there when the matter was up. I have no recollection that it was so discussed.

Mr. RANSDELL. I do not think the Senator was there. It was discussed rather fully in an executive session when Mr. Whipple, the attorney for the Shipping Board, was there; but if there be any objection to considering it now, it can be referred to the Committee on Commerce. I do not want to press its consideration without giving the committee a chance to consider it.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it go to the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. KELLOGG submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $60,000 to enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay the amounts assessed against tribal and allotted lands of the Indian reservations of Minnesota, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. WALSH submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,200 to pay Dennis M. Kerr for extra services to the Committee on Pensions during the third session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions and ordered to be printed.

SEIZED ALIEN PROPERTY.

Mr. THOMPSON. I submit a resolution asking for information from one of the departments, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 462) was read, was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Alien Property Custodian be directed to furnish for the information of the Senate a description of the different kinds of property taken into custody by him, its estimated value, the names and addresses of the former owners of the property seized, and the disposition made of said property.

THE EXECUTIVE JOURNAL.

Mr. HITCHCOCK submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 464), which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the entire Executive Journal from the end of the last session of the Fifty-seventh Congress, the date to which said proceedings have already been printed and published by order of the Senate, to the end of the Sixty-fourth Congress, be printed and published under direction of the Secretary of the Senate, with a suitable index to each volume, and that 250 copies be printed.

Resolved further, That the injunction of secrecy be removed therefrom.

TRADING WITH THE ENEMY.

Mr. CALDER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 463), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

Resolved, That the Alien Property Custodian be, and is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate of the United States the following information as provided for under section 6 of the act entitled "An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes," approved October 6, 1917: A detailed report of all proceedings had under such act up to and including February 15, 1919; such report shall contain a list of all persons appointed or employed, with the salary or compensation paid to each, and a statement of the different kinds of property taken into custody and the disposition made thereof. Said report shall recite the name and address at the time of their designation or appointment of such persons as clerks, investigators, accountants, attorneys, auctioneers, salesmen, or administrators, and all persons employed or designated to in any manner represent him in any capacity whatsoever, either with or without pay, and shall further recite the fact as to whether such person or persons were selected from list of eligibles supplied by the Civil Service Commission. Such report of said custodian shall give the item of moneys received both at private and public sales in such detail as to identify each separate parcel of property so sold and a list as of the above date of such other properties as shall have been formally surrendered to him or seized by him.

AMENDMENT OF WAR-RISK INSURANCE ACT.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 5555) to amend the war-risk insurance act. It involves a matter of very urgent and immediate necessity. If it provokes debate, I shall, of course, withdraw it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill named by him. Is there objection?

Mr. POMERENE. Is this matter going to require some discussion?

Mr. THOMAS. If it does, I shall withdraw it. It is to amend the war-risk insurance act, which is very necessary, as outlined in a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, which I thought I would have read for the edification of the Senate. I was requested by the director of the bureau to bring this matter up to-day, if possible. If it takes any discussion, I will withdraw it.

Mr. POMERENE. With the understanding that it is not going to take any discussion, I shall not object.

Mr. THOMAS. As I have stated, if it does I will withdraw it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 402 of the war-risk insurance act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 402. That the director, subject to the general direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall promptly determine upon and publish the full and exact terms and conditions of such contract of insurance. The insurance until converted shall be payable only to a spouse, child, grandchild, parent, brother, or sister, and also during total and permanent disability to the injured person, or to any or all of them: Provided, That in the case of converted insurance, the permitted class of beneficiaries shall include in addition to the foregoing an uncle, aunt, nephew, or niece. The insurance shall be payable in 240 equal monthly installments. Provisions for maturity at certain ages, for continuous installments during the life of the insured, or beneficiaries, or both, for cash, loan, paid-up, and extended values, dividends from gains and savings, and such other provisions for the protection and advantage of and for alternative benefits to the insured and the beneficiaries as may be found to be reasonable and practicable, may be provided for in the contract of insurance, or from time to time by regulations. All calculations shall be based upon the American Experience Table of Mortality and interest at 3½ per cent, except that no deduction shall be made for continuous installments during the life of the insured in case his total and permanent disability continues more than 240 months. Subject to regulations, the insured shall at all times have the right to change the beneficiary or beneficiaries of such insurance without the consent of such beneficiary or beneficiaries, but only within the classes herein provided. If no beneficiary within the permitted class be designated by the insured, either in his lifetime or by his last will and testament, or if the designated beneficiary does not survive the insured, the insurance shall be payable to such person or persons within the permitted class of beneficiaries as would under the laws of the State of the residence of the insured be entitled to his personal property in case of intestacy. In the case of converted insurance, if no person within the permitted class survive the insured, there shall be paid to the estate of the insured an amount equal to the commuted value of the installments remaining unpaid, calculated at the rate of 3½ per cent interest; but, if one or more such persons shall survive the insured and shall have died before receiving all of the installments payable, there shall be paid to the estate of the last surviving person within the permitted class an amount equal to the commuted value of the installments remaining unpaid, calculated at the rate of 3½ per cent interest."

SEC. 2. That a new section is hereby added to Article IV of such act to be known as section 405 and to read as follows:

"SEC. 405. That the Bureau of War Risk Insurance is hereby directed to set aside out of the premiums collected on the insurance converted under this article such a reserve fund, calculated on the basis of 3½ per cent interest, as may be required, under accepted actuarial principles, to meet all liabilities under such insurance; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to invest the said reserve fund, or any part thereof, in farm-loan bonds issued by the Federal land banks or in interest-bearing securities of the United States."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask that the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury concerning the bill be inserted in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 7, 1919.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am inclosing herewith a tentative draft of a bill amending the war-risk insurance act. It provides for the enlargement of the permitted class of beneficiaries of converted insurance and directs the setting aside of a reserve fund for such insurance.

In my opinion, the early passage by the Congress of a bill similar in effect to that inclosed is of such vital importance to the success of the bureau in administering the provisions of the war-risk insurance act authorizing the conversion of insurance heretofore granted that I earnestly request that you give it the earliest possible attention. The reasons for requesting the legislation proposed may be thus briefly stated:

1. The setting aside of an insurance reserve: Section 402 of the act authorizes the inclusion in the insurance contract of provisions for "dividends from gains and savings, and such other provisions for the protection and advantage of and for alternative benefits to the insured and the beneficiaries as may be found to be reasonable and practicable." This and other provisions of the act make it clear that Congress expected that the contracts of converted insurance to be issued should make provisions for dividends substantially similar to those usually found in life insurance policies issued by private companies. It is also reasonable to infer that Congress expected that the gains and savings out of which these dividends were to be paid should, as in the case of private insurance companies, be realized from interest on reserve and savings in mortality. Hence, the Secretary of the Treasury should invest the reserve fund obtained from premiums on converted insurance in such a manner as to realize interest in excess of the basic rate of 3½ per cent upon which the reserve is calculated. This action could probably be taken by the Secretary without receiving additional authority from the Congress, but the importance of the proposed action is so great, affecting as it must the work of the bureau through half a century, and the sums involved are so large that it would be unwise to proceed without receiving the express direction of the Congress. I am advised that the success of the plan to continue the insurance of our soldiers in converted form depends largely upon the step proposed to be taken.

The considerations which lead me to think that the Congress should direct the establishment and maintenance of such a reserve fund may be set forth more specifically as follows:

(a) In receiving level-rate premiums for converted insurance from the soldier in the earlier years of the insured's life the Government takes from him more money than necessary to cover the cost of the protection granted to him during those years. This excess or reserve morally and equitably belongs to the insured and is held by the Government for his benefit. It is in a sense a trust fund, which the Government should use not for its own expenses but for the benefit of the insured. Moral obligation, as well as sound insurance practice, requires the Government to invest this reserve fund in such a way as to secure the highest interest obtainable consistent with safety.

(b) By using such a reserve fund for the purchase of farm-loan bonds issued by the Federal land bank an interest return substantially equal to 4½ per cent could be secured with perfect safety. At the same time one of the Government's most admirable economic agencies would be aided.

(c) The history of fraternal insurance organizations which failed to provide in early years a reserve fund shows what would be the effect of a failure on the part of the Government to set aside a reserve to support the converted insurance granted under the war-risk insurance act. If premium receipts should be applied in payment of current claims under matured insurance, with no setting aside of a reserve, the amount of the appropriations that would be required of Congress would at first, relatively speaking, be misleadingly small and would later become inordinately large, in short, sound economic theory, as well as the considerations of simple justice mentioned in (a) above, require the maintenance of a reserve.

2. Enlargement of permitted class of beneficiaries: Section 402 provides that in case the permitted beneficiaries of the insured die before the insured, or before they have received all of the 240 installments payable after his death, the installments remaining unpaid shall be forfeited to the Government, only the reserve value, if any, being payable to the estate of the insured. This was a wise and fair provision in the case of war-time term insurance. As the Government was giving to the insured the extra cost of insurance due to war hazards, there was no unfairness in declaring that it would not pay if the soldier's immediate dependents should have failed, but the same considerations do not apply to the converted insurance carried by the soldier under peace-time conditions, and for which he pays in full. It is only reasonable that the soldier who pays in full for his insurance should be given a wider selection of beneficiaries among his relatives, and it is but simple justice that he should receive in full the insurance he pays for without fear of forfeiture in case no person within the permitted class survives him. The proposed bill attached hereto enlarges the class of permitted beneficiaries so as to include uncles, aunts, nephews, and nieces of the insured. It further provides that if no such person within the enlarged class of beneficiaries survives the insured, the commuted value of the installments remaining unpaid shall become a part of the estate of the insured, but if the surviving beneficiaries within that class die before receiving all of the installments payable, then the commuted value of the unpaid installments shall become payable to the estate of the last surviving member of the permitted class. It is to be noted that the amount payable in such cases to the estate of the insured or of the last surviving beneficiary is the commuted value of the unpaid installments, and not merely the reserve of the policy, which alone is payable under the existing provisions of the act.

I am satisfied that the legislation proposed is entirely consistent with the purpose of the act and essential to the successful administration of those provisions requiring the conversion of the annual-term insurance into other forms of insurance suitable to the peace-time needs of insured soldiers and sailors. This opinion is supported by the advice of the best insurance experts in this country, who, after careful study during many weeks of all the problems involved, and having special regard for the best interests of the men in the military and naval service, have incorporated some of the provisions of the proposed legislation in the recently completed policy forms for converted insurance. If these policies are to be issued as drawn and the work of conversion thereunder to begin, it is necessary for the Congress to pass the legislation proposed, and it is respectfully requested that this be done at the earliest possible day.

Sincerely, yours,

CARTER GLASS, Secretary.

HON. F. M. SIMMONS,
Chairman Committee on Finance,
United States Senate.

AMERICAN FIELD OF HONOR.

Mr. SPENCER. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate bill 5313, being calendar No. 667, which gives the Secretary of War the authority to acquire and maintain a cemetery in France for the reception of bodies of American soldiers who have died there and whose parents or relatives do not desire their bodies brought home.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask whether the bill is likely to lead to any discussion?

Mr. SPENCER. I think not. If there is any discussion, I will withdraw the request. I believe there will be no objection to the consideration and passage of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That, subject to the laws relative to national military cemeteries within the United States, so far as such laws may be applicable and subject to the permission of France by treaty or otherwise, a commission shall be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, in the name of the United States, a suitable plot of land in France, preferably on or near one of the important battle fields where American troops were conspicuously engaged, and there to establish a national cemetery, to be known as the American field of honor, and to properly prepare said plot of land for use as such, and thereafter to care for, preserve, and maintain the same.

SEC. 2. That in said field of honor, in section 1 of this act provided for, may be buried, and shall only be buried, the remains of officers and members of and persons accompanying or serving with the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps who have died or hereafter shall die while serving with the overseas forces during the present war with Germany or during any period of occupation immediately subsequent thereto; and the Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause the remains of each of the persons aforesaid to be buried in said field, or in such other place in the United States, as he shall select, unless the nearest relative of the deceased shall otherwise request, when he will dispose of said remains in accordance with the provisions of existing law.

SEC. 3. That for the purchase of the land and the original cost of the preparation thereof for use as a national cemetery as in the first section of this act provided, and for the cost of transfer of remains and the interment thereof in said cemetery or elsewhere as in the second section of this act provided, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $, or so much thereof as may be necessary therefor.

SEC. 4. The commission referred to in section 1 of this act shall consist of three Members of the Senate and three Members of the House of Representatives appointed, respectively, by the Vice President and the Speaker of the House, who will become the permanent board to administer the cemetery and its maintenance. Vacancies shall be filled as in its original organization.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I move to strike out section 3, concerning the appropriation, which is entirely unnecessary. All that is intended is to give the Secretary of War the power to arrange for such a cemetery, and no appropriation is necessary at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, before we vote on that, I do not quite understand the situation. How can the Secretary of War procure real estate in France without some money with which to do it?

Mr. SPENCER. If I may answer the Senator, the bill provides that the Secretary of War, subject to the permission of the Government of France, by treaty or otherwise, may take up the question of the acquisition of the cemetery. Of course we can not get any land in France without the consent of the Government of France.

Mr. REED. We can get land in France in which to bury our soldiers if the French Government consents, but it does not follow that they will donate the land. Is there any arrangement for donation?

Mr. SPENCER. I will answer the Senator. It has been intimated that the French Government will donate the land. A communication from France to that effect would seem so to show; but if the land is not donated, all that this bill would do would be to allow the Secretary of War to take up the question of obtaining land for a cemetery in France; and if money was needed to purchase it, then further legislation would be necessary. This bill carries no appropriation.

Mr. REED. It will carry no appropriation if the Senator's motion is agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER. I understand that the amendment has been agreed to striking out section 3, providing for the appropriation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; that is the pending question.

Mr. REED. That is the pending question.

Mr. SPENCER. I understood it had been agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not wish to delay this matter a moment. I want this ground secured. I want some spot sacred to this cause to be procured. I do not think we ought to expect a donation. If France should donate the land we will not then have paid out our money; but if France should give her permission, and it should be necessary to buy the ground, I think the money ought to be on hand.

The dead ought to be provided for. They ought not to sleep in Flanders fields in unknown graves. I intended to introduce and had written a bill providing for a cemetery in France, but I learned that one had been prepared and introduced; and I see no reason for cutting out this appropriation. I take it the money will not be spent unless the ground is obtained.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, what amount is proposed?

Mr. REED. The amount in the bill is $500,000; is it not?

Mr. LODGE. No; it is left blank.

Mr. THOMAS. The original bill provides for that.

Mr. REED. What is the motion of the Senator?

Mr. SPENCER. The motion that I made was to strike out section 3, concerning the matter of appropriation. No definite appropriation is included in the bill as reported by the committee. If I may say to the Senator, there is a large appropriation for cemeteries in the general military bill. It may well be that that will be available and for preliminary purposes entirely sufficient; and it was for that reason that it did not seem to me necessary at this time to insert the appropriation. I did want to get the authority for the Secretary of War to commence proceedings for the acquisition of this cemetery.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I want to get the authority for the Secretary of War to commence the proceedings and to commence them in a practical way. To send a man out to acquire land, and give him nothing to acquire it with, seems to me a very peculiar proceeding.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator that at this time it is impossible to know how many soldiers will likely be buried there? Nine-tenths, if not more than that, of the soldiers' relatives will want their bodies shipped here; and it seems to me to be very appropriate that no amount should be specified now, because we do not know how many will be buried there. It may be that none of the relatives will want to have the soldiers buried in foreign territory. For that reason, I do not believe the Senator's position is sound.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have no official information upon the subject; but I am credibly informed that the French Government, or some high French officials speaking for the Government, have made the announcement that a cemetery for the burial and care of the American dead will be furnished by the Government of the French Republic.

Mr. REED. If that is the settled fact, I have nothing to say.

Mr. THOMAS. Of course, I could not go that far. I have been informed that such is the case, and I saw a statement in the press dispatches sometime last week to that effect.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I take it that this money will not be used unless it is necessary. There is a motion pending, I believe. The motion is to strike out the section.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's motion would have precedence.

Mr. REED. I move to amend, then, by inserting in the blank the sum of $500,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I was not able, owing to the confusion, to hear all of the bill as it was read. Do I understand that this interferes in any way with the order which I understand has been issued, or at least the information which has been sent out, to the effect that the friends or relatives of the boys who were killed in France may have the bodies of those boys returned here?

Mr. SPENCER. It does not interfere with that. The bodies of those who died in France, and whose relatives desire those bodies to be brought back home, will be brought back home, under the provisions of this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] to the amendment of the committee. [Putting the question.] There seems to be one "aye" and one "no." The Chair votes "aye," and the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing a commission to acquire and maintain a cemetery in France in the name of the United States for the reception and interment of the bodies of American officers and men who lost their lives in connection with the European war, and for other purposes."

Mr. REED subsequently said: A few moments ago, I am sure, the Senate acted inadvertently. Section 3 of the bill called up by the Senate by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] to authorize the Secretary of War to acquire a cemetery in France was before the Senate. The Senate amended section 3 by practical unanimity, and then immediately the Chair put the vote on the motion which was pending of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] to strike out section 3, after it had been amended. There were only a few votes, and I am sure the Senators who voted "aye" did not understand that they were voting to strike out the section. I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and all the votes are reconsidered back to the consideration of the bill in the Senate.

Mr. REED. Now the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] can withdraw his motion to strike out section 3.

Mr. SPENCER. I do withdraw it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? If not, the motion is withdrawn.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Saturday next, March 1, at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], I shall address the Senate on the proposed league of nations and the foreign policy of this Government.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Wednesday of this week I shall seek an opportunity to address the Senate upon the proposed league of nations.

ARMY COURTS OF APPEAL.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD an article taken from the New York World of yesterday, Sunday, the 23d instant, relative to a provision in the pending Army bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The matter referred to is as follows:

The joint resolution introduced by Senator MCKELLAR providing for the appointment of as many reviewing boards as may be necessary to examine the records and revise the judgments of 22,000 courts-martial ought to receive the approval of Congress without delay. It is a tardy recognition by Congress itself of its own shortcomings.

These boards will constitute Army courts of appeal. They will be made up of officers who have not acted at any of the trials. Their members will be named by the President, and with him will remain the power to set aside or mitigate their findings, "to the end that even and exact justice shall be done in each case."

Convictions have been the rule with general and special courts-martial and most of the sentences have been severe. In 14 months these courts acquitted only 2,900 defendants out of 27,000. Outside of the death penalty, prescribed in many cases, but, it is said, not inflicted, punishments have ranged from imprisonment at hard labor for 40 years downward, the average being extremely high. In addition, there were dishonorable discharges and loss of citizenship.

Such reviews as there have been of these trials have been altogether perfunctory and in most instances prejudiced. Senator MCKELLAR'S resolution provides for appeals as a matter of right and gives assurance that they will be heard by disinterested officers. Civil law protects the accused at every stage of his prosecution. If we forget its precepts in our relation with the soldier, no matter what his offense may be, we enroll ourselves with the despots of militarism.

RECREATION ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 3219, to provide a charter for the Recreation Association of America.

Mr. KING. I object.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If I had seen the Senator from Utah, I would not have asked unanimous consent. [Laughter.]

Mr. KING. I regret that the Senator did not see me.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am sorry that the Senator was present. I think he is the only person who objects to the consideration of the bill.

VENTILATION OF SENATE CHAMBER.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a matter which I think is of importance to the Members who sit in this Chamber.

The air which we breathe comes through a dark, damp tunnel, three or four hundred feet long, and is brought into this Chamber, I am satisfied, filled with impure bacterial life. I believe it has contributed to the mortality of men in this body during the last 10 or 12 years that I have been a Member here. I want to put into the RECORD the number of those deaths. Thirty-six Senators have died, since I have become a Member of this Chamber, while in the service; 23 others have died shortly after retiring from their Senatorial service; making altogether 59 Senators who have died since I became a Member of this body. I think it is very striking and very significant.

I believe that the health of the Members of this body is seriously affected by the air we are compelled to breathe. It would be perfectly easy to have a small pipe go into the open air, with a high-pressure fan, and run by an electric current, which would furnish all of the air this Chamber needs. It would not require a 10-foot tunnel but merely a 2-foot pipe under a high-pressure fan to furnish all the air that is necessary, and clean air, dry air, and air free from infection.

I ask for the adoption of the following:

Ordered, That the Superintendent of the Capitol be, and hereby is, directed to take under advisement the question of the ventilation of the Senate Chamber, and to take such steps as in his judgment may be necessary and adequate to provide at all times an equable temperature and a sufficient supply of pure, fresh air, directly from the outside air, avoiding the use of the present tunnel.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think the chief thing from which we suffer in the Senate is "hot air," and it does not come from very long pipes, either.

Mr. KENYON. May I ask the Senator from Oklahoma what has become of the committee which was appointed some years ago on that very subject? Does the Senator know?

Mr. OWEN. I suppose they are all dead.

I should like to have inserted in the RECORD a list of Senators who have died and to whom I have referred, if there be no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The list referred to is as follows:

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I ask that the order which I have submitted be agreed to.

The order was agreed to.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have read a very short news item contained in the Washington Star of Saturday, February 22. I ask to have it read as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

OKUMA DISCUSSES "RIGHTS"—JAPAN, HE SAYS, AS OF BIG FIVE, SHOULD DEMAND "EQUALITY."

TOKYO, February 21.

Count Okuma, speaking in the House of Peers in reference to the league of nations to-day, said:

"The United States and Great Britain are conjointly the leading nations of Angle-Saxon civilization. For consummating the league nothing more important is to be done than the removal of racial discrimination. Japan is now among the five great powers and fully entitled to demand equality in all respects.

"Much will depend upon Japan's delegates at the peace conference to give practical efficiency to this most important problem, not only for Japan but for the practicability of the league."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I hope the Members of the Senate will simply be advised by this.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD an article from the New York Times of February 24, entitled "A league of despots." It is an article upon the general subject of the league of nations, and particularly upon the subject of the speech made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the New York Times, Feb. 24, 1919.]

A LEAGUE OF DESPOTS.

Senator REED sounds high and clear the note of alarm. Little attention did he give in his Senate speech to miserable interrogatories about the fate of the Constitution and the Monroe doctrine under the league of nations. His mind was fixed upon the all-embracing and awful menace of the league as a conspiracy of monarchs and despots against this land of liberty. "Shall we surrender with the pen what Washington gained by his sword?" Shall we accept government "partly by the people and partly by kings and emperors?" A victor in the war, shall we emerge from the strife "a mere constituent State of a league dominated by European monarchies and Asiatic despots"? Great Britain is an empire, Italy a monarchy, Japan "a monarchy of despotism," France a republic, the United States a republic. "Three monarchies and two republics. Who will control it, I ask again?"

When Senator REED concluded his speech Senators from both sides of the Chamber crowded around him for handshaking and congratulations. Applause upon the floor was redoubled in volume by the enthusiasm of the galleries. Five minutes of tumultuous demonstration set the seal of senatorial and popular approval upon the Missouri Senator's impassioned denunciation of President Wilson's attempt to put the United States in vassalage to the kings of effete Europe and the despots of burnt-out Asia. We should despair of our country if such a speech as this, an eloquent warning against the forfeiture of our liberties, delivered in the Senate on the anniversary of Washington's birth, and adorned with the customary invocation of the memories of Concord Bridge, Lexington, and the coon-skin caps of the embattled farmers, should call forth only that cold and perfunctory applause which might mark the conclusion of an expository address upon the Post Office appropriation bill.

If this be in fact a league of despots that Mr. Wilson has helped to contrive, every American will feel that something ought to be done about it. But does Mr. REED believe in his heart that the American people will be much moved by his speech against the league of nations? Will they take his word for it that the league is compounded of European kings and Asiatic despots, or will they calmly consider the facts? There is a British Empire, made up of self-governing dominions. The United Kingdom is a monarchy where the people's rule is as little hampered as it is in our own Republic. Mr. Lloyd George is the despot we have to fear there. France as a sister Republic gets exceptional treatment from Mr. REED. Italy, however, is a monarchy, and Sonnino is the man against whom suspicion must be directed. The Asiatic despot must be the Emperor of Japan. He would be astounded, and his people with him, to hear himself so described. But stay. There is a despot, a real one, if we mistake not the sole relic of feudal absolutism on earth—the Negus of Abyssinia.

If that fierce African potentate is to be reckoned with, then there is point and force in Senator REED'S speech against the league—otherwise not, decidedly not. Respect due to the senatorial toga forbids us to describe this speech as fustian, but in solemn truth was it not, for all the applause it received from its Washington audience, where all audiences are proverbially "against the administration," was it not a pompous battering down of an open door? Mr. REED'S picture of the league of nations shows this Republic helplessly enmeshed in the snares of a hostile band of monarchical conspirators. But Missouri schoolboys know that in every one of the countries that will be our fellow members—we make exception of Abyssinia and her illustrious Negus—the affairs of Government are in the hands of a Parliament and a ministry. The peoples of those lands are self-governing. Do we stand in such fear of democracies that we must refuse to join them in an earnest effort to establish the reign of peace and justice on earth?

If this be a true picture that Senator REED holds up to our view, if the nations who are to be our partners in this undertaking are harboring those covert designs against our rights and liberties as a sovereign State which he imputes to them, then their ill will and their knavish plots will be an imminent peril to us whether we form a league or not, and obviously a far greater peril without the league than with it. A covenant with them would give us some protection. If we must beware of that as a dangerous entanglement, then we should cease our demobilization and make instant preparation for creating and maintaining a permanent military establishment of not less than 4,000,000 men, and instead of a paltry Navy equal to England's, we must have three times her sea power. With all the world plotting our overthrow, masking malignant designs behind a pretended friendship, we must put ourselves in readiness for defense. The next gale that sweeps from Missouri will bring to our ears the clash of resounding arms.

The American people are an uncommonly sensible folk. We take occasion to record here our firm belief that they will refuse to be scared by Senator REED'S horrendous conjuration of anointed European Kings and whiskered Asiatic despots. But let the Senator beware of misjudging the sentiments of his countrymen upon one important matter. They have a horror of war. They are going to accept the league of nations unless he and Mr. BORAH and Mr. POINDEXTER have a better guarantee of peace. What do they propose?

OIL AND GAS LANDS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. On Saturday the Chair sustained the point of order to the conference report on Senate bill 2812. Having charge of the matter on behalf of the conferees on the part of the Senate, I requested at that time that it be recommitted to the conferees. I ask whether an order is necessary requesting a further conference with the House on the matter. The House having acted upon the conference report and having approved it, a situation has arisen under the rule of the Senate which requires some action apparently on behalf of the Senate, so that the report may be again considered by the House.

I ask unanimous consent that the matter be corrected by the Senate by having the report referred back to the managers on the part of the Senate and that they ask the House for a further conference upon Senate bill 2812.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who made the point of order, is not in the Chamber.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am sure the Senator from Wisconsin intended exactly what I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not doubt it. I have no reason to think otherwise.

Mr. HARDWICK. I suggest to the Senator that the proper procedure is that he move that the Senate insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the bill and ask for a further conference, and that the Chair name the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. PITTMAN. Under the rule apparently it was referred back to the same conferees. The rule is peculiar to this body. I simply ask unanimous consent that it be corrected in that way.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks this is the proper procedure as a new one, that the Senate request a further conference with the House and respectfully request the House to recede from its agreement to the conference report and to appoint, if necessary, conferees.

Mr. PITTMAN. In view of the ruling of the Chair, I move, with the permission of the Senate, that the Senate further insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the House and ask for a further conference and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. There was no disagreement to the amendment of the House. The Senate bill and the House bill had the same identical wording as to the provision of the conference report that went out on a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada did not quite catch the opinion of the Chair. If this is satisfactory, the Chair will put it this way, that the report be rereferred to the same conferees on the part of the Senate. We have no right to ask the House to do anything, and we will just stop at that. Let the House take such steps as it will.

Mr. PITTMAN. I certainly do not desire this measure to fail in conference by reason of the peculiar rule of this body, and unless some message is sent to the House there will be no basis for action there.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There will be the order of the Senate that requests a further conference with the House. That will go to the House. Without question, the Chair does not think the Senate could ask the House to take any step. It must determine for itself what it will or will not do.

Mr. PITTMAN. Then that course will be agreed to by unanimous consent if there is no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so entered, and the Chair appoints the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH], the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] conferees at the further conference on the part of the Senate.

DISCHARGED SICK AND DISABLED SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Mr. FRANCE. I ask to be relieved from serving upon the conference committee on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on House bill 13026, to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide hospital and sanatorium facilities for discharged sick and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines. I find it impossible to serve, and I ask that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] be substituted in my place, and that the House be so notified.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. Is there further morning business? [After a pause.] It is closed.

SENATOR FROM MICHIGAN.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution 415, referring the petition of Henry Ford, contesting the election of Truman H. Newberry as a Senator from Michigan, to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and authorizing said committee to take possession of the ballots, pool books, tally sheets, and documents, and to make investigation and take all necessary proceedings relating to said contest.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. POMERENE. I move that, notwithstanding the objection, the Senate proceed to consideration of the resolution.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Johnson, Cal.	New	Smoot
Beckham	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Spencer
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Sterling
Culberson	Kellogg	Overman	Sutherland
Cummins	Kendrick	Page	Thompson
Curtis	King	Penrose	Townsend
Dillingham	Knox	Pollock	Trammell
Fernald	La Follette	Pomerene	Underwood
France	Lenroot	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Frelinghuysen	Lewis	Reed	Walsh
Gay	McCumber	Robinson	Warren
Hale	McKellar	Shafroth	Watson
Harding	McLean	Sheppard	Weeks
Hardwick	McNary	Simmons	Wolcott
Henderson	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ga.
Hitchcock	Moses	Smith, S. C.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I make a point of order against the motion of the Senator from Ohio, under Rule VII. Paragraph 3 of that rule reads as follows:

3. Until the morning business shall have been concluded, and so announced from the Chair, or until the hour of 1 o'clock has arrived, no motion to proceed to the consideration of any bill, resolution, report of a committee, or other subject upon the calendar shall be entertained by the Presiding Officer, unless by unanimous consent; and if such consent be given the motion shall not be subject to amendment and shall be decided without debate upon the merits of the subject proposed to be taken up: Provided, however, That on Mondays the calendar shall be called under Rule VIII, and during the morning hour no motion shall be entertained to proceed to the consideration of any bill, resolution, report of a committee, or other subject upon the calendar, except the motion to continue the consideration of a bill, resolution, report of a committee, or other subject against objection as provided in Rule VIII.

Then Rule VIII provides the order of business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What has the Senator from Ohio to say?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, of course I assume the Senator from Utah has the right to make the point of order, if he desires, on account of Calendar Monday, but we have been going on, and, notwithstanding that rule, on several Mondays have proceeded to the consideration of other matters. I am not entirely clear in my own mind as to the point which has been raised, whether or not we are entitled to proceed at this time. This is a matter which has been before the Senate from time to time. It represents in its present form the unanimous opinion of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which reported it out, and I have been hoping we could get it disposed of. If the Chair is of opinion that the point is well taken, of course there is nothing for me to do. I recognize the fact that the rules are made to prevent business rather than to expedite business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair sees no way to avoid the rule. It seems to be perfectly plain that when Senators want to call it into effect it can be used. The Chair has knowledge that on at least half a dozen Mondays no attention has been paid to it, but it is the rule, and the Chair will have to sustain the point of order.

Mr. POMERENE. Then I give notice that I shall call up the resolution to-morrow morning, and I hope we will proceed with the calendar.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I call for the regular order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the Post Office appropriation bill.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS—CONFERENCE REPORTS.

Mr. WALSH submited the following report:

T. J. WALSH,

Mr. WALSH submitted the following report:

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask for the regular order, which, I understand, under the rule is the calendar under Rule VIII.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order being called for, the Chair is of the same opinion as that rendered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], that the right to the immediate consideration of a report of a committee of conference only rises at the time of its presentation to the Senate, when, if there is objection, the question shall be immediately put and decided without debate. That is what the presentation means. If it is not then put and then decided, it is subject to all the other rules of the Senate. This being Calendar Monday, the Chair holds that until the hour of 1 o'clock to-day the calendar must be called.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that in the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII, we proceed with the bill which was under consideration when the Senate passed from that order of business the last time the calendar was up for consideration.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator state where that was?

Mr. SMOOT. I have just asked the Secretary if he could name the number. My old calendar has been misplaced. I think it is order of business 554.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Unless I can obtain unanimous consent to consider order of business 549, which will only take a moment, I must object.

Mr. SMOOT. Then we had better begin at the beginning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first business on the calendar will be announced.

Mr. CUMMINS. Did any Senator object to the consideration of that bill?

Mr. KING. I objected to its consideration, but I will withdraw my objection if the Senator from Iowa desires that I shall do so.

Mr. CUMMINS. The bill has already once passed the Senate, has it not, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has.

Mr. KING. I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection of the Senator from Utah is withdrawn. The question is on proceeding to the consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2933) for the relief of the Philippine Scouts.

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes; for a question.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not want to object to the Senator proceeding under the rules, but the Senator is proceeding to address the Senate during the morning hour, and I wish to inquire if he can not wait until we get through with the calendar, so far as is possible before the hour of 1 o'clock, in order that some important bills on the calendar may come up for consideration? Under the rule a Senator, I presume, will only be permitted to speak five minutes on each bill. I do not wish to make an objection of that character, but I thought the Senator might take the floor on any other bill after 1 o'clock.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, when the Senator has spoken for five minutes under the rule, I shall call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana has several minutes left.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, in order to be accommodating to my colleague, I will yield the floor now and resume at the end of the morning hour. I do that with the understanding that I may be recognized at that time. If that is agreeable, I will yield the floor, as I desire to be accommodating. I wish to say, however, before withdrawing, that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] gave notice on Saturday that he would address the Senate on the league of nations this morning, and I understand that when I conclude my brief address on the shipping problem he will speak on the subject to which he has referred.

DISTRICT PROBATION SYSTEM.

The bill (H. R. 10891) to amend and reenact "An act for the establishment of a probation system for the District of Columbia" was announced as next in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. When this bill was last under consideration the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] offered an amendment, which is now pending, and which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 10, after the word "each," it is proposed to insert "one of which assistant probation officers shall serve for one year only"; and on line 11, after the words "per annum," to insert "who shall serve for one year only."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it was agreed by the proponents of the measure that the amendment just read should be accepted. On the following page are two other amendments of the same character, made necessary in order to make the bill conform to the amendments just named. I shall offer those amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Utah, which has been stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 8, after the word "each," it is proposed to insert "one of which assistant probation officers shall serve for one year only"; in line 9, after the words "per annum," to insert "who shall serve for one year only"; and in line 12, after the word "years," to insert "with the exception of one assistant probation officer and one stenographer and typist, who shall be appointed for one year only," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act for the establishment of a probation system for the District of Columbia, approved June 25, 1910, be amended and reenacted by striking out of section 1 of said act the following words: "and one assistant probation officer at a salary of $1,200 per annum," and in lieu thereof insert the following: "and two assistant probation officers at a salary of $1,200 each, one of which assistant probation officers shall serve for one year only, and one stenographer and typist at a salary of $1,200 per annum, who shall serve for one year only," so that section 1 of said act when so amended shall read:

"That the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in general term may appoint one probation officer, at a salary of $1,800 per annum, and as many volunteer assistant probation officers, male or female, as occasion may require; and that the police court of the District of Columbia may appoint one chief probation officer at a salary of $1,500 per annum, and two assistant probation officers at a salary of $1,200 each, one of which assistant probation officers shall serve for one year only, and one stenographer and typist at a salary of $1,200 per annum, who shall serve for one year only, and as many volunteer assistant probation officers, male or female, as occasion may require.

"All such probation officers and assistants shall be appointed for a term of two years, with the exception of one assistant probation officer and one stenographer and typist, who shall be appointed for one year only, and may be removed by the respective courts appointing them. All such volunteer probation officers shall serve without compensation, and shall have such powers and perform such duties as may be assigned to them by said courts."

That section five of said act be amended by striking out of said section the words "five thousand dollars" and by inserting in lieu thereof the words "eight thousand dollars," so that said section when so amended shall read:

"SEC. 5. That the chief probation officer of each court shall be entitled, for himself and his assistants, to a room in the building occupied by that court, and all necessary stationery and supplies for the transaction of the business of his office; and all the probation officers except volunteer officers shall be entitled to their necessary expenses in performing the duties of their office, under the direction of the court, the amount of the expense for such stationery, supplies, and expenses to be fixed and allowed by the court upon proper vouchers submitted to it by the probation officers, and accounts duly verified by their oaths; and for the purpose of this act there is hereby appropriated the sum of $8,000, one half to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendments offered by the Senator from Utah.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. THOMAS. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 121) creating a commission to report a plan for the adoption of the national budget system was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that joint resolution go over. Nothing can be done with it in the House at this stage of the session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

APPOINTMENTS TO STAFF CORPS.

The bill (S. 4891) making certain officers of the Army eligible for appointment as chief of staff corps and departments was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will inquire if there is a member of the Committee on Military Affairs present?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What is the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. It is the bill making certain officers of the Army eligible for appointment as chief of staff corps and departments. I desire to have some member of the committee briefly state what change in existing law is provided for in the bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, as I understand, under the old system chiefs of the staff corps were limited to permanent members of the respective staff corps, and this bill makes eligible additions to the Staff Corps, which has been so far exhausted that the chance for selection is limited.

Mr. THOMAS. I understand it is a war measure.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice the Secretary of War, in a letter to the chairman of Committee on Military Affairs, dated August 29, 1918, states as follows:

In the application of present statute, which limits the field of selection for the heads of staff corps or departments to permanent members of that department and officers of the Army with rank above that of major who shall have served creditably for not less than four years by detail in the staff corps or department, the President finds himself embarrassed by the small number of officers from whom to select the heads of the staff corps and departments.

The successful prosecution of this war demands that he should be not hampered or limited in his choice of the most efficient agencies to carry on the war.

I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming if there is really any need of this legislation now that the war is over?

Mr. WARREN. There was a necessity for it and there will be again, provided there is not some reorganization; but the plan now is to provide for an entire reorganization. I think no harm would come from allowing the bill to go over, and I will object to its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understood the Senator from Wyoming objected to the bill.

Mr. WARREN. I asked that it be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4892) to amend section 4 of chapter 5 of an act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, approved July 9, 1918, and to make said amendment retroactive, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

TRANSFERS OF LAND BETWEEN DEPARTMENTS.

The bill (S. 4893) transferring the tract of land known as Craney Island from the jurisdiction of the War Department to the jurisdiction of the Treasury Department and transferring the tract of land known as Fishermans Island from the jurisdiction of the Treasury Department to the jurisdiction of the War Department was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the military reservation known as Craney Island, now under the control and jurisdiction of the War Department, lying on the western side of the Elizabeth River in Norfolk County, Va., and bounded by the waters of the Elizabeth River, Craney Island Creek, Thoroughfare Creek, and James River, be, and the same hereby is, transferred to and placed under the control and jurisdiction of the Treasury Department for the use of the Public Health Service; and that the sandspit or island called Fishermans Island or Linen Bar, now under the control and jurisdiction of the Treasury Department, situate, lying, and being in the county of Northampton off the point of Cape Charles, between the Atlantic Ocean and Chesapeake Bay, in the eastern district of Virginia, about 12 miles south of Cape Charles City and about 1¾ miles from Cape Charles Light, containing 225 acres, more or less, above high-water mark, be, and the same hereby is, transferred to and placed under the control and jurisdiction of the War Department for use for military purposes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4852) to create an executive department in the Government to be known as the department of aeronautics, and for the appointment of a secretary of aeronautics and an assistant secretary, and providing for appropriations for said department, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask that that go over. It is only intended as a war bill, and for one year thereafter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4637) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4637.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Notwithstanding the objection?

Mr. McKELLAR. Notwithstanding the objection; and I desire to say a few words about this bill. As I understand, we proceed under the five-minute rule in such cases.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is a motion to proceed to the consideration of a bill under these circumstances debatable?

Mr. KING. It is not debatable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not debatable. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to proceed to the consideration of the bill just named. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4472) providing for the sale of public lands for the purpose of using the proceeds arising therefrom in the construction of roads and other permanent improvements in national parks was announced as next in order.

Mr. LENROOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

SURVEY, ETC., OF UNENTERED PUBLIC LANDS.

The bill (S. 4947) to provide for a survey and classification by the Secretary of the Interior of all unentered public lands of the United States and all unused, cut-over, logged, and swamp lands and other unused lands of the United States, with a view to disposing thereof to honorably discharged soldiers and sailors and others, and for other purposes, was considered as in Commitee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been heretofore read in full. The Secretary will state the amendments of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to ask a question in relation to this bill. My calendar has not the bill in it. Does it provide an appropriation for the survey of these lands?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. One million dollars.

Mr. SMOOT. One million dollars for the survey?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is to reduce it from $2,000,000 to $1,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish we had more time to consider it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendments of the committee.

The amendments were, on page 2, line 11, after the words "privately owned," to strike out the comma; in the same line, after the word "cut-over," to strike out the comma; on page 3, line 7, after the word "owned," to strike out the comma; in line 8, after the word "logged," to strike out the comma; and on page 4, line 22, to strike out "$2,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,000,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That, with a view to providing legitimate avenues of sustenance and maintenance for the soldiers and sailors of the United States who shall return to the United States and to private life at the end of the present war in which the United States Government is engaged, and with a view to maintaining in a stable condition the economic interests of the United States and encouraging food production, agriculture, industry, and commerce and affording employment for the millions of returned soldiers and sailors and no longer needed munitions workers and shipbuilders and others employed in war industries at the conclusion of the aforesaid war, and for the general welfare and development of the country, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed forthwith to make or cause to be made a comprehensive survey and classification of all unentered public lands of the United States Government, and of all irrigable, as well as unirrigable, lands of the public domain, and of all privately owned cut-over and logged lands in the United States which are now idle, unoccupied, and unproductive, and of all privately owned swamp or overflowed lands in the United States now unused and unproductive, and of all other totally unused and unprofitable lands of the United States privately owned or a part of the public domain which, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, might be reclaimed and put to productive use, with a view to ascertaining the area, location, nature, and possibilities of all such lands and any other waste lands susceptible of reclamation, settlement, and cultivation, in order to determine what may be necessary to bring them under cultivation and to put them to productive uses, and the amount of money and what methods may be necessary therefor; and he is further authorized and directed to make careful investigation of possible plans and methods of bringing the different classes of all such lands under settlement by returned soldiers and sailors of the United States and industrial laborers out of employment at or before the conclusion of the aforesaid war, and the best methods and terms of making public lands of the United States available therefor, and the best methods and terms for acquisition by the United States of all such privately owned cut-over, logged or overflowed lands or other unused privately owned lands, and what would be proper, appropriate, and generous terms of disposition of any or all thereof to returned and honorably discharged soldiers and sailors of the United States and to former munitions workers and others employed during all or any part of said war at war industries, and to citizens of the United States in general. That the Secretary of the Interior shall investigate thoroughly all of the aforesaid subjects and everything connected therewith and the policy of encouraging all such persons to settle on some of such lands and to engage in agriculture, horticulture, farming, and live-stock raising, and to ascertain what amount of capital it would take therefor and how it should be furnished and upon what terms. In doing so the Secretary of the Interior shall use and have at his disposition and under his control the General Land Office and all of its officials and employees, the Reclamation Service and all of its officials and employees, the Geological Survey and all of its officials and employees, and any other agency of the United States Government which, upon his request, the President of the United States may designate or direct to aid him in any of the aforesaid work, and in addition thereto the Secretary of the Interior may employ for such length of time as he may see fit any person or persons, agencies, or instrumentalities not connected with the United States Government, and such other employees as he may deem necessary; and upon the completion of all thereof, which is hereby directed to be done as soon as reasonable and possible, the Secretary of the Interior shall, as soon as feasible, make full report of all thereof and of all of his work thereunder to the Congress of the United States, which report shall be accompanied by such recommendations as may be proper and as he may see fit to make, and by the submission of any scheme or plan for the disposition, settlement, and cultivation of such lands as aforesaid that he may devise and recommend, together with an estimate by him of the probable cost thereof.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions hereof there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States otherwise unappropriated, the sum of $1,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction and control of the Secretary of the Interior and under rules, regulations, and plans to be by him made and promulgated. With the aforesaid report to the Congress the Secretary of the Interior shall make to the Congress report of how much money herein appropriated was expended and how expended.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4894) to amend the one hundred and eighteenth article of war and to authorize the calling into service of dismissed or discharged officers was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator reporting this bill if that is not a war measure pure and simple; and, if so, what is the use of enacting it into law, now that the war is over?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the object of the bill is shown by the communication from the Secretary of War. It is stated, at the conclusion of it, that the War Department is anxious that the immediate consideration of this bill be had, as it is of the utmost importance that such men be kept with the oversea forces rather than returned to this country. I think the importance of it has very largely disappeared. At the same time, I do not believe that it will do any harm to pass it.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice that the Secretary of War makes this statement in the report:

The War Department is anxious that a speedy consideration of this bill be had, as it is of the utmost importance that such men be kept with the oversea forces rather than returned to this country. The commanding general of the American Expeditionary Forces has requested that the War Department exercise as much haste as possible in order to prevent the returning of these men.

Evidently there is no reason now why those men should not return; and if that is the case it seems to me it is useless to pass the legislation.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not think it is very important now.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator object to having it go over?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think it may just as well go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4946) to permit organizations, units, and detachments of the military forces to sell kitchen by-products, waste, and garbage from their messes and to permit the Government to be the purchaser thereof was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 829) to authorize the employment of Federal prisoners on public roads within the State was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4931) to insure a supply of coal for munition works, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4990) to repeal a proviso of paragraph 3, section 1, of an act entited "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, and further amending said act, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4857) authorizing an Army account of advances for Army appropriations, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, that is emergency legislation. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF ARTICLES OF WAR.

The bill (H. R. 13037) to amend the fiftieth article of war was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that article 50 of section 1342 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes," approved August 29, 1916, be amended to read as follows:

ART. 50. Mitigation or remission of sentences: The power to order the execution of the sentence adjudged by a court-martial shall be held to include, inter alia, the power to mitigate or remit the whole or any part of the sentence.

Any unexecuted portion of a sentence adjudged by a court-martial may be mitigated or remitted by the military authority competent to appoint, for the command, exclusive of penitentiaries and the United States Disciplinary Barracks, in which the person under sentence is held, a court of the kind that imposed the sentence, and the same power may be exercised by superior military authority; but no sentence approved or confirmed by the President shall be remitted or mitigated by any other authority, and no approved sentence of loss of files by an officer shall be remitted or mitigated by any authority inferior to the President except as provided in the fifty-second article.

When empowered by the President so to do, the commanding general of the Army in the field or the commanding general of the territorial department or division may mitigate or remit, and order executed as mitigated or remitted, any sentence which under these articles requires the confirmation of the President before the same may be executed.

The power of remission and mitigation shall extend to all uncollected forfeitures adjudged by sentence of a court-martial.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4605) to protect the insignia of the Young Men's Christian Association, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF CIVIL-RIGHTS ACT.

The bill (S. 4970) to amend the first paragraph of section 302 of the act entitled "An act to extend protection to the civil rights of members of the Military and Naval Establishments of the United States engaged in the present war," approved March 8, 1918, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend paragraph 1 of section 302 of the act entitled "An act to extend protection to the civil rights of members of the Military and Naval Establishments of the United States engaged in the present war," approved March 8, 1918, so as to read as follows:

That the provisions of this section shall apply only to obligations of a person in the military service, originating, as to those who were in the military service on March 8, 1918, prior to the said date, and, as to those entering military service subsequent to the said date, prior to the date of entry into the military service, and secured by mortgage, trust, deed, or other security in the nature of a mortgage, upon real or personal property owned by such person at the commencement of the period of the military service and still owned by him.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECREATION ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA.

The bill (S. 3219) to incorporate the Recreation Association of America was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let that go over.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not object to the consideration of that bill. It is simply to give to this Recreation Association the right to incorporate in the District of Columbia. They can not be given a charter under the general law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If that is the case, I withdraw the objection.

Mr. LODGE. It is a purely charitable organization.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand it to be a District of Columbia charter.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is it, exactly.

Mr. LODGE. That is all.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this morning I objected to this bill being taken up for consideration because, as I understood, it was a direct charter from the Federal Government. I know that a number of efforts were made to secure such charters for various proposed corporations, and I objected to those measures. If this is a mere application of the District law, I have no objection.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That Grenville Clark, New York City; Henry P. Davidson, New York City; Mrs. E. P. Earle, Montclair, N. J.; Mrs. Thomas A. Edison, West Orange, N. J.; Robert Garrett, Baltimore, Md.; C. M. Goethe, Sacramento, Cal.; J. M. Hankins, Birmingham, Ala.; William Kent, Kentfield, Cal.; Gustavus T. Kirby, New York City; G. M. Landers, New Britain, Conn.; Joseph Lee, Boston, Mass.; J. H. McCurdy, Springfield, Mass.; R. D. Maury, Memphis, Tenn.; Walter A. May, Pittsburgh, Pa.; John T. Pratt, New York City; Harold H. Swift, Chicago, Ill.; Robert Lassiter, Charlotte, N. C.; together with such persons as they may associate with themselves, their successors, are hereby created a body corporate of the District of Columbia, by the name of the Recreation Association of America.

SEC. 2. That the objects of the corporation shall be to promote play, playgrounds, and public recreations; but it is not authorized to acquire, either by purchase or lease, any place or property for use for play, playgrounds, or public recreations for which it receives any net profits for admission thereto or participation in the privileges thereof.

SEC. 3. That the corporation hereby formed shall have perpetual succession, shall have a common seal, shall maintain an agent at Washington, D. C., upon whom process may be served, and shall have power to sue and be sued in its corporate name. It shall have power in its corporate name to take and hold by bequest, devise, gift, purchase, or lease, either absolutely or in trust for any of its purposes, such real and personal property as shall be necessary for corporate purposes; to convey or encumber such property, and to invest or reinvest any principal, and deal with and expend any part thereof or the income therefrom; to have officers and conduct its business and hold its meetings within and without the District of Columbia and in the several States and Territories of the United States. The persons named in the first section of this act, or a majority of them, shall have power to adopt a constitution and by-laws for the government of the corporation and to fix thereby the quorum necessary for the transaction of corporate business at such number as they shall see fit, and generally to do all such acts, including the establishment of regulations for the election of associates and successors, as may be necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act and promote the purposes of such corporation.

SEC. 4. That a meeting of the incorporators, their associates, or successors shall be held once in every year after the year of incorporation at such time and place as shall be prescribed in the by-laws, when the annual reports of the officers and executive boards shall be presented and members of the executive board elected for the ensuing year. Special meetings of the corporation may be called upon such notice as may be prescribed.

SEC. 5. That a copy of the constitution and by-laws and of all amendments thereto shall be filed with the Congress when adopted, and on or before the 1st day of April each year said corporation shall make and transmit to the Congress a report of its proceedings for the year ending December 31 preceding, including in such report the names and residences of its officers and a full and itemized account of all receipts and expenditures.

SEC. 6. That the corporation may acquire by gift all the assets of the existing Playground and Recreation Association of America and defray and provide for any debts or liabilities to the discharge of which said assets shall be applicable. The corporation shall have no power to issue certificates of stock or declare or pay any dividends or otherwise distribute to its members any of its property or the proceeds therefrom or from its operations. On dissolution of the corporation otherwise than by act of Congress, the property shall escheat to the United States.

SEC. 7. That all members and officers of the corporation and of its governing body may reside in or be citizens of any place within the United States.

SEC. 8. That Congress reserves the right to repeal, alter, or amend this act at any time.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I see that this bill is subject to the objection which I had in mind, and I object to its consideration.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not make that objection. As I started to say before, this is a bill to allow these people to incorporate in the District of Columbia. The bill is rendered necessary only to enable them to avoid the provisions of the District of Columbia general act requiring residence. The association that it is proposed to incorporate is for purely charitable purposes. It is engaged in the work of establishing municipal playgrounds and recreation places for the poor of the country. It is in every State, and when the war came there was turned over to it the work of the camp community recreation. It did a great deal of that work, entering into every State for this very beneficent purpose. It is an advantage to have a charter from the District of Columbia, but the officers and directors are not all residents of the District of Columbia. In fact, it is necessary to have them in other States. This is to enable them to incorporate here and get rid of the provision of the general incorporation act of the District of Columbia by removing the qualification of residence.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Why could we not amend the general incorporation act of the District so that the directors would not be limited to the District but could be selected from any part of the country?

Mr. THOMAS. I think it would not be wise to enact such a provision into the general law.

Mr. LODGE. That would not be wise as a general law. These exceptions have been made before for other associations formed exclusively for charitable and beneficent purposes. There are also some real Federal charters, such as the one granted to the National Academy of Sciences. It seems to me that an organization for such beneficent purposes as this deserves this slight encouragement—for that is what it is—and this slight assistance to the prosecution of its work at the hands of Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We have had experience with this sort of thing. There was a recreation society, an improvement society, which enabled the German Alliance to slip through. I object to the bill and bills of its character.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill, notwithstanding the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-seven Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 13277.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 13277) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendment.

Mr. HARDWICK. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered and disposed of before other amendments shall be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

THE AMERICAN SHIPPING PROBLEM.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I desire to present to the Senate a problem so vast in its extent and importance, and so urgently demanding solution, that I do not hesitate to take a little time to discuss it, even in these hurried days of an expiring Congress. If I can do no more than to impress on my colleagues the supreme importance, the extraordinary difficulty, and the pressing urgency of this problem my time will have been well spent.

The problem which I wish to present to you is this: What shall we do with the great and constantly growing Government-owned merchant marine under the control of the Shipping Board?

The Shipping Board now owns 44 per cent of the ocean-going merchant marine of the United States over 500 gross tons. In a few months it will own half. When the ships already launched and now being completed in the wet basin have been delivered, it will own 54 per cent. When the ships now on the ways have been launched and delivered, it will own 67 per cent. When all the ships now under contract by the Shipping Board have been delivered—assuming that in the meantime there is no further private construction—more than 70 per cent of the ocean-going tonnage under the American flag of more than 500 gross tons will be owned by the Shipping Board.

In order that the Senate may have the figures before it, I beg leave to submit some tables which the Shipping Board has within a few days furnished me. (See Table A.) In brief, they show that the Shipping Board owned on February 12, 1919, 657 ships of an aggregate dead-weight tonnage of 3,582,900 tons. They show that there have been launched but not yet delivered 1,784,800 dead-weight tons, and that there are on the ways under construction 3,874,093 dead-weight tons. They show that if the present building program is carried out, even taking into account cancellations during the past few weeks of approximately two millions and a quarter of tonnage found unsuitable for commercial needs, the Shipping Board will own in 1920 a total of 14,525,522 dead-weight tons of merchant shipping. These figures compare with a total American merchant marine (excluding the Great Lakes fleet) in 1914 of 5,045,766 tons gross register, or approximately 7,000,000 dead-weight tons. In addition to the ships which the Shipping Board will own, there are now approximately 1,049 ships under the American flag of 500 gross tons or over, with an aggregate dead-weight tonnage of 4,473,338, making a grand total under the American flag in 1920, exclusive of Great Lakes ships and ships under 500 gross tons, of 18,998,960 dead-weight tons—practically 19,000,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I merely wish to get clear in my mind the Senator's statement that there were American-owned ships in 1914 of something like 7,000,000 tons. I think it ought to be made clear that that was coastwise shipping under our flag, but that our overseas shipping at that time did not surely amount to much over 1,000,000 tons.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator is entirely correct. That included the coastwise shipping, but did not include the very large and important shipping on the Great Lakes. We had a very, very small number of ships in the overseas service in 1914. We actually carried at that time a fraction under 10 per cent of our commerce under the American flag. I am glad to have the suggestion made by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. CALDER. The Senator's statement would seem to indicate that our total increased tonnage would be somewhere in the neighborhood of 11,000,000 tons.

Mr. RANSDELL. A total of about 11,000,000 tons; that is, exclusive, I will say, of the Great Lakes commerce. Including the tonnage on the Great Lakes, it would be considerably more.

Mr. CALDER. I am speaking now of our new tonnage.

Mr. RANSDELL. As to new tonnage, the figures furnished to me by the Shipping Board are as follows:

Owned by the Shipping Board, 657 ships of 3,582,966 tons; under contract for the Shipping Board, in the wet basin, 367 ships of 1,784,800 tons; on the ways, 679 ships, aggregating 3,874,093 tons; under contract, 1,069 ships, aggregating 7,525,263 tons, making a total in the wet basin, on the ways, and under contract of 13,188,156 tons. But from that we must deduct the cancellation of 271 ships, aggregating 2,245,600 tons.

So we have now under contract, on the ways, and in the wet basin a balance of 1,844 ships, aggregating 10,942,556 tons. If we add to this the tonnage now owned by the Shipping Board, assuming that there will be no more cancellations and that we will go ahead with the ships now building and now under contract, the Shipping Board will have a total at the end of 1920 of 14,525,522 tons.

I should like to add that the total steam tonnage under the United States flag not owned by the Shipping Board is estimated at 1,049 ships, with an aggregate dead-weight tonnage of 4,473,338 tons; so that the estimated tonnage in 1920, aside from possible private construction in the meantime, is 3,550 ships, aggregating 18,998,960 dead-weight tons.

Mr. CALDER. That is exclusive of the Great Lakes?

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CALDER. Does that equal the total ocean-going shipping that Great Britain had prior to the war?

Mr. RANSDELL. Not quite. England had about 20,000,000 gross tons at the outbreak of the war. I have the exact figures.

The total steam tonnage owned by the United Kingdom at the outbreak of the war, as shown by a report on Ocean Shipping, Document 2112, Sixty-fourth Congress, second session, was 19,235,705 gross tons.

Mr. CALDER. So that when this shipping is completed in the United States we will have within 300,000 tons the same tonnage Great Britain had before the war.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think we must keep in mind the difference in classification. Under our estimates we used dead-weight tons.

Mr. RANSDELL. Theirs is gross tons.

Mr. FLETCHER. Theirs is gross tons.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator from Florida is entirely correct. The British tonnage would be considerably greater if we calculated it in dead-weight tons rather than in gross tons.

Mr. CALDER. The excess is about 25 per cent, I believe.

Mr. RANSDELL. Something more than that; somewhere in the neighborhood of 30 to 40 per cent.

Mr. CALDER. Will the Senator's remarks to-day deal with the question of surplus ocean-going vessels when this program is completed?

Mr. RANSDELL. I do not intend to cover that point. I shall try to explain what ships we have, the necessity for those ships, and what we are to do with them. I wish to invite the attention of the Congress to the very important problem before us of $2,500,000,000 worth of ships without any program to handle them—man them—for at this time we have nothing that would be called a real program.

I wish further to say that within six months from the declaration of peace there will be no authority in anyone to manage and dispose of this great fleet unless the resolution I introduced this morning be adopted, because under the law as it now exists the President, who has sole authority to construct ships, to commandeer ships, to build new ones, to operate them, to dispose of them, will be shorn of all his power within six months after the declaration of peace with Germany.

The figures which I have read to you lead to two startling conclusions. The first is that from the purely quantitative point of view, looking only at the objective of securing an aggregate amount of tonnage under our flag commensurate with the maritime interests of the United States, the problem of the American merchant marine is solved. In the year immediately preceding the European war—the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914—less than a tenth of the water-borne foreign trade of the United States was carried in American vessels; more than 90 per cent was carried in foreign vessels. Soon after some shipping experts made a calculation of how large a merchant marine the United States would require in order to carry on its own vessels 60 per cent of its water-borne foreign trade. It was estimated that from six to ten million gross tons—8,500,000 to 14,000,000 dead-weight tons—would be required. The figures seemed far beyond the widest range of possibility. The National Foreign Trade Council, in a report published early in 1916, made this not too sanguine forecast:

> At a time when predictions are freely made that the United States will become the world's banker and acquire the greatest share of the world's foreign trade, a shipping in the foreign trade of from 6,000,000 to 10,000,000 gross tons would appear not an excessive goal to be attained 10 or 20 years hence.

Ten or twenty years! Within five years from the day on which this hesitating prediction was ventured, we will have under our present program a Government-owned merchant marine larger than the outside limit set by the National Foreign Trade Council, to say nothing of the privately owned merchant marine under the American flag.

I said that the figures which I read to you lead to two startling conclusions. The first I have given you—that from the purely quantitative point of view the problem of the American merchant marine is solved. The second conclusion is, that the problem of what to do with the Government-owned merchant marine of the United States has now become the dominating factor affecting the future of the whole American merchant marine. In solving it let us remember that our magnificent Navy can never prove a real success in war without the cooperation of a large number of merchant ships manned by loyal, well-trained seamen.

As we deal wisely or unwisely with this problem, so will we determine the future of America upon the seas. We have proven during the past year that we as a Nation have the resources and the energy, and that our workmen have the perseverance, to create a fleet of 14,000,000 dead-weight tons of shipping. Have we as a Nation—have our statesmen and our business men, our merchants, our seamen, our trained officers—the patience and the expert knowledge to turn this emergency fleet, this powerful and triumphant instrument of war, into a serviceable and permanent instrument of American commerce? The fleet will be there for our use. Are we going to let it rust and decay for lack of ability to use it? Are we going to be compelled to sell it to foreigners who know how to use it better than we do? Or will we rise to this great national occasion? It is a question which challenges the Nation as it has seldom been challenged before.

In bringing this question before the Senate I do not wish to exaggerate the potency of a governmental policy. I do not believe that a mere act of Congress can create a merchant marine. Why is it that England and the Scandinavian countries and Holland have been able to people the seas with their ships, while France, Italy, and the United States have been relatively second-rate maritime powers, and their merchant ships strangers in the ports of the world? What is it that determines the size of a nation's merchant marine? Not money; not population. The United States is more populous than Great Britain and wealthier than Norway and Denmark and Sweden and Holland combined. Not subsidies. France has subsidized her merchant marine for years, and it has hardly grown. By spending between two or three billion dollars we can build 14,000,000 tons of ships, but merely building ships does not give us a merchant marine. The limit of a nation's merchant marine is not the number or wealth of its population, not the billions its government is willing to devote to subsidy or construction. The limit of a nation's merchant marine lies in the number of trained, alert, resourceful shipping men whom it can call to its service—the number of men, from manager to clerk, from captain to deck hand, on whose watchful, persevering, and competent work the success of a shipping venture depends.

That is the secret of a nation's maritime greatness. That is why England could successfully operate, before the war, nearly 20,000,000 gross tons of shipping, while we, who had the greater population, including our Great Lakes and river tonnage, could only operate about 8,000,000 gross tons. That is why Norway has a merchant marine of nearly 2,000,000 gross tons, while Italy, with 14 times the population, has only a million and a half. Unless men of ability and character and perseverance go into the shipping business, and unless they devote their energies to operating ships rather than to appealing for subsidies and special privileges, nothing that Congress can do will ever build up a merchant marine.

I am not asking, therefore, for a legislative panacea, a governmental substitute for the skill and knowledge and perseverance of the expert shipping man. My point is that the Government is now the principal shipowner of the United States, and that it can not shift the responsibility of deciding what it shall do with its ships. What shall we do with the 14,000,000 tons of shipping we shall own in 1920? If we adopt a policy that deters men of ability and character from going into the field, our investment of two to three billion dollars will have been largely wasted. If we adopt a policy that attracts such men to enter the field, our future as a great maritime nation is assured.

It was the thought that these problems in all their magnitude were before us, that they required not only the expert attention of specialists but the sound, informed judgment of our men of commerce, industry, and labor, and that so far as appeared no concerted thought was being applied to their solution, that induced me to issue a call for a national merchant-marine conference, to be held in Washington on January 22 and the days immediately following, at which the future of our merchant marine could be fully and freely discussed. The meetings were successful beyond our best expectations. Leaders in the shipbuilding and shipping world, representative merchants, bankers, labor leaders, and public officials gave the conference the benefit of their experience and judgment. More than that, a permanent organization, to be known as the National Merchant Marine Association, was formed, with the stated purpose to "advocate the establishment and upbuilding of an American merchant marine." This association, at its organization meeting, created a council, to consist of representative men from agricultural, commercial, and labor circles, and broadly representative of all classes of our citizenship.

The enthusiasm and patriotic purpose displayed at this conference were most gratifying. Those who attended the conference will, I believe, agree with me, however, that the recommendations made by the speakers were for the most part general rather than specific. They dealt—and I say this in no spirit of criticism—with principles rather than with concrete programs. There were a great many more questions put to the conference than there were answers given. Even the address of the representatives of the Shipping Board merely enumerated, in a manner that was most enlightening, the difficult problems that confronted the board, but did not offer any definite manner in which they could be solved. I will enumerate a few of the unanswered questions that were put to the conference. How large a merchant marine shall we build? Shall it be large enough to carry not less than two-thirds of our foreign commerce? Is it worth while to continue our present policy of building two and a half billion dollars' worth of ships, under contracts made during the stress and rush of war emergency, at present high prices for labor and material, or shall we endeavor to cancel some of these contracts and stand the contractor's claim for damages? How shall we operate this merchant marine? Shall we keep it, or sell it, or lease it? If private initiative does not establish permanent lines of fast cargo and passenger ships where our commerce requires them, shall the Government establish such lines and operate them at a loss until the trade is built up, or shall the Government subsidize private lines to carry on these lines?

Shall the Government lease its ships under a form of charter in which the wages of crews are paid by the Government, so that the private owner is not prejudiced by the higher level of American wages? Or shall private companies be allowed to man the vessels, paying only the wages of our foreign competitors, the Government making up the difference by enrolling the seamen in the Naval Reserve and paying them as much as is necessary? How shall we administer whatever policy is necessary? Shall the executive functions of the Shipping Board—the construction and operation of ships—be taken away from the board and placed in a department of transportation, with a Cabinet officer at its head, this department to have jurisdiction over transportation on land, by water, and in the air? None of these questions has yet been satisfactorily answered.

Nevertheless the conference has had one important result, a result to which I hope my remarks to-day will contribute. It has encouraged those who have the welfare of our commercial life at heart to focus their minds intensively on this subject. Before long I hope the council of the association may be in a position to present to Congress and to the Shipping Board the result of its study on the subject. I hope it will not be the only body that will do so. Chambers of commerce, associations interested in foreign trade, organizations representing farmers, workingmen, consumers, representatives of seamen and their officers, students of transportation and foreign trade, writers in the press and the magazines, men representing every possible interest and every conceivable point of view should be giving this problem constant study. Congress will need all the light it can get. And more important yet, the country needs light and information and education, for without popular support no shipping policy can successfully endure.

I think it may assist the study and discussion, which I hope will ensue, to enumerate, briefly, some of the possible solutions of the problem of the disposition of the Government-owned merchant marine. But first I want to clear up several points on which I fear there is a rather widespread misunderstanding.

In the first place, I want to point out to you an extremely serious aspect of the situation, and one which I fear the public hardly realizes. We have not much time in which to seek a solution of the problem. We will soon be forced to legislate. There is a general impression in many quarters that the shipping act extends the power of the Shipping Board to operate ships until five years after the end of the war. This is a complete misapprehension. The shipping act passed on September 7, 1916, authorized the formation of one or more governmental corporations whose life was limited to five years after the termination of the war, and these corporations were, under certain very limited conditions, authorized to operate ships. But the merchant fleet which the Shipping Board has built up is not being and can not be operated under this act. The restrictions are so numerous as to render operation under this act impracticable. The ships which have been built since the outbreak of the war have been operated under the emergency shipping fund section of the deficiency appropriation act of June 15, 1917, which provides that—all ships constructed, purchased, or requisitioned under authority herein or heretofore or hereafter acquired by the United States shall be managed, operated, and disposed of as the President shall direct.

In managing and operating these vessels the Shipping Board is acting under authority delegated by the President by Executive order under this act, and not under authority conferred by Congress in the shipping act. And the emergency shipping fund section of the act of June 15, 1917, provides that—all authority granted to the President herein or by him delegated shall cease six months after the final treaty of peace is proclaimed between this Government and the German Empire.

Six months after the proclamation of ratification of the peace treaty—perhaps nine months from now, almost certainly within a year—the Shipping Board will have a merchant fleet of from five to six million tons on its hands, with no power to operate it and no power to dispose of it, unless the Congress has by that time adopted further legislation or unless the ships have by that time been disposed of.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GAY in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator from Louisiana is discussing a very important phase of the shipping situation. The condition of the legislation and the statutes to which he has referred of course have an important bearing on the problem which confronts us in the determination of our shipping policy. Those laws must be first considered, as the Senator has suggested. I want to put, however, this inquiry: The ships have been built and are now operated, so far as they are operated, and controlled in pursuance of the provisions of the appropriation act to which the Senator has referred. I think it is true at the same time that the shipping act provides for the creation of a corporation; and the corporation, which is known as the Emergency Fleet Corporation, has been formed in pursuance of the shipping act.

Now, inasmuch as the President must dispose of these ships, and his power ceases under the act within six months after the declaration of peace, would there be any reason why, if the ships have not been disposed of, or if the joint resolution which the Senator has introduced this morning is not enacted into law and no steps are taken to handle these ships, the President could not transfer all the ships then in the possession of the Shipping Board, all contracts, all yards, and everything that has been built up under the appropriation to which the Senator refers, to the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and that corporation be empowered to function as the shipping bill provides?

If it comes to that, if we in the meantime do not decide upon a policy, and if there is no further legislation, it seems to me that the President would have authority under the appropriation act to transfer all shipping facilities, all ships, and everything that has been built up under the appropriation act to the Emergency Fleet Corporation, which would then, having certain powers and authority granted by the shipping act, be able to operate, charter, and otherwise manage ships for the period mentioned in the shipping act, to wit, for five years after the declaration of peace.

I merely suggest that thought as a possible way out of the difficulty in case we are unable to get further legislation. I do not mean, however, to minimize the importance of Congress taking some definite steps, either by the adoption of the joint resolution which the Senator from Louisiana has submitted or by some other legislative process, in order that we may determine fully just what course we are to pursue with reference to continuing the building of ships and with reference to the handling, disposition, and operation of the ships, if necessary, which we shall have in the meantime built.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida has raised a very interesting question. One difficulty with his suggestion occurs to me at once. Assuming that it is possible to turn the ships and property over to the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and then to have the Fleet Corporation control them under the shipping act, the problem would by no means be solved. The shipping act gives authority to operate ships only under very limited conditions, so limited as to render operation under the act impracticable. And it gives no authority at all to dispose of ships. So that the Shipping Board would be seriously hampered in its management of the fleet. Moreover, under section 5, subsection a, corporations, under the act, are forbidden to acquire ships "then engaged in the foreign or domestic commerce of the United States" unless the owner intended to withdraw them from such trade. That seems to exclude acquisition of the ships now operated by the Shipping Board. But there is, I think, a broader answer to the Senator's question. I doubt if a correct interpretation of the intent of Congress would justify turning this emergency fleet over for management under the shipping act.

The Senator will recall that the shipping act, which was approved on September 7, 1916, was really not a piece of the emergency war legislation. It was very carefully thought out and a very wise attempt on the part of Congress to make at least a start in building up an American merchant marine. In section 13 an appropriation was made of $50,000,000 for starting the program. Section 11 authorized the Shipping Board to organize one or more corporations in the District of Columbia "for the purchase, construction, equipment, lease, charter, maintenance, and operation of merchant vessels in the commerce of the United States."

Then it provided, as I have already said, that—

At the expiration of five years from the conclusion of the present European war the operation of vessels on the part of any such corporation in which the United States is then a stockholder shall cease and the said corporation stand dissolved.

It was intended that we should go ahead under that law and produce really beneficial results toward building up an American merchant marine; but when we entered into the great war Congress deemed it wise to enlarge the power, not of the Shipping Board directly, but of the President, and in the urgent deficiency appropriation act approved June 15, 1917, appeared this provision:

The President may exercise the power and authority hereby vested in him, and expend the money herein and hereafter appropriated—

That was money for building, requisitioning, and acquiring ships in any way he could—through such agency or agencies as he shall determine from time to time: Provided, That all money turned over to the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation may be expended as other moneys of said corporation are now expended. All ships constructed, purchased, or requisitioned under authority herein, or heretofore or hereafter acquired by the United States, shall be managed, operated, and disposed of as the President may direct.

Under the terms of this act, which I believe appropriated directly $250,000,000, and under the terms of other appropriation acts carrying out the provisions included therein, the Shipping Board, appointed by the President to carry out the authority herein and subsequently conferred, has expended or obligated itself to expend about $2,500,000,000; and my information from the Shipping Board and its attorneys is that this board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation have been functioning, not under the original shipping act, but under the authority of the provisions of the urgent deficiency appropriation act of June 15, 1917.

Paragraph 10 of this provision of that act reads as follows:

All authority granted to the President herein, or by him delegated, shall cease six months after a final treaty of peace is proclaimed between this Government and the German Empire.

If the board is functioning under this act and subsequent appropriation acts and has obligated this country to an expenditure of $2,500,000,000, and if all this power and authority is going to cease six months after the declaration of peace, it seems to me imperative that we should extend the time within which the President can operate.

Let me remind you, sir, that in the administration of the railroads the Director General is given 21 months after the declaration of peace in which to close up the affairs of the Government's operation of the railroads. It is possible that the suggestion of the Senator from Florida is correct, and that if the President should turn over to the Shipping Board the management, control, and disposition of this great fleet it could function under the original shipping act; but I do not believe it. I do not think that act ever contemplated such a thing as a fleet of $2,500,000,000 worth of ships. Bear in mind that it carried an appropriation of only $50,000,000, and we never intended it to go the extent of acquiring, operating, or disposing of a great fleet costing $2,500,000,000. The only wise thing for us to do, Mr. President, is to pass, and pass speedily, the joint resolution I introduced this morning, extending the time for the President to exercise his authority from 6 months to 18 months, and to some extent place our great merchant marine on terms of parity with the Railroad Administration.

For the railroads Congress has under existing law 21 months after the peace treaty in which to frame a policy, and even this the Director General thinks is not enough. For shipping we have only 6 months. I have this day introduced a joint resolution extending this period for 18 months and shall urge its immediate adoption.

In the second place—and this remark is addressed especially to the shipowners of the United States—we must rid ourselves of the delusion that the merchant-marine problem of the United States can be solved by merely repealing the seamen's act. The impression has been sedulously fostered that the seamen's act is responsible for all our maritime woes.

This is an important business matter when we have $2,500,000,000 worth of property and no one is giving the least attention to it; no one is trying to legislate for it; no one is trying to prepare for taking care of that wonderfully valuable asset. We should give it attention; it is ridiculous that we have not done so before now, and I insist that the country shall know that this matter is being brought before the Senate, at any rate. I will do my part if some of the other Senators will not do theirs; but the country shall understand that this matter ought to be legislated upon.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. RANSDELL. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. WEEKS. Perhaps the Senator from Louisiana will recall that something more than six months ago a proposition was made for a general reconstruction policy, in which the shipping matter was specifically considered. An attempt was made at that time to get Congress to take up this subject, but the resolution providing for doing so is still in the committee with an impossibility of getting it out.

Mr. RANSDELL. I believe the Senator from Massachusetts did attempt something of that kind; and I wish for one to say that I am very sorry Congress did not take it up. I think we have been very remiss in not doing so, but it is not too late to make a start now. Simply because we have not done it in the past is no reason why we should not do it now. We can pass the joint resolution I have introduced giving the President a longer period in which to operate through the Emergency Fleet Corporation and the Shipping Board. Instead of having all functions cease in 6 months let them operate for 18 months, if necessary, and that will still be 3 months less than the Railroad Administration has been given in which to operate the railroads.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. RANSDELL. I will be delighted to yield.

Mr. CALDER. I will ask the Senator from Louisiana if it is not the business of the Shipping Board to make some recommendations on this subject? Are they not required to do so under the law?

Mr. RANSDELL. I rather think that they should have made their recommendations; and I know that a resolution was passed not so very long ago by the Committee on Commerce, of which the Senator from New York is a distinguished member, requesting the board to submit to us plans. But I wish to say, in defense of the Shipping Board, that I have talked to a great many people about this question. To allude to a matter to which I referred awhile ago I invited all patriotic Americans to attend a conference in this city to discuss this very subject and suggest plans to Congress. We had about 150 of the most thoughtful men of this Nation at that conference, but not a single man there suggested anything that seemed to me like a real wise, thoroughgoing solution of the problem. I will say we are studying it, but no one as yet has worked out a plan, and therefore I do not like to criticize the Shipping Board for not having developed a plan when no one else seems to have been able to develop one. I believe they are going to present their ideas before very long; I have understood they were; and I sincerely hope they will.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator, is it not their business to do that? Was not the Shipping Board created for that purpose?

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes; they were created very largely for the purpose of trying to build up the American merchant marine; but the Senator must bear in mind that when that act was passed in 1916 we were not in this great world war, and we gave the Shipping Board only $50,000,000. No one contemplated at that time that we would take on this enormous shipbuilding program of $2,500,000,000.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to suggest to the Senator that this large amount of money that we have appropriated, and to which he has referred, was not given the Shipping Board, but was given the Emergency Fleet Corporation. As a matter of fact, the Shipping Board has had very little, if anything, to do with this expenditure or the use of it. They have had abundance of time to study the problems in connection with shipping and planning for American shipping; they have had an opportunity to do that during the last two or three years and to determine what would be a wise policy for this country. It is the Emergency Fleet Corporation that has been building the ships we have now.

Mr. RANSDELL. The suggestion of the Senator is largely correct. It was brought out here, while he was absent from the Chamber, that this money was all turned over to the President under the urgent deficiency appropriation act of June 15, 1917, and that he had authorized the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation to expend the money; but, with all due deference, I think the Shipping Board has had a most difficult problem. It has done, I believe, the very best it could do; and I do not think we ought to criticize it. I know that, as one humble Senator, I have been trying very hard for a year or two to study this problem; I have tried as hard as I ever tried to do anything in my life, and I have not been able to reach any conclusion which is at all satisfactory to myself. I have talked to a great many people. Now, in further answer, I should like very much to see the Shipping Board suggest a program, and I believe they will suggest one; but do not let us be too hard upon them.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. CALDER. I trust the Senator will pardon me for saying that I believe he has given more study to this subject than almost any man in the country——

Mr. RANSDELL. Oh, I do not know about that.

Mr. CALDER. And I know that he has tried very hard to work out a solution; but it has seemed to me, I will say to the Senator, that the trouble with the Shipping Board comes from the fact that not a single member of the Shipping Board has had any experience in these great transportation problems, and therefore they do not bring to the subject a knowledge of the whole problem. If we had men on the board who had knowledge of the shipping business, perhaps we would have had some plan here before this time.

Mr. RANSDELL. Commissioner Donald, the acting chairman of the board for the past several months, has done nothing but attend to shipping all his life. He is an experienced shipping man. They have as the director of operations Mr. Rosseter, who, I understand, is one of the finest shipping men in the United States. He is certainly one of the brightest men I ever met. They had associated with them for a good while Mr. P. A. S. Franklin, of New York, who is also a very able shipping man. I do not mean that these two men, Rosseter and Franklin, were members of the board, but they were certainly associated with the Shipping Board. The Shipping Board have had the benefit of their advice and assistance; and they have had the assistance of other shipping men, let me say.

Mr. CALDER. I will say that there is no doubt about Mr. Franklin's capacity. He has had nothing whatever to do, however, with the Shipping Board, except to help operate the fleet during the war out of New York. Mr. Rosseter is, indeed, one of the best-equipped men in the country on this subject; but he is only a subordinate, and has been with the Emergency Fleet Corporation but a very few weeks. Mr. Donald knows something about shipping, but in a very small way. Indeed, he has seemed to lack really great capacity in its most important work, which, I agree with the Senator from Louisiana, is the most important problem facing this Nation to be solved at the present time.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator has made a very wise criticism. He has suggested that much better men might have been gotten, men who knew far more about shipping. But would it be amiss if I were to ask him whom he would have put on that board, whom he would have gotten that knew so much about shipping, when it is borne in mind that we have so few shipping men in this Nation? We have not been a maritime people. The Senator must admit that it is quite difficult to get trained shipping men who are also first-class business men.

Mr. CALDER. I would have appointed Mr. Ferguson, president of the Newport News Shipbuilding Corporation, who, I think, would have gladly accepted the job if he could have had the authority. I would have appointed Mr. Franklin. I would have appointed Mr. Rosseter. I would have appointed those three men—one a great shipbuilder and two great transportation men—and then I believe by this time we would have had a plan that was working.

Mr. RANSDELL. I am very glad to have the benefit of the Senator's suggestions. They seem wise, and if any vacancies occur in the board I have no doubt that they will have due weight in filling the next vacancies.

When I was interrupted, Mr. President, I was preparing to say that some people think the seamen's act is responsible for all our maritime woes. Those who are taken in by this propaganda generally forget what the seamen's act is about. It abolishes that form of involuntary servitude known as arrest and imprisonment for desertion. It requires that 65 per cent of the crew must be able seamen. It requires that 75 per cent of the crew must be able to understand the orders of the officers. It establishes standards of safety at sea recommended by the international convention of safety at sea. Are not these reasonable and meritorious provisions? As a practical question, we must accept the seamen's act. Members of both parties in this body have expressed the opinion to me that it can not be repealed without a struggle that would carry us far beyond the time during which we must reach a solution of the problem, perhaps never.

The third point to which I wish to call your attention is that under statutes now in force the Shipping Board itself has complete power to adopt a policy for the disposition of two and a half billion dollars' worth of ships and contracts without even consulting Congress. The emergency shipping fund legislation of 1917 authorized the President not only to manage or operate ships acquired by the United States, but to dispose of them, and this authority the President has delegated to the Shipping Board without reservation. One word in an appropriation act, that single word "dispose," gives a body of five men power over two and a half billion dollars' worth of property and contracts, a power they can exercise without even consulting Congress. I mention this without at all implying that I have any reason to believe that the Shipping Board will attempt to exercise this power. I am certain that they must appreciate, as we all appreciate, that the question what we shall do with the Government-owned merchant marine of the United States is a national question, one which Congress, as representative of the people, must decide. I mention it merely to show how unsatisfactory is our legislation on the subject at present, and how important it is that permanent legislation of a satisfactory character be soon adopted.

What then are the possible alternatives before the country today? They range all the way from complete Government ownership and operation, through various stages and forms of joint ownership or control, to complete and untrammeled private ownership and operation. I will enumerate as many of them as have come to my attention.

First. Complete Government ownership and operation. This means that not only the ships, but docks, wharves, and terminals, are owned by the Government; that the Government employs the crews, equips and repairs the ships, buys the ships' stores and bunker fuel, books the freight and passengers, loads and discharges the cargo—in short, substitutes itself in every sense for the private shipping company. This is the method by which the Roumanian Government and the Belgian Government, in connection with their national railroad systems, operated ships before the war. It means Government operation in the same sense that the Government is operating the post office. The Shipping Board has never in its history gone into the shipping business in this sense.

Second. Ownership and operation through a public corporation controlled by the Government, with or without minority representation of private interests. This is the method by which the War Department operates the Panama Railroad & Steamship Co.; it holds almost all the capital stock, appoints the directors, and thus controls completely the management of the corporation. The Lloyd Brasiliero, controlled by the Brazilian Government, and the Russian volunteer fleet, controlled before the war by the Government of the Czar, are further examples. The United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation is a corporation of this character; all its stock is held by the United States and is voted by the Shipping Board. It has not, however, operated ships, even during the war, in the complete sense above described, since it has not itself booked freight or passengers or handled cargoes, but has employed private agencies for that purpose.

Third. The vessels may be owned by the Government and manned and equipped by it, but private shipping agencies may be employed on a commission basis to operate the vessels; that is, to book the freight, handle the cargo, arrange for bunkering and docking, and perform the other duties incidental to commercial ship operation for Government account. This means that the private shipping agency bills the Government for all expenses and losses of the voyage, and accounts to it for all earnings. This is really operation for Government account, but it has the advantage of utilizing the existing shipping companies and placing their expert knowledge in particular trades at the Government's disposal. The Shipping Board was itself manning and operating in this sense at the beginning of the year close to a hundred ships, with an aggregate dead-weight tonnage of over 600,000 tons.

Fourth. The Government can retain the ownership of the vessels and employ the private companies, not only to attend to the commercial management of the ships but to man and victual them. Under this arrangement the operating agent acts as "ship's husband," to use a technical shipping term. He employs the crew, buys the stores, keeps the ship in repair—subject, of course, to the owner's supervision as to major repairs—buys the bunker fuel, finds employment for the ship, directs her movements, and collects the freight money. But he acts in all these matters solely as agent of the Government; all expenses are charged against the Government, and all earnings go to the Government. The operating agent gets a fee for his services in manning the vessel and a commission on the freight as compensation for the commercial management of the ship. At the same time the Government reserves the right to direct the voyage and to specify the cargo.

Fifth. The Government can retain the ownership of the ships and man and victual them and keep them in repair and time charter them to shipping companies at a fixed monthly rental. This is technically known as a "time charter, Government form." The charterer under this form of charter pays for the bunkers, port charges, loading and discharging of cargo, while the Government pays crews' wages and stores. The charterer books the freight and all earnings of the vessel go to him. If the voyage is profitable, he gains; if it is unsuccessful, he loses. In either case he pays the fixed rate of hire to the Government. In this respect this arrangement is fundamentally different from the method of operation for Government account described above. On the other hand, the charterer is freed of all concern with the cost of labor and supplies, since the Government pays and feeds the crews.

Sixth. The Government can retain the ownership of the vessels, but turn them over to private companies under what is known as a bare-boat charter. Under this form of agreement the charterer pays all the expenses of operation and maintenance of the vessel—he employs the crew, feeds them, pays for bunkers, insures the vessel; in short, acts in every respect as if he were the owner of the vessel. He of course pays a monthly rental to the Government for the use of the vessel, but keeps whatever the vessel earns above this rental to meet his operating expenses and for profits.

Under either of the last-mentioned plans the difficult question will arise for decision, What is to be the rate of hire under the charter? Shall the Government lease the vessels in the open market for what they will bring, or shall it fix each year or from month to month an arbitrary rate, depending upon the freight market and the costs of operation, accurately determined? Shall it retain any degree of control of operation, or over voyages, cargoes, and freight rates, or shall it leave these to the operation of the law of supply and demand? Shall it carry the insurance in its own fund, or shall it leave the charterers to place insurance with marine insurance companies? Shall it restrict the lease to American companies, or shall it dispose of some of the vessels to foreign firms?

Seventh. Title to all the vessels could be placed in a large corporation, which would issue stock to private individuals, in order to obtain the proceeds for the purchase, the Government guaranteeing a minimum return on the stock and participating in any profits above a certain figure; or, as a modification of this plan, smaller corporations could be formed under similar guaranties to specialize in particular trades or to engage in the tramp shipping business.

Eighth. The vessels could be sold on terms of payment and at prices sufficiently low to attract purchasers, and be permitted to operate without Government participation. Under this heading could be included all the projects that have been suggested by which the operation of American ships in competition with foreign ships could be assisted by the Government. It includes schemes of direct subsidy, of preferential tariff duties on goods imported in American bottoms, of preferential railroad rates for goods exported in American bottoms, of special exemptions from taxes, tonnage dues, canal tolls, and so forth, and postal and admiralty subventions. Or, again, it has been suggested that the vessels be sold to private companies at such low prices and easy terms as to amount virtually to a subsidy. The ideal underlying this group of plans is the one so persuasively urged by Commissioner Donald, of the Shipping Board—a number of small shipping companies, not concentrated in New York and San Francisco, but distributed among the smaller communities, especially the South Atlantic and Gulf ports, so that the sense of ownership among these communities should develop a sentiment favorable to shipping.

Ninth, and finally. Combinations could be made of several of the above plans. For instance, an ingenious proposal has been made that as many vessels should be sold at, say, the present British cost of construction as will find a market among American purchasers, and that the remainder be assigned to such companies as purchase ships, and in proportion to their purchases for operation the companies pooling the earnings of their own ships with the earnings of the Government's ships assigned to them and paying the Government a share of the aggregate earnings of the pool proportionate to the amount of tonnage which the Government contributes. In this way the same incentive for efficient management would exist in the case of ships operated for the Government as in the case of ships privately owned.

This enumeration will serve to show that the problem is not a simple one. It can not be solved by debating the abstract merits or demerits of Government ownership or private ownership. Those who believe in Government ownership must stand ready to say what form of Government ownership they desire. Those who are in favor of disposing of the ships to private companies must make up their minds under what kind of arrangement such disposition would be practicable. We need programs, not speeches. We need facts, not theories. And we need them soon. I repeat what I have already said, the problem is immensely difficult, it is pressingly urgent, and as yet almost no progress has been made in arriving at a reasonable and practicable solution.

No physician ever treated a disease successfully until it was first diagnosed correctly. I have tried faithfully to diagnose the case of American shipping. All true patriots who love their own country best and wish it to have a genuine United States merchant marine are cordially invited to join hearts, brains, and hands in a sincere, earnest effort to find and apply the remedy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-one Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] has the floor.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I first express my very great appreciation of the messages sent to me by a number of Senators stating that they are necessarily engaged in committees this Monday afternoon and can not return to the floor of the Senate at this moment but will later do me the compliment of their personal presence. I appreciate this, yet I can not say that they lose anything, as much as I would be glad to have them hear all my views. I am wholly conscious of the result of a malady that occasionally seizes me, and of late has been very merciless to me, leaving me physically where I can be of little entertainment. I can but present in a rather dry manner a few facts on the grave subject before us. These I hope will serve as a suggestion of views of one Senator to his colleagues.

Mr. President, we have, sir, at this time entered upon a discussion of the document termed the constitution of the league of nations. Sir, at the outset one would think that at a time like this any man in America could advance to a discussion of that grave question in a spirit qualifying him impartially to judge the thing as it is and to refrain from coloring it with personal animosity or political prejudice. But, sir, I deplore to have to confess that had there been a stranger from another world whose spirit in spectral form in the gallery of this Senate could have heard the attacks made on the project, he could have believed that he had returned to the Roman forum, to the senate of that imperial country, and that some Cataline by the name of Taft or Wilson was being arraigned by a Cicero on the charge of betraying his country to its enemies and for delivery of his native land to its foreign foes.

What, sir, is the thing of which we speak? It is, as we understand it, the presentation of a plan that has for its professed object the devising of some system of universal peace to mankind. Does that suggest an offense against civilization? Has there ever been a time when that holy dream has not been the consummation prayed for by all mankind? Was there ever a theme nobler or one note in the music of patriotism more sublime? Can we not chant the joyful refrain:

"Long have I sought this day."
And prayed to know the way,
To take calm peace by the hand
And lead it to a bleeding land.

If, sir, by any fair method the result may be had, shall we spurn it because the path to the mansion is not paved as we would have chosen? Let us concede that neither the steps leading to the result, nor the final work can appeal to all men alike nor find favor in every mind. Also let it be understood that the supposed weakness or error in a design may not be due to any inherent vice in the proposal, nor, sir, owing to any frailty in the completed proposition. Differences presenting themselves against any proposal can be due to the varying attitude of each human mind as it presents a standard to itself of a specific remedy which it sees most appropriate for that particular felt evil. Each devised solution, though appearing just to its authors, may be most unfit to the situation. Our individual view is as likely to be wrong by the standard of another mind as the joint proposal before us is to any mind.

Therefore, sir, let us at the outset dismiss the feeling that because we may differ from the wisdom of a document that this difference in itself establishes that the document must be wrong, and we unquestionably must be right.

The question before us ever repeats itself—what is the thing sought to be done? What is it all for? Sir, we have seen from the panorama of present time the greatest war civilization has recorded in all its annals. To the horror of the contemplation there arises the startling fact that 7,000,000 of earth's men have been sent to their graves by the shot and stroke of mortal brother, and 14,000,000 more hobble through life but a shattered part of their former selves, while those who depend upon them for bread and sustenance lean now upon a broken staff, and that sinking to earth hopeless. All through the world now will be seen these miserable victims dragging their way on life's road, their legless bodies leaning painfully on crutch or staff, and their pitied fellows just beyond who now are to catch at life's existence by their armless sleeves. Then to the horror of our sight we behold those whose blindness will forever gaze darkened to the skies; those sightless ones who will have to feel with trickling fingers the faces of their beloved to know their own. This legion of dying, helpless, useless, and suffering millions are to be a charge on the Christianity and charity for generations yet unborn.

Does not this in itself suggest the justice and the morality of some effort on the part of mankind for a remedy that such curse and desolation might not ever be repeated again?

If we shall advert to the material losses, to the money waste, then, sir, know that there is $180,000,000,000 of the earnings of 10 generations of mankind gone to ashes in the nowhere. All melted in the fires lighted by men for the consuming of their fellows—in the name of war!

We need not pause to moralize from the standard of war upon the right or wrong of the issues which justify these unholy sacrifices. We speak of the condition. We are now told by proclamation that this present horror is at an end; that the war of devastation of lands and destruction of humanity has been halted, and that we are to make peace.

Mr. President, the great Webster, when beholding his country moving to secession of States, seeing the deluge of blood that was to gush from the bleeding wounds of the sons of the States and reflecting upon what the flag of the Union meant in all the sacrifices made to establish it and hold it up as an ensign of freedom and justice, exclaimed his prayer to God that no future children of the Union should ever be brought to where they would ask the miserable interrogatory, "What is it all for?"

Yet here in this assembly that man of but Christian belief, that man of but humane emotion, that man of but the throb of brotherly kindness must, as he broods on the horrors and destructions of world war, ask in the name of all we speak of as God, "What is at all for?" Where has civilization been benefited or improved, where mankind elevated or advanced, justice vindicated in her temple, or the laws of God or the creeds of Christ fulfilled in this bloody inheritance?

Sir, if there are those who be moved to overcome such monster evil, shall they be held here or elsewhere as offensive to the wisdom of man or statesmanship of country? "The head and front of their offending" is but that they seek the fulfillment of the celestial proclamation of the Master, "Peace on earth, good will to men."

Mr. President, in different forms at different times the compact we speak of as treaties for peace have been undertaken by those who sincerely sought some avenue through which there could be an escape from holocausts which all of us have lately beheld and no tongue can adequately describe. These efforts have produced no peace nor brought us deliverance from wars.

Each age has but added increased machinery for dealing death and multiplied inventions for destruction of communities. This proclamation before us is to offer relief—to at last pledge men to preserve mankind from murder done in the name of civilization and liberty. We have listened, sir, to many speeches upon this floor on the subject of the contents of the document, particularly since the proclamation of the so-called constitution. Despite the desire of the President that debate be deferred for reasons of his own, eminent Senators felt they owed the obligations to their constituencies and to themselves to express their opposition. This they did with expressions of ridicule and condemnation. Such naturally justified others in bringing forth reply. I am one of those who, to do justice to the truth of the situation, speak of the thing as I see it, and this in opposition to the views of many.

These Senators who have assumed, sir, to oppose this proposition have invariably placed their opposition upon the ground that this remedy proposed as the league for peace would involve us in the affairs of Europe; also entangle us with nations of the Asiatic world, and thus withdraw us forever from the integral sovereignty of our independent Republic. Sir, I appreciate the meaning of the Republic of the United States. It has been the pride of its fathers and remains the glory of its sons.

I heard my distinguished friend, the eminent Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], in a speech yesterday, to be referred to by his friends with admiration and by his opponents with confusion, speak opposing this design. In the long line and progression of matter presented by him he recited fifty and more of the European wars which have transpired since the foundation of this country. At the conclusion of each description the able Senator would exclaim, "And not an American in it." I ask, has it come in this era of life that there exists a man who could contemplate the loss of all those lives, the devastation of all those lands, the demolishment of all their homes, the widowing of all those wives, the bereaved mothers without children, and not feel that the "dam'd manner of their taking off" is not of concern to civilization and feel that if we could lay our hands against it ever being repeated we owe to do so not only unto ourselves but unto the thing we profess and call religion? Surely these slaughtered are our fellow mankind. In their death and agony they are our brothers in misery and war.

Mr. President and my fellow Senators, you will recall where Victor Hugo in Les Miserables, tracing the movement of Jean Valjean, locates him where he seeks refuge in a little church from the pursuing Inspector Javert.

The little worship house is hidden in the brushes. Nothing can be seen but the gleam of the altar light upon the sacred place where this little curé counts his rosary in the shadowed precincts. Jean Valjean is seen as he crouches behind a pew in the rear. The holy man, beholding the image, says: "Come up. Come in." Jean, shrinking, replies: "You say for me to come up and come in your house, not knowing me nor how wretched is my condition?" Then the holy man of God says: "This is not my house; this is the house of Christ, and, besides, before you spoke, I knew you." "Knew me?" asks Jean. "Yes," replies the priest; "when I saw that you were wretched I knew you were my brother."

And shall we in America—

> Light again the fires of hell to weld anew the chain
> On that red anvil where each blow is pain.

Sir, unto these of every land in such wretchedness we feel their misery as we must feel the agonies of those of our brothers. I say to my eminent friend from Missouri that these agonizing brutalities and this unmeasured result of misery to Europe brought unto this our land two things—their fleeing descendants who sought refuge to us as an asylum and the misery of their poor forced them to be dependents upon us. For that if there were not another reason, it can be seen how their interest is ours, and for the cause which they suffer we may speak.

Mr. President, because of every effort in the form of an individual treaty for peace with separate countries having failed, there has been resort to an association of ideas, and in this resort some formation of a plan designated "a league of nations." It is this constitution for a league, sir, that is being here at this time presented. It is this that is assailed, condemned, abhorred—indeed, sir, as though it were a compact for the dissolution of the Union and a decree for the ostracism of its men and the death of its children.

Mr. President, we must pause to note that this constitution was not the work of Woodrow Wilson individually. If there be a man who fancies that for partisan reasons or personal perversity mere opposition to it is justified because it was from the hand of Woodrow Wilson, let him recall wherever he is that this work appears to have been the work of representatives of 14 great countries. That there were 14 represented in the deliberations, and that when the result came forth it carried that which is not borne by many documents of the whole world—the unanimous vote and acclaimed decision of all the convention of delegates.

Now, sir, the judgment of these men that some of us impeach by our opposition may be wrong, but we flatter our vanity and lay proud unction to our soul when we conclude that any individual here is superior in wisdom or higher in patriotism than all those combined who there were the representatives of the political intelligence of the earth.

Then, sir, we move at once to the specific objection urged by the eminent Senators opposing the policy expressed in the constitution of the league. Meaning, of course, no invidious distinction as against others who have spoken, I choose the eminent Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and the equally eminent Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] as pronouncing more fully the viewpoints of the objectors and as comprehensively sufficient that we may allude to them, sir, in their analysis as the representatives of the attack, particularly so in the position taken by them personifying the fundamental objections urged.

It is first contended, sir, that the constitution, so called, and the doctrine on which it is based violates the fundamental theory of the fathers of our Government. To sustain that contention the Senators bring forth the declarations of George Washington. On Saturday, a most appropriate and sacred day, the memorial of George Washington, February 22, the Senator from Missouri, voicing that which was also spoken with great capacity by the Senator from Idaho, took refuge for his attack in the provisions of that great message known as Washington's Farewell. From this he assumed a justification for his condemnation of the plan now before the Senate.

Time and time again there has been presented to this body all that Washington has said on the point urged. Equally time and time again it has been pointed out what he meant, each contending side differing from the other in the construction claimed.

We need not pause, sir, to remark the difference in time and condition of the then and the now, nor observe on how isolated we were, how separate we were, how weakened was our State. We can, however, note that the admonition of Washington was against an arrangement with foreign lands that would be political. A relation by which the identity of our country at home would be merged in the political relations and obligations politically of the land abroad.

He likewise, sir, inveighed against coalitions by our country with some one country in Europe. This, if done, could awaken the animosities of the other countries of Europe and turn them against us for that we had combined against them by joining some one either as an exhibition of our favoritism to one country of Europe or as our expression of our enmity to the other. But there never is any expression from the Nation's first master of Government against this Nation taking any course anywhere for the peace of itself or of the world, nor for both in harmony with the relations of men. To the contrary, he specifically invited his countrymen to contemplate those relations that would produce the "harmony of intercourse of the world."

Former Secretary of State Richard Olney, in the Atlantic for May, 1898, produced a letter of Washington to his friend defining his own meaning of the clause in his Farewell Address. Says Mr. Olney (p. 9582 of the article entitled "International Isolation of the United States"):

That Washington was of the opinion that the regimen suited to the struggling infancy of a nation would be adapted to its lusty manhood is unsupported by a particle of evidence. On the contrary, there is authority of the highest character for the statement that he entertained an exactly opposite view, and "thought that a time might come when, our institutions being firmly consolidated and working with complete success, we might safely and perhaps beneficially take part in the consultation held by foreign States for the common advantage of the nations."

Mr. President, then Thomas Jefferson is resorted to. Jefferson, who is the author of the expression "entangling alliances," which frequently is imputed to Washington. We are constantly advised that Jefferson admonished us against alliances which were entangling. This is true, and if such, sir, were contemplated in the plan before us, in the spirit that Jefferson and Washington opposed, there would be no man of any political party on this floor advocating this measure.

I respectfully assert that the eminent Senators have in many instances in their condemnation been wrong in their premises. In other instances wrong in the conclusions they drew from right premises. I charge that in other instances, where their premises were correctly stated from the documents, the conclusions they drew were violent and unjustified by any just judgment that should follow the expression and definition of terms in the instrument. I make bold, first, to declare the situation and position of both Washington and Jefferson on the fundamentals of our Government involved in the construction of the document.

Mr. President, I ask your consideration a moment as to what Washington and Jefferson really meant and what each would have done under conditions like these controlling us. If the eminent Senators, Mr. BORAH and Mr. REED—for whom we have so great a respect that we hesitate to differ from them and so great an affection that we find it painful at any time to oppose them—shall really seek to know what Washington or Jefferson would have done, in order that they may follow at this time their guidance, I beseech their attention and that of their allies in this body.

I invite consideration to expressions of Thomas Jefferson, that all may see that he was not encrusted against advance. I am anxious that all may know that this apostle of democracy was not a worshiper of a fetish in the doctrine of non movere. He was for change upon changed conditions. I assert it never could have been the idea of Thomas Jefferson that the country would not develop, or that in its advancing conditions new remedies would be found for new arising evils. I deny that he was such a slave of the ancients that he would have denied the progress of the modern.

No man respects the fathers, I hope, more than I. I recall the admonition of the prophet in the Holy Scripture proclaiming, "Remove not the ancient landmarks thy fathers have set." But I condemn the thought there shall ever be decreed that we must ever be "ruled by the ashes from their sceptered urns." I speak for the Government of the sons as well as for the creed of the fathers. I demand advanced government for advanced people. I call down condemnation on those who put tombstones and sepulchers as blocks in the path of growing progress. Hear what Mr. Jefferson said in writing to Elbridge Gerry January 26, 1799:

I am not for raising hue and cry against progress—to go backward instead of forward, to look for improvement, to believe that government, religion, morality, and every other science were in the highest perfection in ages of the darkest ignorance, and that nothing can ever be devised more perfect than what was established by our forefathers.

Apropos, sir, of the change of our institutions, says the same philosopher writing to Samuel Kerchinal July 12, 1916:

Some men look at constitutions with sanctimonious reverence and deem them, like the Ark of the Covenant, too sacred to be touched. They ascribe to the men of the preceding age a wisdom more than human and suppose what they did to be beyond amendment. I knew that age well. I belonged to it and labored with it. It deserved well of its country. It was very like the present, but without the experience of the present, and 40 years of experience in government is worth a century of book reading, and this they would say themselves were they to rise from the dead. I am certainly not an advocate for frequent and untried changes in laws and constitutions. I think moderate imperfections had better be borne with, because, when once known, we accommodate ourselves to them and find practical means of correcting their ill effects. But I know also that laws and institutions must go hand in hand with the progress of the human mind.

Now, sir, I have asserted, and I wish to vindicate my assertion, that neither of these eminent fathers would have been opposed to a policy that would have made for peace—not even opposed an alliance to secure such blessing—and I dare say, and offer here my thought, that neither would have been against the proposition such as that now brought before this body under the conditions surrounding us.

I call attention, sir, in reading from Prof. Latané—his review of American foreign policy—page 10—where he makes clear the real meaning of Washington, when he called attention to what Washington said in the declaration:

"Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course * * *," says Washington—

Quotes Prof. Latané.

Speaking of what Washington said in his farewell message on alliances:

Taking care always to keep ourselves by suitable establishments on a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies.

Continues the professor:

It will be observed that Washington warned his countrymen against permanent alliances. He expressly said that we might "safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies." Further than this, many of those who are continually quoting Washington's warning against alliances not only fail to note the limitations under which the advice was given, but they also overlook the reasons assigned. In a succeeding paragraph of the farewell address he said:

"With me a predominant motive has been to endeavor to gain time to our country to settle and mature its yet recent institutions, and to progress without interruption to that degree of strength and consistency which is necessary to give it, humanly speaking, the command of its own fortunes."

When, Mr. President, in the order of any evolution of government has a land ever reached where it was in the "command of its own fortunes" so supremely, so sublimely, as this land of Washington's, this our United States of to-day!

The eminent Senator from Missouri drew an inspiring picture by an epic of oratory in his peroration of Saturday describing the glory with which this country had endowed itself in the service it had done to other countries. He recited how it was our American soldiers and marines that saved England and rescued France when those lands were at the mercy of the German invader. Sir, there never could be greater proof of what command she has of herself, the thing that Washington sought to acquire, than that she could contribute such force of salvation to save the wreck of the Old World. That our Republic in her own strength crossed 3,000 miles of sea carrying her soldiers and equipment, and with these sons of the New World saved the fathers of the Old World to their children and gave to civilization a democracy for their future preservation.

Then, Mr. President, we pause to see, sir, what would the Washington and Jefferson of the olden day have done in this day? Sir, during the brief interval of peace following the treaty of Amiens in 1801, Napoleon undertook the establishment of French power in San Domingo. Fortunately for America the expedition failed. It was Mr. Jefferson who then wrote and then said:

The day that France takes possession of New Orleans fixes the sentence which is to restrain her forever within her low-water mark. It seals the union of two nations, who in conjunction can maintain exclusive possession of the ocean.

What two nations, I ask, does the writer then mean? Says Mr. Jefferson:

From that moment we must marry ourselves to the British fleet and Nation.

Surely, if there were an entangling alliance to make an arrangement for peace, Jefferson could never have been the first to suggest such an "alliance" and such a "marriage with England," with her navy, and this for the preservation of this our new America. Yet, he continues:

We must turn all our attentions to a maritime force, for which our resources place us on very high grounds.

Then, sir:

Monroe was later sent to Paris to support Livingston, and he was instructed by Jefferson, "in case there was no prospect of a favorable termination of the negotiations," to avoid a rupture [with France] until the spring, and "in the meantime enter into conferences with the British Government, through their ambassador at Paris, to fix principles of alliance and leave us in peace until Congress meets." Jefferson had already informed the British minister at Washington that if France should, by closing the mouth of the Mississippi, force the United States to war, "they would throw away the scabbard." Monroe and Livingston were now instructed, in case they should become convinced that France meditated hostilities against the United States, "to negotiate an alliance with England and to stipulate that neither party should make peace or truce without the consent of the other." Thus, notwithstanding his French proclivities and his warning against "entangling alliances," the author of the immortal Declaration of Independence was ready and willing in this emergency to form an alliance with England.

We, too, well know that "the unexpected cession of the entire Province of Louisiana to the United States" was the only thing that avoided the culmination of that project.

I do not bring these things to the attention of eminent Senators who do me the flattering compliment to attend me, on the theory that it is all new to them, or can now be first information. I do so to invite their attention to the fact that in cases like the one we have before us, the exceptional condition which is now ours and commands or calls for the action we contemplate, would have been the rule of action with them. I ask, sir, that you note that the rule which we see that they would have had in their day for peace, is but the rule we now in our day invoke. Then, I ask the able Senators who call up the spirits of Washington and Jefferson, does the present plan proposed by Wilson run counter to the theory which the fathers would have had, under the same circumstances, to that now proposed? We must answer, no; not at all, sir.

Where, now, I ask the Senators, do they find their justification for their very first contention that there is in this league a violation of the Monroe doctrine? What do eminent Senators mean when they present this theory as being one which Mr. Jefferson approved in the conduct of Mr. Monroe, but which would be violated by the proposal of President Wilson?

Stated in terse terms, the doctrine known as the Monroe doctrine—much misunderstood generally, but, of course, in a body like this, with much information upon the subject, perfectly comprehended—had no further or other purpose than to say to the European monarchies, "You shall not establish your governments upon the Western Continent." Let thoughtful men dismiss from their minds that this was a solicitude only for the people of South and Central America. If, sir, we find a fire lighted in these galleries above and surrounding us and we know the chance is that it may be readily extinguished, it may be that we will have no concern for the fate of those who will sit here below. But if we know it will leap its barriers and consume these walls and lick up this parquet, we turn at once to extinguish it by any means at our hand. Sir, it was out of fear for this Government of the United States that were governments established to the south of us that were monarchies, and supported by their imperial armies and navies, they soon could move their batteries upon us, to the extinguishment of the Republic we had founded here.

Secretary Hamilton Fish, in a report to President Grant, as to a European nation taking Cuba, said that the United States "opposes the creation of European dominion on American soil, or its transfer to other European powers." It is unnecessary to multiply examples, for all are applications of the foundation principle of the Monroe doctrine, that we must provide for our peace and safety. "It is doubtless true," said Mr. Webster in his speech on the Panama mission, in April, 1826, "that this declaration must be considered as founded on our rights, and to spring mainly from a regard to their preservation."

The theory was that we should do everything to help prevent the success of these kingly forces establishing their form of government upon this continent, which we felt and believed had been dedicated to the experiment of free republics. The holy alliance of Prussia, Austria, and Russia then threatened its domination in the South American lands. It was then that Britain, through George Canning, her premier, in his interposition with Rush, our United States minister, proposed the possible peril and got the declaration of opposition. The danger was forced to the attention of our own President. Then the doctrine was promulgated as one for our own self-preservation, which we call the Monroe doctrine, after the name of our then President—nomen venerabile et gentibus clarum.

Mr. President, we pause here to reflect, Why should we, the democracy, wish to abandon the Monroe doctrine? What in the world has the United States to gain by any conception of a spirit of surrendering this doctrine? Why should the present Democratic administration wish to do so? Sir, it has been the theme of our discourse in speech; it has been the delight of our praise in platform; it was the creature of our doctrines; it has been the charge and trust of our keeping. Under Polk and Lincoln we advanced to its maintenance with the lives of our sons; under Cleveland we asserted it successfully as against Britain; and from Wilson there will not be found a declaration that was opposed to it. All to the contrary. What purpose would Wilson have to violate it? The man who would voluntarily destroy the principle of it and establish the privilege of monarchies to slay Republics, kill liberty, and overthrow freedom would go down to such ignominy and odium that no tongue could describe, no charity palliate. Sir, there are those who impute to this man Wilson a pride of conduct and a conceit of personality so overweaning that he will neither hear advice nor listen to counsel. Surely these will not then regard him such a fool as to visit upon himself a fate so far removed from what they say he harbors—of being renowned in the esteem and perpetuated in the hearts of his countrymen—as to do the thing that strikes his political death knell. Will he do such a thing? Should he be accused of it? His reply must be, in the words of the prophet to the Lord, "Is thy servant a dog, that he should do such a thing?"

We turn to see, sir, what Wilson said, and we find his address to this body on January 22, 1917, at which time, it will be recalled, he suggested the propositions that have now culminated in some form of peace proposition. Then said the President:

> I am proposing, as it were, that the nations should with one accord adopt the doctrine of President Monroe as the doctrine of the world; that no nation should seek to extend its polity over any other nation or people, but that every people should be left free to determine its own polity, its own way of development, unhindered, unthreatened, unafraid, the little along with the great and powerful.
> I am proposing that all nations henceforth avoid entangling alliances which would draw them into competitions of power, catch them in a net of intrigue and selfish rivalry, and disturb their own affairs with influences intruded from without.

Continuing, he said to the Senate:

> There is no entangling alliance in a concert of power.

This seems the view Mr. Jefferson held when he proposed a concert of powers—for peace. Now, then, Mr. President, we can understand what is meant by article 10 of this convention for a league of peace; sir, if I mistake not, we can summon from our now directed thought the spirit that penned it. It reads:

> ARTICLE 10.
> The high contracting parties undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all States members of the league. In case of any such aggression, or in case of any threat or danger of such aggression, the executive council shall advise upon the means by which the obligation shall be fulfilled.

Will eminent men whose profession has been the comparison of statutes and decisions fail to observe that almost the exact language of the distinguished President to the Senate on January 22, 1917, is incorporated in the spirit of article 10? And I ask any Senator who shall with reflection read these articles if he will not see that that article has more than all other the object of the Monroe doctrine as its care and solicitude?

Now, how stand we? Heretofore, Senators, our country alone has constituted the sponsor of the doctrine, pledging its honor, and time and time again tendering its power to enforce it—against whom? Against those who now have agreed to become parties by literal word to its enforcement. Instead now, sir, of having America alone as the sponsor of the doctrine we call the Monroe doctrine, by the genius of the mind that directed our affairs, we have the world as a guarantor of the Monroe doctrine.

Mr. President, let me ask the able Senators, for their contemplation—would this question, Senators, have been left open? Do you fancy, Senators, that Britain would have left it open, or even in doubt, and this even were we to concede that our own land had not protected with the safeguard prohibiting external aggression? Would Britain have allowed the nations of the earth to possess the balance of power in commerce and in colonies in the Western Hemisphere through seizing any part of Central or South America? It was Canning, her minister, who delighted to exclaim that he "called in the New World to balance the old"; he, the British premier, took credit to himself as being one of the authors of the system. What object would Britain have, sir, in not preserving the Monroe doctrine, when, were she to open the gates to its violation, every rival of hers in Europe would colonize their people and governments in South America to her loss, which she must pay?

I propound to you the next query—the corollary to the first: Would Spain and Italy and France, with the children of their hearts' blood and bone and life of their nations making up the nationalities of these South and Central American lands, sitting at this council table, be content to surrender them to the inroads and invasion of their commercial rivals—once their military conquerors? Ah, what profit, eminent Senators, can you conceive that any nation in council at the European peace table could have for yielding the Monroe doctrine? Sir, I am unable to contemplate a theme upon which such thought could be predicated. Let us dismiss the haunting as "a thing on which dreams are made."

Then, Mr. President, we turn to treat the form of this document—the form so violently denounced or so satirically ridiculed. Having referred to the fundamentals upon which the eminent Senators made their arguments opposing the principle of this constitution, I now, sir, turn to note the comments on the composition.

I know, sir, that here and there we hear that this was a product of Gen. Smuts, of South Africa, or Lord Cecil of England. Mr. President, I only mention this that I might parenthetically advert to one thought. We observe, sir, that Britain is so proud of this document that she delights to have it advertised that one of her sons was one of its creators. Along comes Italy and professes that Cavour, in his first fulmination for a united Italy, is really the sponsor of much of the phrase that brings these nations together in some harmonious compact. Still more interesting it is to find that Germany steps up and claims, in behalf of her fathers of the revolution of 1848, the theory as one born in the compact for the confederation of the South German States. It is only here in America that we note the absence of a spirit willing to give credit to its own for the splendor of his contribution. I know not what motives animate the heart of the man that can be content to discredit his own countryman, that he may give the credit elsewhere, merely that it might tend, sir, in some way to detract from the greatness the world accords to one of his own public servants. I only know I can not envy his standard or praise his envy.

But I heard the eminent Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], as he closed a feature of his general comment, condemn the whole document. "Among other things," said the able Senator, "it savors of the odor of Trotzky"—Trotzky, the contemptible, because of the means he has adopted for government, of murder and destruction. The eminent Senator would have us know that such in itself to his mind produced a suggestion, sir, of internationalism. He read a treatise of Trotzky that approved a plan of this spirit. Because of such, the Senator would have us believe the document unworthy; two features being sufficient to the able Senator from Idaho. One was the enforced peace; the other was the combination with the world to enforce it. These were malodorous because approved in principle by Trotzky, as the Senator affirms.

Senators, hear me. I trust the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] pays me now particular audience. If my eminent friend from Idaho shall tender Trotzky and his low standing to make contemptible any of the elements of this compact, I tender the senior Senator from Massachusetts, the Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE, and his high standing, to give it respectability. I read the speech of the Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE, the Senator from Massachusetts, the now leader of the opposition, on this compact very early in its age. Indeed, it is when it was literally in its chrysalis, before it took its full shape and wings of life. I beseech you to hear me. I read the speech of Senator LODGE, delivered in the city of Washington on May 16, 1916.

I quote from the proceedings of the League to Enforce Peace, a gathering at the Capital.

Said the Senator:

It is well, in understanding any great work—and the work of this league is a very great work, indeed—to know precisely where we stand, and I have been glad to learn that the league has laid down as a principle that it is not engaged in attempting to bring the war in Europe to an end; that its work lies beyond that war, for I have a somewhat deep impression that when the peace we all hope for comes it will not be brought about by expeditions from the United States nor by mass meetings and resolutions, no matter how admirable such resolutions may be. The United States has led the world in the matter of arbitration. From the day of the Jay treaty of 1794 and the Pinckney treaty of 1795 down to 1912, 84 arbitration treaties had been negotiated by the Executive of the United States, 83 had been ratified by the Senate, and only 1, the treaty of 1897 with England, rejected. I think that is a remarkable record. We have carried the principle of voluntary arbitration to its limit, and it is well to recognize that it has a limit, because when we undertake to put into treaties for voluntary arbitration questions which no nation, when the stress comes, will submit to arbitration, we do not advance the cause of peace, but quite the reverse, for we do vast mischief by making treaties which we know in our hearts we are not prepared to carry out when the time comes.

The limit of voluntary arbitration has, I think, been reached. Much has been achieved by it. It has taken out of the range of arms a large mass of questions which once were causes, frequently of war, constantly of reprisals, and by the general consent of civilized mankind has put them before a tribunal and had them there decided. If we have reached the limit of voluntary arbitration, what is the next step? I think the next step is that which this league proposes, and that is to put force behind international peace.

We may not solve it in that way, but if we can not solve it in that way, it can be solved in no other.

* * * * * * *

I trust that we have entered on the path that will lead us to the upbuilding of our national defense both in the Army and in the Navy. I hope this not only to make our peace secure, but because we as a Nation shall find it very difficult to induce others to put force behind peace if we have not force to put behind our own peace. I know—and no one, I think, can know better than one who has served long in the Senate, which is charged with an important share of the ratification and confirmation of all treaties—no one can, I think, feel more deeply than I do the difficulties which confront us in the work which this league undertakes. But the difficulties can not be overcome unless we try to overcome them. I believe much can be done. Probably it will be impossible to stop all wars, but it certainly will be possible to stop some wars and thus diminish their number. The way in which this problem is to be worked out must be left to this league and to those who are giving this great question the study which it deserves. I know the obstacles. I know how quickly we shall be met with the statement that this is a dangerous question which you are putting into your agreement; that no nation can submit to the judgment of other nations—

One would imagine that were one of the orations of the last week, Mr. President—and we must be careful at the beginning not to attempt too much. I know the difficulties which arise when we speak of anything which seems to involve an alliance. But I do not believe that when Washington warned us against entangling alliances he meant for one moment that we should not join with the other civilized nations of the world if a method could be found to diminish war and encourage peace.

Continuing, said the Senator:

It was a year ago that in delivering the chancellor's address at Union College I made an argument on this theory: That if we were to promote international peace at the close of the present terrible war, if we were to restore international law as it must be restored, we must find some way in which the united forces of the nations could be put behind the cause of peace and law. I said then that my hearers might think that I was picturing a Utopia, but it is in the search for Utopias that great discoveries have been made. "Not failure, but low aim, is the crime."

This league certainly has the highest of all aims for the benefit of humanity, and because the pathway is sown with difficulties is no reason that we should turn from it.

I say, "Plato, thou reasonest well."

Mr. President, it is an interesting thing at this time, sir, to find in a speech of the very able Senator from Massachusetts as complete a defense of this constitution of the league as could be given from anyone, anywhere. So, sir, from his eminent intellectuality we can draw much confidence and great consolation. Every objection which has been put forth by eminent Senators opposing it—and for the first, that it would be an alliance which violates the precept of Washington—is denied by the eminent and learned Senator who now opposes it. Every objection upon the ground of using force to establish peace is opposed and controverted by the able Senator. Every opposition to our lending ourselves to other nations to enforce peace for all the world is met by the Senator and overcome, while he advocates the cooperation of force as a thing wholly just. Finally, the theory of the league of nations is the acme of his splendid oration so late as only 1916; and to the youth of the great college which had honored him, and which he honored by his learning, teaching them of the lessons of government; he there proposed, as the ultima thule of human aspirations for peace and happiness, this league of nations. Therefore, Mr. President, I am not moved seriously by the mere fact that there may be something in it which my eminent friend, the Senator from Idaho, thinks meets the approval of Trotzky. I appeal from Trotzky to Lodge!

Mr. President, this brings us then, sir, to the detailed objections; and only a few of them will I take up, sir. Only those of large pretension—those on which Senators opposing say the document can not stand and by which it must fall. I fancy that the President of the United States will set forth with great clearness the reasons for many of the provisions. None are perfect. None can be. That there will be many emendations, many changes from the composite and individual minds which will assemble around this conference table, we must expect. The Constitution of the United States came forth finally—as Gladstone said, "the greatest work struck off at one time by the mind of men"—but seven years elapsed before it reached the point that the country would take it as acceptable, and then but by a real minority, instead of a majority, of its countrymen, and the meaning of its terms disputed over ever since.

Yet we know how it was brought about and finally how only it was accepted. It will not be presumed that a document such as this before us—with its importance, its significance—could have come forth in a state of absolute perfection, and thus bear within itself the exception to every rule of human conduct of a similar kind that has prevailed since life wrote its records.

But we take first the position, made much of and with great force by the Senators and lately advanced by the eminent Senator from Missouri, referring to the voting strength.

The able Senator from Missouri laid his hand upon what he felt was a defenseless weakness in the document—one which, according to his heart's conviction, involved us in a consequence of surrender and destruction. The Senator called attention to the fact that the executive council is made up of five, and that in this council of five the United States had but one vote.

Mr. President, if this executive council had for its authority the privileges of the league, and it could pass wholly and completely upon the destinies of the United States so far as she will have then ventured in this arrangement, I, too, would pause to consider what would be the effect of the numerical majority. The eminent Senator from Missouri says this clause puts us in the peril of the power of kings. That we would be under the dictate of kings—kings!—and that these emperors and monarchs, with all of their natural aversion to our institutions, would be inimical to our welfare, and enemies to our interests, and for the baleful power of kings we must be on guard and beware their edict in this league.

Kings, sir? I pause. Where are they? Yonder in Britain the thing called the Crown is as impotent as the picture of it upon the sands, sir, that is washed by a receding and incoming tide. As little voice has the King to his people in direction as the smallest infirm mayor of a city in our land. The royal prerogative which was once a thing before which we quailed, and finally disdained, has ceased of its existence. More of democracy, in justice let it be admitted, than is found in the land of Britain, we know not of in America!

Italy? So impotent was her King that when he dared utter a voice against a mere commanding general of the army marching against the German Emperor a revolution surrounded his gates. For an hour it seemed as if his life would be hazarded to the fury of the mob, and there were not found any of his people who would lift an arm to preserve the King at such moment.

In Greece a humble citizen from a small island, called Venezilos, overthrew the royal power and blocked its mouth to silence; while in Russia we have beheld what has happened to one called the Czar. Truly we can exclaim as to monarchs Shakespeare's apostrophe to the rose—

> What's in a name;
> A rose by any other name would smell as sweet.

A king by any other name would be as useless.

Kings! How we glorify our spirit of proud democracy of republican America, from whence came the edict that hurled kings at the feet of the peasant and melted their scepter before the eyes of their countrymen, who beheld it with joy, and rejoiced over it in praise!

We remember Richard II, replying to the question asking "Where is the Duke with his power?" says:

> For God's sake let us sit upon the ground
> And tell sad stories of the death of kings—
> How some have been deposed;
> Some poisoned by their wives; some sleeping killed;
> All murdered.
>
> * * * * * * *
> Cover your heads, and mock not flesh and blood
> With solemn reverence. Throw away respect,
> Tradition, form, and ceremonious duty;
> For you have but mistook me all this while.

Why, sir, we would not wish them dead as men but as kings; and I wish my eminent friends to contemplate for a moment how impotent they are. We heard the able Senator from Missouri, in one of his characteristic and magnificent outbursts in this body a short time ago, contending against the plan of the league, offer the fact that every monarch was cousin by blood; another an uncle by relation; others bearing so close affinity that we could never hope for them to be otherwise than in conjunction with each other, as against republics and our country. Yet, in the face of that, he saw one uncle topple another from the throne, another uncle turn his batteries upon his relation, and how five went down to nothingness; how, as against their own blood, not the kings spoke, but their people against and over them. Then the people's war overthrew crowns, toppled emperors, and by their will, their voice, their decree, drove royalty to hiding, as refuge from death or salvation from the fury of revolution. Democracy, like justice, is at last abroad in the land. It is from the United States it speaks its warning and extends its power.

Oh, sir, we need not fear the name of a king; we need not be afrighted. The mere suggestion of a scepter need not alarm the soul of the quiet. And the American in the presence of kings is now the tranquil monarch.

Then, Mr. President, we pause to reflect, that if the able Senator from Missouri be correct in assuming that there is a disposition on the part of those who make up this council to be inimical to the welfare of the United States and its justice, or that they wait in the end to execute some vengeance which the Senator fears lurks within them and could all be executed within the power granted in this particular clause, then, sir, I say we are undone now. For if these nations are in this disposition and mettle for our destruction, we destroyed our land when we entered into the conclave with them in the allied council of war with only one vote to their five. Or we are now trembling in the balance of destruction when we sit in the allied council of peace with the same proportion—of voice and authority.

Surely, it must be apparent to all that if their attitude of heart be such as the eminent Senator feels then there is nothing we can do or undo that could avoid the vengeance which their hearts brood against us and now hangs like a fate to descend upon our head. It does not require a voting trust to give them the disposition, and no lack of it would relieve them of their inclination. They have the power jointly there to outvote us in everything now, and had it while the war proceeded, under the allied control. If their actions have not invited confidence or do not justify it, let us cease all intercourse with them as being unworthy and dangerous.

Mr. President, I ask the able Senators who have assailed this document to contemplate this thought: If the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Idaho be correct in their construction, what think they of France and of Italy and the other nations sitting down and adopting a system which as against each of them in its voting proportions could be equally as destructive in operation as the Senators assume could operate against us? As this is plainly true, would these trained diplomats have put themselves in such a trap? Would they have adopted it? Would they have entered into it? Therefore you must see that the construction is not a probable one. That the danger summoned up as possible for us must be impossible for any.

I now ask you who is it has a right to vote? The able Senators are correct when they use the expression taken from the definition of those who are to be represented in the council—"self-governing countries," colonies, dominions. What is the meaning of the word? Evidently Britain had in mind India as a colony; Canada is known by the name "Dominion"; and Britain herself designated as "country." But our able friend, the Senator from Idaho, reads in this document where every country or a colony which in itself merely governs itself would have a right to cast its individual vote. The able Senator from Missouri, complimenting the Senator from Idaho—and rightfully well he might—paid tribute to the alacrity of his genius in bringing forth an article from the London Times, in which article it is assumed that it is the contention of Britain that each of these little independencies is to be treated as a country, and as such have the right of a vote. Of course were this true the majority of voting powers would appear with Britain. I beg to say to the able Senator from Idaho he misread the article. If he will but look at it, he will see that neither his own construction nor that of the Seantor from Missouri is at all justified. Let me invite him to his correction. Says the London Times:

> It is again a source of legitimate pride to Englishmen that article 19 in the covenant might almost be taken as an exposition of the principle animating the relations of Great Britain with India and the Dominions.

Then, says the Senator from Idaho, seeking to accent this provision, "Listen to this language"—

> That the dominions are in this document recognized as nations before the world is also a fact of profound significance in the history of these relations.

My able friend, in the haste of his investigation, or possessed so completely by his opposition to the document in general, neglected to note what is article 19, referred to by the Times. Article 19, which the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Idaho would have you believe conveyed this separate vote as "nations" to these colonies of Britain, has nothing whatever to do with votes, nor, indeed, with the lands to be included in the league. Article 19 refers to those countries from the enemy, not from the allies, those who are not in the league now. We see what article 19 means when we read it:

> ARTICLE 19.
> To those colonies and territories which as a consequence of the war have ceased to be under the sovereignty of the States which formerly governed them and which are inhabited by peoples not yet able to stand by themselves under the strenuous conditions of the modern world there should be applied the principle that the well-being and development of such peoples form a sacred trust of civilization and that securities for the performance of this trust should be embodied in the constitution of the league.

Surely, Mr. President, I hope there will be applied some principle to these colonies that will recognize them as self-governing when it can be done; and to their people the right of human beings deserving of the care and the charity of mankind. But it must be quite apparent, sir, that the fear both eminent Senators had that the expressions of the London Times meant to give a construction to this document to mean that those who are to have individual votes which would, as Senators assumed, have given a majority of votes against the United States in every possibility is all based on a wrong assumption of premises. It is now seen that the reading by both Senators and construction was the result of a complete misapprehension.

Sir, who are those who really have the vote? I come to the position taken by the Senator from Missouri—most effective, if true; most alarming, if right; most convincing, if just. It is that in the final vote of the league this Nation would stand in the league from the beginning in the minority, and, as such, would be impotent. I will pass the phase of the preliminary construction of the league. I now assume for basis of argument that the league is formed. Will it be assumed that the United States of America will ever tolerate this league to be formed without also incorporating in it the countries—the "self-governing countries"—of South America? Will it be possibly assumed that we could ever think of having them omitted? Is it not obvious that as we protect them under the doctrine called the Monroe doctrine we would as a first step in the course of that guaranty place them where by their voice and vote they could protect themselves? Would not this be our first act as a benefit to them and service to ourselves? Even were we indifferent to them being in, they would come in on their own situation under the constitution of the league as "self-governing countries," within the definition of "countries, dominions, and colonies." This is plainly without a doubt. Sir, is there an American who would assume that our President could even concede in thought, far less by vote, that such a possibility of their being omitted ever could exist? We need only answer by recalling his pledges to them made in his Mobile (Ala.) speech.

Yet, I will accept the view expressed by both eminent Senators—Mr. BORAH from Idaho and Mr. REED of Missouri—wrong, as I think I am able to manifest them, in this reading of the constitution, to be—I will accept it as though the reading were correct. I will assume that Britain voted each of the nations in the council, or if not, then each of her colonies; yet there stands the United States of America, and the 11 countries upon her own continent, with all of their destinies wrapped and intertwined with the fate of this American Hemisphere—I ask where would their vote be, sir? With everything that Britain could command in the main council, we would, with these countries of our hemisphere, have nine to five on every European policy. The United States, Argentina, Brazil, Bolivia, Chile, Peru, Uruguay, Paraguay, Cuba, against Britain, France, Italy, Spain, Japan, or against Britain, India, Canada, Australia, and South Africa, or as against all in any unit against the Western Hemisphere—they 10 to the United States, South and Central America, 15.

Mr. REED. Where from?

Mr. LEWIS. The South American countries. I assume, sir, it would not be possible to bar them from admittance to the league.

Mr. REED. They are not in the league now.

Mr. LEWIS. Ah, sir, I call the able Senator's attention to the fact that it is not the council, as he has assumed in all his arguments, that sits upon these admissions and destinies of countries. They are the mere board of directors, now arranging for the first stockholders of the concern. After that primary organization the company as formed is to admit the applying members. The eminent Senators made their error of conclusion in assuming that it was the council who settled the destinies and the fates of admission or rejection of States. I reply, read the document; it provides that it is the league which votes the policies, not the committee on first membership—the executive council. It is only the league, as we shall see in a moment. I will not concede for a moment that our country would sit in the council or the league and, admitting members of the league, omit the South American countries, "self-governing," under the very stable standard they have prescribed, of allowing "any self-governing State to the league by two-thirds vote of the league members." Therefore it must be apparent, sir, that we need only consider the Western Hemisphere as being true to itself, for us to know that every vote of such country will be for its own preservation; certainly never for its destruction.

It is the old royalties of Europe that have threatened to overrun these lands. It was these old kingdom lands that tried to capture and conquer South America. Shall it be ever presumed that these countries would now vote to surrender themselves to their ever ancient foes? Certainly impossible. When this, then, brings us justly to contemplate their number—eleven—and then the number of the colonies which Great Britain could bring in under the definition—six—there is not one instance where the majority would not be so great and overwhelmingly in our behalf that there could not be a possibility of the danger of our being ever outvoted by the British Empire on any question of our prime concern that the Senators from Missouri and Idaho so deeply fear.

Now, sir, we take the second test proposed by the contending Senators. The Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Idaho say, "Now, here sits Japan, here is the policy of the United States of Japanese exclusion as against Japanese immigration. These countries of the league council—England, France, Italy, and Spain—say the Senators, could vote with Japan, could vote out the policy of exclusion by the United States of citizens often necessary for her welfare—is at once voted away."

Why, Mr. President, apart from the interest that the continents of the Western Hemisphere, including all South and Central American lands, would have in protecting themselves against the invasion of the Asiatic millions, behold the colonies of Great Britain, which opposing Senators say will vote as units in the league. There are the four Australias, South Africa, British Columbia—all by their laws declared for the same policy of exclusion as that prevailing in the United States. All these, as "in all beseeming ranks march one way." Sir, will these be found voting against the laws and policies they have passed and which to-day are the preservation of their existence, the policy of their sovereignty? Will their mother, Britain, be found voting against her children on so vital a necessity and drive them to a severance from the Empire and in commercial union with America? It would hardly be conceived that such mad course can be presumed. Only by indulging these phantoms of imagination, so far from possible realities, can we entertain the fears of the alarmed Senators. And now I turn for a moment to another theme of great anxiety to the opposing Senators.

The able Senators say, in the voice of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]: "These nationalities, who can not speak our tongue, will sit in judgment as to the size of our Navy and our Army." "The Constitution provides such privilege," says the Senator, and on this charge calls down perfidious damnation on its presumed operation. Where is the evidence for such verdict; where the fact for such judgment? Why, the prescription is that the armaments are to be reduced or are to be established according, sir, to the necessity of each State, as that State shall manifest such—I prefer to read the exact words:

The high contracting parties recognize the principle that the maintenance of peace will require the reduction of national armaments—

First—

To the lowest point consistent with national safety—

Sir, who determines that? The country itself knows what is consistent with its own national safety. It is the sole and only judge. We would be the sole and supreme judge of what was consistent with our national safety, and the voice to express and assert it.

And—

Second. To the enforcement, by common action, of international obligations, having special regard to the geographical situation and circumstances of each State.

The State itself is the judge of its special "geographical situation" and of its particular circumstances. Only when each State has determined this status for itself does the action of the league begin. First, the State's own people must approve, or, as the constitution says, "when adopted." That is when the limitation suggested is adopted by the country to which the limitation is proposed, and the adoption only follows the fullest home consideration and decision. Then, only then, can the league enforce the decision of each State made with each other. This reciprocal and interdependent relation brings each to a common point of reduction proportionate to each other and to the necessity of each.

Now, I propound to the Senators this query for their contemplation: If I am not right, Britain has given her navy up to the other four countries of the executive council to limit and control. This you know she would never do. These lands have been her ancient foes; may be again. If I am not right, America can destroy the British Navy with the votes of South America alone, or with six votes in addition to her own. If the Senators be right in their contention that Britain and France and Italy and Japan could sit alone in their sovereign judgment and decide on our Navy and our Army, then Spain, with a memory of the days of Wellington; Italy, with the history of her conflict with England; France, with the specter of Napoleon and Waterloo and lately Fashoda—these Governments, with our one vote, could destroy the British Navy by reducing it by their votes as against hers, to such a minimum as to make it useless to her necessities. All this could never be, and could never be thought in the mind of any. That is why you find in this expression the specific language that I have very little doubt, Mr. President, was the word of Britain. If I may assume to use the colloquial yet very expressive term of the Senator from Missouri, this was where Britain was "on the job." The apt words of the Senator apply here, I fancy, more than to any other phrase found in this whole document, for we read—

Having special regard to the geographical situation and circumstances of each State.

Then, sir, you will see that each State is, under this document, specifically its own judge as to its circumstances and peculiar situation, and only by that construction, sir, will Britain be able to have the navy of such supremacy that she feels necessary to her welfare and one that we present to our people concerning our Navy as necessary for their adoption. The construction of the able Senators who have opposed this document, if well taken, would mean the death of the navy of any one of the countries of the executive council at the vote of the other four. Can any of us think that the trained diplomats of the Old World would have allowed language, far less provisions of agreement, that could be construed to do such a thing? Do you think the United States, with her late experiences, would have tolerated a document of that kind, or a construction that was possible of that nature? The United States is not represented by men who would commit national murder of their land and political suicide of themselves. So the able Senators must see that the charge they have made and the danger they express—that this league, by the specific votes of this council, could dictate our Army and Navy by their voice, without ours—was without foundation in the document itself; is without reason in any declaration of words or paragraph of authority. To these fears we cry "Avaunt."

Now, sir, say the Senators, there is the feature of arbitration, which, as they charge, compels us to arbitrate those things to which a sense of honor and a sense of right ought never to yield. I beseech the Senators to recall that the specific words of arbitration are very much after the form of words which have been debated here on this floor in connection with arbitration treaties tendered in the administration of President Taft. We find, Mr. President, that arbitrable questions are wholly left as follows:

> The high contracting parties agree that whenever any dispute or difficulty shall arise between them which they recognize to be suitable for submission to arbitration and which can not be satisfactorily settled by diplomacy.

Reserving, sir, that thing which has been discussed, and which the eminent Senator from Pennsylvania who listens to me [Mr. KNOX], as the late great Secretary of State, has so often had occasion to recur to here in his arguments, because of his own experience. That question that was discussed on the floor of the Senate so often, and no doubt was in the mind of the writer of this document, that there were certain questions of national honor or sovereign policy which could not be arbitrated. Others which should only be submitted to arbitration by the voluntary will of certain nations of the world. Therefore, sir, instead of the fear expressed by the eminent Senator, that this arbitration of our difficulties will be left perforce to our common enemies, and those of antagonism to dictate to us, the fact appears clearly upon the document that it is left by the words, by the terms of the bond, to the honor and the sense of the Nation itself as to whether it shall choose the method of arbitration or some other disposition for that particular grievance or dispute. It is a voluntary arrangement, except as to matters that could bring on war. As to the latter the league offers solution to prevent war, by prescribing a court for the solution of the dispute.

This whole paragraph we take from The Hague treaties:

Mr. President, it must be plain, sir, that the eminent Senators have read this document in a mystifying light that has greatly confused them.

The able Senator from Missouri strikes a responsive chord and makes a severe impress by his emphasis on the charge that he would have you accept that this league, under the terms of this document, could enter with its power and interfere in local contests. He cites two possible illustrations most commanding at the present time to the attention of two very kindly great people of our own land. One, the Pole who was striving for liberty for his country; the other, the noble, patriotic Irishman that has dreamed of an Irish republic since the foundation of his generation. Sir, the able Senator asserts that under this document, lands such as these, Poland and Ireland, in their struggle for political equality, could be set upon, overreached, overrun by the league forces on the charge of internal disputes, and because of such little lands, struggling within, could be made the victims of force. That by such power of the league these little lands could be throttled to silence against their revolt. If this charge is apparently justified I confess the evil, and one to be a cause of veto of the league. If there is in all the document one clause, yea, one word, to summon this accusation I will surrender my defense. I now ask the able Senators to reflect on the language that the specific words in the document are "external aggression." Only under external aggression can the league have any jurisdiction. Does any man of reflection pause for a moment to ask himself why the word "external" was added? If any form of aggression without or within was to be the privilege of the jurisdiction of this league the word "aggression" alone would have been there. It would have covered all. The word "external" was added to make it impossible that there should ever arise, in the mind of any living man, the apprehension that the internal conflicts of a people however aggressive should ever be the subject or privilege of the jurisdiction of these powers.

And, Mr. President, in the clause of the paragraph that the able Senator from Missouri attacked so fiercely, reading that in any matter that gave promise of war was a "subject of concern to the league," in which he saw evils from his vision, I invite the lawyers to the consideration of the construction. When it came to that the league reserved no power at all, no privilege of active conduct. They say to themselves that it is a matter of concern upon which they assume to offer counsel. This, as we in the United States have done time and time again to any land on the Western Continent and to many lands in Europe, yet in so doing we never have assumed to intrude our force in order to execute our friendly counsel, and we can readily appreciate what effect the counsel of this body would have with its suggestions. Let us reflect on them and their operations in the course of human action among nations. It suggests the possibility of friendships with the interceding friend or the commercial or political opposition of the interceder. The expression or reservation, sir, that war is a matter of concern to it, the league, and that it would seek to ameliorate and avoid it by accessible means, is as natural as that we would seek to extinguish a light conflagration advancing toward us, which might mean, sir, ultimately a fire of universal destruction. But the fear expressed by the able Senator that it meant that these great nations would forcibly seize these little ones and literally throttle their life and suppress their existence by the despotism of their power, I respectfully urge, has no foundation in any line or letter of the document now before this assemblage. "Beware of the wraith sent to the stage to frighten the players."

Now, Mr. President, I offer proof of my construction. I offer proof that my learned friend from Missouri will have to accept as conclusive. I commend the test I present to the Senator from Idaho, and call up his historical information, to say nothing of his acumen, to justify the illustration I tender. I say that if it be true that anything in this document—anything in the paragraph read—would allow any land—America, France, or Britain—or any combination of lands to suppress the internal dissensions in Ireland or Poland or elsewhere, then by the same authority, Britain would have realized that such power also would have meant the privilege of Russia or Japan to enter into India and interfere in her internal revolts, and summons all the forces of the league. That France, long with her eye "avaricious with hope" in the dream of eastern possession, would have had the privilege to enter into England's colony of Egypt. Do you fancy that Britain ever would have had a document here, sir, that would have allowed any outside nations to enter into any colony of hers for the purpose of suppressing revolts and lending themselves to the dispute one way or the other—on ground of maintaining order? This she knows might mean, sir, the destruction of her sovereignty over them. For the new intruder could by its presence convert them to itself and appropriate them to its own uses, as England did with Egypt, under privilege of "restoring order," France in Algiers, the United States in the Philippines. The answer springs to our lips—never!

Well, sir, as it would not be allowed to apply to colonies of Britain against her, it can not apply to any country, by Britain or France, against us. It does not give, sir, to any the power to do that with any land which Britain could not in our land, and which Britain would not allow from us or any other in her land. So let us have done with this invented terror. Sir, common logic and common sense advise us of its impossibility. In the document not a line or a sentence can be read by the flicker of imagination to justify the accusation.

Mr. President, I must move on. I know that this long analysis of the charter is burdening, but of that I must take the responsibility. The necessity is that two industrious, able assailants in two days' occupation thundered against its walls. I must expose how invincible it is even after assault.

Mr. President, in the concluding features of this analysis I have but this following thought to offer on this section: It is to say that it must have been in the minds of those who framed this provision of this document that wherever it was apparent to those directing or about to threaten an unjust war that they would bring upon themselves the collective forces of those who would suppress their unjust attacks; these would restrain themselves nor dare proceed further upon it. Let me ask, Does anybody imagine that Germany would have entered upon the war—unholy invasion—she did, had she known that these forces that finally overcame her were ready to combine to vanquish her if she ventured upon the course of universal destruction? The hasty yielding by her when she felt the unconquerable power of their combination answers the question. This applies to explain the provision. It is the text of Job, saying—

How forcible are right words.

Mr. President, after all, sir, it is public opinion. Public opinion, stimulated by public conscience, will guide the construction of the document. Public opinion, inspired by public virtue, will sustain this league in what it shall undertake, or it will overthrow and defeat it in any attempt against the equities of men or the rights of countries. It will appeal to public opinion before ever it assumes to execute any policy, and on this judgment it will advance or withdraw.

You will remember, Senators, that Joseph Alison, writing in 1840 from Possel House, Glasgow, dilating upon Guizot and his history of European civilization, says:

The one great error of Napoleon was in assuming that government could be conducted by prescription, forgetful after all that it is the opinion of mankind—first through the intellectual man and then by restraining the thoughtless or defiant man, which, after all, is the director of all actions on earth—that make for the true advance of men.

So here, too, sirs, as to this, as to all other great tasks, it will be the public opinion of mankind in which all of this will be construed and executed, or judged and defeated. On this rock must we build our house, if the storm is not to destroy it.

Mr. President, I now advert to the text advanced by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], which I regard of such great significance that I can not permit it to remain in the state he left it. The able Senator from Idaho concluded his masterly oration by creating the issue of "nationalism." He would have left the country to understand that there was now an issue against the democracy, of "nationalism" created by those who oppose this covenant, and that those who espouse it in the spirit of democracy were opposed to home nationalism. Of course, the Senator knew that no issue can be so fascinating to the creator of ideals, or so fitting to popular appeal, as one's own country. We still refrain:

Breathes there a man with soul so dead,
As never to himself hath said.
This is my own, my native land.

Mr. President, I will draw no political party line here in this discussion. Yet, sir, I can not allow my eminent friend, the Senator from Idaho, to leave that discussion where it drew one—one to be designated "internationalism," or world citizenship, against nationalism or home citizenship. Yet if there is to be such, democracy shall not be charged with being guilty of home abandonment. I must remind the Senator that it was not democracy that hurled this country into Asia and in the name of "world duty" and "trustee for civilization" took possession of the Philippine Islands and established an American government there, and thus gave Asia the right to demand reciprocity to come into America with her citizens for that we had gone into Asia with our people. It was not democracy that went into China and put its army at the demand of a foreign nation there for their protection, having our Americans killed by murderous Chinese. Then later assumed jurisdiction over the railroads of China to divide them among American and English financiers under the name of the "open door," more justly designated as the "dollar diplomacy," and by such arousing the hatred of China against the United States and creating the suspicions of Japan against anything American. It was not democracy that plunged the United States into the affairs of Europe at Algeciras in the European convention of 1905 and for the first time in our career as a Nation brought the United States to the hazard of war with Spain, France, and Germany—for the vanity of the United States, establishing the "balances of the Old World," and the right of kings to filch the little land of Morocco. Sir, we, the democracy endured it. We raised no voice against our Government in matters with foreign nations after the acts were done. Like patriots our theory again was that of Decatur, "My country, may you be right; but right or wrong, my country." The democracy, in common with all our land, is now paying the price of these violations in billions of lost money and in the death of thousands of her children.

Let not the able Senator from Idaho fancy he can delude the public mind in drawing that issue against the spirit of democracy. The people remember—and ever will they be reminded "Lest we forget." Still, sir, less justified was the eminent Senator in the effort to conjure up by the name of Roosevelt the issue "nationalism." I invite my learned friend to recall his history. I rejoice in the exquisite apostrophe he paid to the man—the distinguished ex-President. Its language was of beauty which will not be excelled, and in tribute, let none desecrate by denying its deserts. But I will not allow him to summon Roosevelt dead and raise up his valiant spirit in this historic shade as a justification of the doctrine of nationalism, nor to cast him upon a pedestal as the apostle statue that stood for America only, and by that make the issue of homeland only—as creed of Republican Roosevelt as against "world citizenship"—to be charged as the aspiration of a democracy. I dare assert that the returning spirit of Theodore Roosevelt would exclaim, as he would have in life—in the words of the human to the royal artist—"paint me as I am."

I recall to every one sitting around that it was Theodore Roosevelt who demanded in behalf of his country and to the ear of the whole world that our United States, merely because the neutrality of Belgium was violated, and before a citizen of this land was ever assailed or a dollar of property attacked, should send our armies in millions and our navies in squadrons and rush ourselves, unprepared as we were, in the war of Europe, that we might avenge what he denounced as the brutalizing of Belgium.

Nationalism—the issue for Roosevelt? Let it not be forgotten that the character of his life, as extending itself into the world affairs, and ever summoning the United States as avenging angel in behalf of Christianity and justice for mankind everywhere, was voiced by his historian in the exquisite eulogy of Senator LODGE upon the dead patriot when he closed his epitome in behalf of that distinguished scholar, soldier, and statesman—patriot and President—saying—

In all his last days the thoughts which filled his mind were to secure a peace which should render Germany forever harmless and advance the cause of ordered freedom in every land and among every race.

See what it was the ex-President said as his view, his hope, his demand, as to a league of peace of the world. On that great project he spoke and wrote more than once with no uncertain sound. On the 1st of January, 1915, he published a book entitled "America and the World War." He had been thinking closely and carefully over the problems created by the war, and he presented the results of his reflection for the serious consideration of his fellow countrymen. In the chapter significantly headed "An International Posse Comitatus," he says, at page 123:

I earnestly hope that we shall ourselves become one of the joint guarantors of world peace under such a plan as that I in this book outline, and that we shall hold ourselves ready and willing to act as a member of the international comitatus to enforce the peace of righteousness as against any offender, big or small. This would mean a great practical stride toward relief from the burden of excessive military preparation. It would mean that a long step had been taken toward at least minimizing and restricting the area and extent of possible warfare. It would mean that all liberty-loving and enlightened peoples, great and small, would be free from the haunting nightmare of terror which now besets them when they think of the possible conquest of their land.

Again, in the same volume, in his chapter on "Preparedness Against War," while denouncing Mr. Bryan's peace treaties with fierce emphasis and almost "a damnable reiteration," he proceeds to say, at page 202, that—international peace will only come when the nations of the world form some kind of league which provides for an international tribunal to decide on international matters, which decrees that treaties and international agreements are never to be entered into recklessly and foolishly, and when once entered into are to be observed with entire good faith, and which puts the collective force of civilization behind such treaties and agreements and court decisions, and against any wrong-doing or recalcitrant nation.

In the chapter headed "Utopia or Hell?" he concedes that the project of a league of nations may for a time be a Utopian vision, but suggests the hopeful possibility that "after the war has come to an end the European contestants will be sufficiently sobered to be willing to consider some such proposal, and that the United States will abandon the folly of the pacifists and be willing to cooperate in some practical effort for the only kind of peace worth having, the peace of justice and righteousness."

My proposal—

He says—

is that the efficient civilized nations, those that are efficient in war as well as in peace, shall join in a world league for the peace of righteousness. This means that they shall by solemn covenant agree as to their respective rights which shall not be questioned, that they shall agree that all other questions arising between them shall be submitted to a court of arbitration, and that they shall also agree—and here comes the vital and essential point of the whole system—to act with the combined military strength of all of them against any recalcitrant nation, against any nation which transgresses at the expense of any other nation the rights which it is agreed shall not be questioned, or which on arbitrable matters refuses to submit to the decree of the arbitral court.

In his final chapter, summing up the argument, at page 253, he says:

It is because I believe our attitude should be one of sincere good will toward all nations that I so strongly feel that we should endeavor to work for a league of peace among all nations rather than trust to alliances with any particular group. * * * The prime necessity is that all the great nations should agree in good faith to use their combined warlike strength to coerce any nation, whichever one it may be, that declines to abide the decision of some competent international tribunal. Our business is to create the beginnings of international order out of the world of nations as these nations actually exist. We do not have to deal with a world of pacifists, and therefore we must proceed on the assumption that treaties will never acquire sanctity until nations are ready to seal them with their blood.

More than a year after the publication of this volume the ex-President produced another, taking his title from a phrase used by the heroine in George Borrow's "Lavengro," "Fear God and take your own part." At page 410 of this book he reproduces the following passages from his address before the Noble Prize Committee, May 5, 1910:

Something should be done as soon as possible to check the growth of armaments, especially naval armaments, by international agreement. No one power could or should act by itself, for it is eminently undesirable from the standpoint of the peace of righteousness that a power which really does believe in peace should place itself at the mercy of some rival which may at bottom have no such belief, and no intention of acting on it.

Finally, it would be a master stroke if those great powers honestly bent on peace would form a league of peace, not only to keep the peace among themselves, but to prevent, by force if necessary, its being broken by others.

The supreme difficulty in connection with developing the peace work of The Hague arises from the lack of any executive power, of any police power to enforce the decrees of the court. Each nation must keep well prepared to defend itself until the establishment of some form of international police power competent and willing to prevent violence as between nations. As things are now, such power to command peace throughout the world could only be assured by some combination between those great nations which sincerely desire peace and have no thought themselves of committee agressions. * * * The combination might at first be only to secure peace within certain definite limits and certain definite conditions, but the ruler or statesman who should bring about such a combination would have earned his place in history for all time and his title to the gratitude of all mankind.

This volume was published in February, 1916.

Here, sir, as to the creed of the Republican masters—and of the Roosevelt as he spoke, we have the law and the prophets—and as he spake he will be judged.

Mr. President, I have done with this analysis. Feebly have I performed the task assigned me. Yet I have assumed to point out the particular peaks upon which Senators mounted and the promontories upon which they stood from which they proclaimed to the valleys below the desolation and destruction of their land. I have assumed to show that their foundation was not mountain tops of truth, but hills of false echo.

I dare assume that I have demonstrated, if not to the conversion of men about me, then to the satisfaction of public conscience how infinitely wrong the able Senators were in their construction. Wrong in their premises when right in conclusions, and wrong in the conclusions when right in premises. On that false foundation all their baleful philosophy of opposition was built.

Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho demands that the people be given the opportunity to decide. I answer yes, it will be so; the people shall decide. This document will not be approved nor brought here in any form for verdict without the voice of the people being heard upon it and of it. I will have the eminent Senator from Idaho understand that there never can be permitted by me, that through his great force, the impression to go abroad, that the democracy intended this as a secret charter to be forced in a star-chamber proceeding. It will be before the Senate. Before this it will receive the consideration and audience of the people. The people will pass on the merits of this project for peace as they pass on every similar document of its purport heretofore presented in the form of a treaty. This will be through and by their Senators speaking on this floor, the voice of their constituents. But, sir, this undertaking and covenant will have that superior advantage of the voice of the distinguished champion of its birth who will do as he has done in every other measure he has found in his heart to advocate for the welfare of his countrymen. He will go to his people with the proofs of his sincerity, with the truth of his cause, with the result that has ever followed his appeal to his fellow citizens—the approval of his undertaking, as they have ever approved whenever he has gone to them with that which he has demanded in the name of humanity for mankind and justice for country.

Knowing that He cometh as one
To serve the broken—they ever cry:
"Make way for the friend, He cometh
For the cause of truth and the righteousness of men."

Senators, it is now for our country to make her decision. It is to the white paths of peace or the black plains of war. And when my country comes to the final judgment, let her not come blindfolded with the scarf of delusion. Let her behold herself in her now new relation to the world. The to-morrows greet her as the accepted friend to each or as the enemy of all. This, my beloved land, with her brow crowned with the glory of her unparalleled achievement, her body radiant with the blaze of fame's immortal star, is now never again to be the separated land from all the world's conflicts. This America is now an island with the Bering Sea at the north, with maddened Russia frenzied in hatred of us threatening at its icy doors. The Atlantic on the east, whose tides boom the summons to every ancient European grudge or national rivalry to sate itself at first advantage. On the Pacific the mysterious lands of the mystic East brood in silent meditation as to their course in retaliation for the long affront against their people and indignity of years against their nation. At the south the Panama Canal and the Gulf that widens to a sea, echo in their every singing wave the doubt and suspicions of South and Central America against the professed friendships of the United States.

Mr. President, our to-morrows approach heavily upon us with the burdens of uncertainty. Let us not be deceived in the security that we are exempt from the inheritances which from the dawn of time have befallen those who march in rivalry to overcome by superiority their rival nations. For us there is but one of two fates decreed. It is to be victor or victim. We will live in the brotherhood of peace, tranquil in the family fraternity of nations through interchange of benefits and blessings; or we will live the life of one threatened by the powerful, hated by those who fear us, and the object of hoped-for destruction by those who long for the day of power to execute their hidden vengeance. Sir, Japan and China can be one in common grievance on the east, while the new Russia and the Germanic lands may be a union of purpose with a kindred hatred waiting revived strength to avenge it upon us. In Europe abides those commercial rivalries that can leave our former battle field allies indifferent to the results that our avowed enemies may attempt upon us. Our America is now more imperiled in her future than has been her lot since her Republic sprung to life. Only to herself can she look with sure confidence. Only within herself can she find complete security. She must choose to trust herself wholly and abide in her own strength without aid and without friends, or trust herself wholly to abide in the friendships of Christian people and in the protecting love of godly nations.

If, sir, we are to be wholly alone and separate from the earth's companionships, then our country must prepare for armies and navies of a volume that shall make us supreme against any land and every foe. But these shall swell the debt of the Nation to where it will exhaust the rich and beggar the poor, and awaken a discontent to burst forth in internal daily dissensions, provoking in the end civil revolutions. We must dwell on our new changed conditions; we must measure with the fleets of the sea knitting us to every shore of every land; the air woven into a canopy of death or in curtains of life by the shuttle weavings of the aeroplane. We must reckon with the depths of the sea knotted into traps of destruction by the gyrating maneuvers of the submarine, and sight with new vision the engines of destruction encompassing us about from every hidden vantage. From all this we must see that the peace our country seeks of the earth for mankind is not for others only. It is also for ourselves.

Let our country behold itself as the light of truth reveals us—in danger! True, we can overcome it all and be victors through all. We can prepare now to empty every home of its first born; we can smite the tears from every mother's heart and wring with agony the soul of every wife. More, we can consign every boy to the fate of a cripple—and many to the horrors of sightless eyes and a hopeless life. We can empty the treasuries of the cities and make barren the farms. We can leave our country a graveyard for her dead children—stricken by her own hand—and turn our churches of God into the mourning houses where the wails of the desolate will cry unto Heaven to consign the creators of their desolation to the depths of hell. All this we can have, that we may boast of military glory and the vanquishing by world murder of every foe.

Or, sirs, we can salute the regenerated earth in the new spirit with which our children reincarnated it with their sacred bodies, still sanctifying the soil that is their distant grave. We can join in friendship that surrenders no right nor yields one privilege of a just people. We can proclaim that so long as mankind will be true to us we can covenant to be just and fair to it. That we submit every national grievance to the adjustment of a Christian spirit by the balances of right and wrong among honest people. That we will join all who equally join us in casting aside the iron instruments of death which murder men and pauperize lands—and in their place put the pulpits of Christ and the world courts of justice. Then we can declare, by the sacred memory of the dead who fell that their loved ones should live, that war and death shall end and love of man and the life of the world begin—all consecrated anew to justice on earth and God in heaven.

Which shall it be? The holy voice again proclaims to mankind in the morn of the twentieth century as it cried out in the night of the first, "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve." We reply, "For us and our house we serve the Lord." So, sir, when we are gladdened by the sight of the new army bearing banners, streaming with the ensign, "Peace on earth, good will to men," our hearts will be quickened to joy and our lips break in praise that the first evangel to bring the glory of the newborn age and lead the rejoicing processions of the redeemed earth was our United States of America—thank God!

At the conclusion of Mr. LEWIS's speech there was prolonged applause on the floor and in the galleries.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A final word from the Chair. The occupants of the galleries are acting like Bolsheviki. They have been acting in that way for two or three days. The Chair has let you applaud those who point with pride and those who view with alarm. It is over. The rules of the Senate are going to be enforced. Orders are going to be issued by me that the next time there are manifestations of either approval or disapproval to clear the galleries, and I will see whether there is any law in America at least.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, this is no time to attempt any extended discussion, and I invoke the attention of the Senate for just about two minutes.

If the Senator from Illinois is correct in his diagnosis of this document, then the chief thing the world has hoped to obtain from it is not in it. The chief thing the world has been told we would get from this league is the disarmament, or to a large extent the disarmament, of nations. The Senator from Illinois, who assumes to be the spokesman for the administration, tells us there is not a word in this document to limit the size of any army, that that is left to the judgment of the Nation. In other words, it is left exactly where it is now. If that is the case, the chief argument for the league has been withdrawn and the chief reason for its existence does not appear to exist.

There are many things I could call attention to, but let it not be forgotten that is the construction now given.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. HARDWICK. I ask that the reading of the District of Columbia appropriation bill be proceeded with.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt the reading of this bill, but I must return to my office on some other matters; and the chairman of the committee has very kindly consented that I might at this time present, or notify the committee that I intend to present, an amendment to the bill and say a few words.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me a moment, I did not intend to convey that impression; but, of course, I shall be glad to make any arrangement that the Senator wishes. We have a general agreement that amendments other than committee amendments are not to be offered until we complete the consideration of the committee amendments.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Under those circumstances, if the Senator will permit me simply to make an explanation of what I intend to propose——

Mr. HARDWICK. Why, certainly.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will not urge a consideration of the amendment at this time.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator might offer it and let it be pending.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Yes; that is what I shall do.

I think in appropriations that we have made for hospitals throughout the country for the Army and the Navy—very elaborate expenditures involving millions of dollars—we have, in a large measure, lost sight of the needs here at home. There are in this city a number of private hospitals, among which are the Providence Hospital, the Garfield Hospital, and the Emergency Hospital; and only recently the situation in regard to the support of these hospitals by the Government has been brought to my attention in a very tragic way.

A member of my family, only on Sunday, was taken to one of these hospitals, and an operation which was wonderful and magical was performed at that hospital. Had it not been for the accommodation which that hospital afforded there would have been a very sad result. I was somewhat interested in the fact that that hospital was available, and made some inquiry as to what the Government gave toward its support; and I found that each year we made an appropriation of $26,000 for maintenance—I refer to the Emergency Hospital—and that already there is a deficit of $100,000. I investigated further, and I found that the Providence Hospital, an excellent institution, and the Garfield Hospital, another large hospital here, only receive $19,000 each.

This city has increased largely in population during the war. There are estimated to be about 200,000 employees of the Government here. These hospitals take care of the indigent and charitable cases; and here, right in the home of the Government, the seat of the Government, where we live, we are only appropriating a few paltry thousands of dollars for the maintenance of the hospitals, notwithstanding the increase in the population; and yet we are building sanatoriums and hospitals all over the country for the Army.

Surely, Mr. President, we can at least appropriate an additional few thousand dollars this year for the assistance of our city hospitals. I am going to offer an amendment, which I hope will be considered by the chairman of the committee and accepted, increasing the annual appropriation for maintenance of the Providence Hospital from $19,000 to $30,000, an increase of $11,000; increasing the appropriation for the Garfield Hospital from $19,000 to $30,000, an increase of $11,000; and increasing the appropriation for the Emergency Hospital from $26,000 to $40,000, an increase of $14,000.

I have no exact basis for these increases. I have simply made them even figures; but I do know that in increasing the present appropriations 50 per cent we are only in a small measure making provision for the increased expenses of those hospitals by reason of the increase of salaries, cost of food, and other maintenance.

I offer the amendment and ask that it may be printed and considered by the committee when that item is reached.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator if these hospitals have not also increased their charges for operations and for rooms within the last two or three years?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not know. I paid the bill that I had to-day and it was a very small charge for the conveniences afforded and what was accomplished on last Sunday.

Mr. SMOOT. I asked the question because I have been told that the increases in the charges of the hospitals here have been on the same basis as the increased expense of supplies and labor. I do not know, of course, as to that.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I can not inform the Senator of the comparison; but I do know that on the floor that I visited there are several wards where there are charity patients, and that there are very few pay patients in that hospital, although there are conveniences for private patients; and I am very glad there are, because for the protection of our own families, the citizens here who can afford to pay, they should have those conveniences.

Mr. SMOOT. Perhaps the Senator having the bill in charge can tell whether there has been an increase in the charges of these hospitals.

Mr. HARDWICK. The clerk of the committee informs me that he thinks not.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, I have made some inquiry about that; and I think it is true that the charges for rooms and attendance have increased somewhat, but not in proportion to the increase in the expenses.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me for a minute, the clerk of the committee misunderstood my question; and I think perhaps there have been some increases in the charges of the hospitals. Let me say to the Senator, for his own consideration while his amendment is pending, that if he will examine the provisions of this bill he will find that we gave an increase of a million dollars to the Gallinger Hospital, which is for the poor people of this city.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The Gallinger Hospital is not yet built. I am simply asking for a 50 per cent increase in the appropriations for maintenance of these three very worthy hospitals.

Mr. HARDWICK. We will consider it when we get to the part of the bill which deals with hospitals.

SENATOR FROM MICHIGAN—CORRECTION.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have here a copy of the New York World of February 24, which has an editorial which I think does great injustice to the chairman of one of the Senate committees, the Chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The article is entitled, "No show for Henry Ford." It reads as follows:

Through lack of vigor in pressing the matter upon the attention of the Senate Senator POMERENE, of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, has directly helped to defeat an investigation of the senatorial election last November in Michigan. Prompt action was imperatively demanded for the safeguarding of the ballots, if nothing more, in the Ford-Newberry contest.

It is now too late to preserve intact the records upon which a thorough and conclusive investigation must be based. In some counties they have already been destroyed. It was to be foreseen that this would happen. Ample warning was given when the grounds for Henry Ford's contest were first laid before the Senate.

To the specious plea that the present Senate had no right to conduct an investigation into the election of a Member of the next Senate it should have been sufficient to insist that at least the integrity of the ballots should be safeguarded for later inspection. This has not been done, and the blame is with Mr. POMERENE and his committee.

Mr. President, I am an humble member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and I wish to say that I am sorry to see that a paper as able and accurate as the New York World really is would fall into such a grievous error.

The chairman of the committee, Mr. POMERENE—and I am an humble member, as I said, of that committee—proceeded in the matter of the Ford-Newberry contest with all the celerity that the chairman of a committee could, and it is a great injustice to him and to the committee to say that injustice is about to be done because the committee failed to proceed.

I wish to say here that the chairman of the committee showed as much energy in this matter as any chairman has shown in any matter since I have been a member. In fact, Mr. President, the chairman continually assembled the committee, and when a majority did not appear he would telephone and send notes and messages to the Members of the Senate who are members of the committee urging them to come before the committee and hold a meeting.

If any Member of the Senate or any chairman has ever shown diligence on any matter, it has been the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections with respect to the Ford-Newberry contest. I trust this will be sufficient, because I do think an injustice has been done to the chairman of the committee. He moved with all the celerity, promptitude, and dispatch that one man could possibly display.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I am through. I will yield the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say that there is also a correction which ought to be made in the statement found in the World, wherein it says that the ballots have not been preserved. There is no one in the Senate who does not understand that the ballots are preserved. They are now in the charge of the court. I think a great metropolitan paper ought to know that fact which has been stated here in the Senate.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I wish to announce that a week from to-day, if I can obtain the floor, I shall submit some observations on the constitution of the league of nations.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13277) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was continued.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Sewers," on page 25, line 7, after the word "sewers," to insert "including the purchase of one motor field wagon at not to exceed $2,000, and the maintenance of motor vehicles," so as to make the clause read:

For suburban sewers, including the purchase of one motor field wagon at not to exceed $2,000, and the maintenance of motor vehicles, $100,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice under the head of "Sewers" there is a provision for the purchase of a motor truck not to exceed $2,000. Here the Senate committee inserted for the purchase of one motor field wagon, not to exceed $2,000, and the maintenance of motor vehicles, and the amount appropriated is not changed. I ask the Senator from Georgia if that is necessary. It was considered by the House committee; after an estimate had been made for this particular item the House decided that it was not necessary.

Mr. HARDWICK. The District Commissioners insisted that it was necessary. I think I can find the testimony. I think possibly they insisted on $3,000, and we cut the amount a little.

Mr. CURTIS. They estimated $3,000 and said that that amount was necessary; that it would save a great deal of time, and they would substitute this motor wagon for horses and wagons.

Mr. HARDWICK. They claimed that it would be right economy and asked to have it inserted, and we thought it better to put it in.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator from Kansas say that for the suburban sewers there has not been an automobile in the past?

Mr. CURTIS. The testimony was that they are using horses and wagons now on most of the work.

Mr. SMOOT. If they are, I think it is more than likely that they ought to change, because that is a very expensive way of carrying both men and material to the suburban sewers of the District. If that is the case I think the House made a mistake in not putting it in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCKELLAR in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Streets," on page 27, after line 6, to insert:

For disposal of city refuse during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, in addition to any amounts now available, $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available: Provided, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to investigate conditions affecting the existing contract for the collection and disposal of ashes in the District of Columbia during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, with a view to determining whether any adjustment should be made in the compensation paid, or to be paid, thereunder and to adjust the same if the facts disclose the necessity for such adjustment: Provided further, That additional compensation, if any, paid as authorized herein shall not exceed the sum of $22,000 for the year. And the said commissioners are further authorized, if in their opinion such action shall be to the best interests of the District of Columbia, to hereafter conduct any or all of the operations involved in the collection and disposal of city refuse of every kind as municipal functions, and for that purpose to purchase or lease the necessary plants, buildings, and land, to purchase or hire horses and horse-drawn vehicles, passenger-carrying and other motor-propelled vehicles, equipment, and machinery, and to employ expert and other personal services, and labor, and to pay traveling, maintenance, incidental, and contingent expenses: Provided, That products arising from such operations conducted as authorized herein may be sold and the proceeds arising therefrom shall be repaid to the then current appropriation for the collection and disposal of city refuse: Provided further, That any or all operations herein authorized to be conducted as municipal functions may be put into effect as such upon the expiration of any of the existing contracts for the collection and disposal of city refuse or upon the failure of any of the present contractors to properly perform the work covered by their contracts: Provided further, That it shall be unlawful for any employee of the District of Columbia engaged in the removal of garbage, ashes, miscellaneous refuse, dead animals, or night soil, or for any employee of a contractor doing such work for the District of Columbia, to accept any gift, except from his employer, in money or any other thing of value for any service performed in connection with the removal of city refuse as hereinbefore described; and it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, or corporation, except such employer, to pay or offer to pay, any money or to make any gift to any such employee for such service; that any person violating the provisions of this paragraph shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction, be fined in a sum of not less than $5 nor more than $40 for each such offense.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to say to the Senator having the bill in charge that when it gets into conference I trust that he and the other conferees on the part of the Senate will insist upon this appropriation remaining in the bill. It is a perfect disgrace to the District of Columbia the way the refuse and the ashes have been handled under the contract system. It got so bad here in the District that ashes would not be removed and refuse would not be called for unless a person telephoned, and in many cases it was distinctly intimated that hereafter if they were to be removed at all the men who called were to have some kind of remuneration for doing it, or, in other words, it has been intimated unless they were well paid by tips the ashes and refuse would remain in the back yards of the houses in the District until the owners or occupants of those houses changed their minds as to the past policy.

If there is anything that needs remedying it is the handling of ashes and the city refuse in the District of Columbia. I trust that the Senator having the bill in charge and the conferees on the part of the Senate will insist that this provision shall remain in the bill, and if the House conferees do not agree to it let us have it brought back to the Senate.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will say to the Senator that the subcommittee which investigated this question and the District Commissioners are in thorough accord with the view expressed by the Senator from Utah, that this is an absolutely necessary reform in District affairs. While, of course, the Senate conferees must go in free, I think I can assure the Senator, as far as my personal attitude is concerned, that I shall be inclined to insist upon the amendment very strongly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I wish to make a point of order to this provision. It proposes general legislation on an appropriation bill. I have discussed the matter with the chairman of the subcommittee, and I understood that he considered the point good.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there a general law on the subject of the aqueduct?

Mr. RANSDELL. There is. I have it before me.

Mr. HARDWICK. There is a general statute of the United States fixing the control of the aqueduct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HARDWICK. The point of order is good.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator allow that amendment to be passed over for a moment, until I can see just the connection it has with the section?

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over temporarily.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 99, after line 8, to insert:

And the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall submit annually to Congress, through the Secretary of the Treasury, estimates of appropriations necessary for the maintenance of this fund.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I ask that we return now to the committee amendment that we passed over just a moment ago.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I asked that the committee amendment, on page 97, go over. After reading the section itself, I think the amendment is a proper one. On reading the amendment alone, without the section, it seemed to me that it had just the reverse effect of what was intended; but I find, on reading the section, that it is all right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 36, line 14, it is proposed to strike out "$1,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$1,200."

Mr. PENROSE. That is for teachers' salaries. I think it ought to be explained.

The SECRETARY. Also, in line 15, strike out "$950" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,150"; in line 17, strike out "$800" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,000"; in line 18, strike out "$750" and insert in lieu thereof "$950."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator modify that amendment by changing the "$950" to "$1,000," in line 8 of the amendment, and the same in line 10, and in line 12, so as to make those salaries $1,000 in classes 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5. It simply changes the $950, that has just been read by the Secretary, to $1,000.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas has talked to me about amending the amendment in that way. I entirely concur with his views about the matter and will accept that alteration of the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On line 18, where it reads "class 3, 543 at $750 each," it is now proposed to make it "$1,000"; and, on line 19, strike out "$750" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,000"; and, on line 20, "class 1, 90 at $750 each," strike out "$750" and insert "$1,000."

Mr. JONES of Washington. And on line 17, too.

The SECRETARY. On line 17, the Senator from Pennsylvania moved to strike out "$800" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,000."

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is all right, then—and in line 15.

The SECRETARY. On line 15, the Senator from Pennsylvania moved to strike out "$950" and to insert in lieu thereof "$1,150."

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think, myself, that ought to be $1,000, so as to make it the same as the others.

Mr. PENROSE. Yes; I will accept that.

The SECRETARY. On line 15, strike out "$950" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,000."

Mr. PENROSE. And even that is less than the estimates, I understand.

The SECRETARY. Also, on page 37, line 1, strike out "$900" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,100," and, on line 2, change the total in accordance with the amendments.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I do not intend to detain the Senate at this unseasonable hour by speaking in behalf of this meritorious amendment. My attention has been forcibly called to the situation in Pennsylvania, outside of the District of Columbia. Unless some measure of justice is accorded to the school-teachers, we will not have any school-teachers left. As is well known, they are now earning very much less than a number of people in occupations requiring very much less intelligence; and I ask to have inserted in the RECORD the statement of the Grade Teachers' Union as to why teachers' salaries should be raised. I do not ask to have the chart printed, but only the brief.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GRADE TEACHERS' UNION—WHY TEACHERS' SALARIES SHOULD BE RAISED.

1. Because the future of America depends upon efficient education. Efficient education depends not upon the school building, the textbook, nor the equipment, but upon the teacher. Do we realize what the school-teacher means to the country? Are the fruits of victory to slip away because we are niggardly? Dou you expect to get more than you pay for in any other market? The future of America depends upon her education. It was an inspiring message that Commissioner Finley, of the New York Department of Education, brought back from France less than a year ago, "The advice which France out of her physical anguish but unabated aspiration sends to us from her 'scholastic front'":

"Do not let the needs of the hour, however demanding, or its burdens, however heavy, or its perils, however heartbreaking, make you unmindful of the defense of to-morrow, of those disciplines through which an individual may have freedom, through which an efficient democracy is possible, through which the institutions of civilization can be perpetuated and strengthened. Conserve, endure taxation and privation, suffer, and sacrifice to assure those whom you have brought into the world that it shall be not only a safe but also a happy place for them."

2. Because she earns it.

3. Because she should be self-supporting. She can't do this on less than a living wage. This is shown by summary of expense budgets:

60 per cent of teachers in debt (debts incurred through illness).

30 per cent receive financial help.

50 per cent do extra work.

50 per cent support or partially support dependents. Jennie Doe pays $44 board, $30 room rent; total $74 a month, or $888 a year. This does not allow for wash, carfare, doctor's bills, dentist's bills, travel, books and magazines, or college work. How can the present minimum be made to cover these expenses? School-teachers are not living on their salaries. They are obliged to do night work, odd jobs on Saturdays, and work during the summer. A teacher must be an inspiration. Can drudgery plus worry equal inspiration?

Sewers	1,148.16

Teachers [1]	630.64
Washington's minimum for teachers	750.00

[1] Salary of teachers used for comparison is the average annual salary of all teachers, urban and rural, based on data gathered in 1918 by the Bureau of Education.

The minimum-wage commission for industrial workers has found $16 a week ($832 per year) the minimum that a single woman can live on.

4. Because other more remunerative occupations are depleting the teachers' training schools and drawing from the rank and file of trained teachers. Data from the whole country prove this. The Washington Normal School has enrolled one-third of the usual number this year. About 250 new appointments have been made in the schools since October. Ninety per cent of these vacancies occurred because teachers resigned to accept better-paid positions.

5. Because men are not attracted to the profession and men are needed.

6. Because teachers have always been underpaid. Even raising salaries 100 per cent is not paying for value received. Comparing teachers' pay in Washington with teachers' pay in other cities is not fair. They should be compared to other employments. Teachers everywhere are underpaid. Because under normal conditions salaries such as asked for in this amendment should be paid. This is only just. At the present time a bonus should be added to this increased basic to meet the emergency in living conditions.

"Autocracy may pin its faith to the enlightenment of its favored classes, but democracy stands or falls with the intelligence of all the people."

10 librarians in high and normal schools in class 5, at $1,400 each; 38 clerks in class 4, at $1,200 each; in all		59,000.00
NOTE (by board of education).—An increase of $31,040. It is recommended to place the 10 librarians in class 5, at $1,400 each. This recommendation is made because these employees perform services of the greatest value to the school system, and act practically in the capacity of teachers in the directing of the study of pupils in the high and normal schools. 10 additional clerks at $1,200 are requested for assignment to the offices of the supervising principals and to assist in the general offices. The increased demand for clerical employees, owing to the extension of the Federal departments, makes it necessary for the board of education to be able to offer better salaries than those now at its command, in order to secure competent clerical assistance. The fact that the board of education transacts a great volume of business with a small clerical force makes it important that the individuals employed shall be efficient.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I am not opposed to liberal pay for any public servant, least of all for the school-teachers; but in behalf of the committee I must submit that we have already made as liberal increases as we felt the condition of the Treasury justified.

Mr. PENROSE. Why does the Senator stop at the school-teachers?

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will bear with me a moment, I will state that I think the salaries of the teachers are at least commensurate with the other salaries in all other departments of the Government. Last year we increased the salaries in the lower grades; in class 3 from $650 to $750; in class 2 from $600 to $750; in class 1 from $550 to $750 each, a total increase for 936 teachers of $124,000. Besides that we gave them $120 a year flat increase. Then we have increased this year the figures still further so that these three lower classes are increased up to $800 from $750.

Mr. CURTIS. No.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am mistaken.

Mr. CURTIS. There has been no increase.

Mr. HARDWICK. But we gave $240 increase last year to each one of these, and that is the same rate of increase we have given Government employees in every bureau and every division. Two hundred and forty dollars is the basis established, and I understand that exactly the same rule is applied to all other departments of the Government. Besides that, these teachers share in the longevity fund with a maximum of $125 a year, which costs the District government in round numbers $500,000 a year.

I concede that the teachers of the District—in fact, the teachers of the United States—are not paid in comparison with other professions and vocations what they ought to be paid, but the District teachers, I believe, are better paid than the school-teachers of any other city of its size in the country. We feel like we have provided for them as liberally as the conditions of our finances would permit.

Personally I am in sympathy with the Senator from Pennsylvania or any other Senator who thinks that these teachers ought to have more liberal pay; but we also must remember there is some obligation we owe to the Treasury, and it will not do to dispose of those obligations by saying we have been liberal even to the point of lavishment in other matters, and therefore we ought to be a little more liberal in this matter.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes, sir.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to ask him whether the teachers are not underpaid to an extent more than any other class of Government employees?

Mr. HARDWICK. I will answer the Senator in two ways. I think all over this country very few teachers, taken as a rule, get as much as bricklayers and carpenters throughout the United States. I am not speaking of the pay in the District of Columbia. I believe that if the Senator will compare what the teachers receive in the District of Columbia with what they receive in Philadelphia, for instance, or Pittsburgh, he will find that they are liberally paid.

Mr. PENROSE. I stated when I rose that my attention was originally called to this matter by the efforts being made in Pennsylvania to raise the salaries of school-teachers, throwing an additional burden on the State of many millions of dollars.

Mr. HARDWICK. I think there is merit in the Senator's proposition.

Mr. CURTIS. May I call the Senator's attention to the fact that there is a shortage of over 100,000 school-teachers in the United States because of the low salaries paid?

Mr. HARDWICK. And a less shortage in the District than almost anywhere else.

Mr. CURTIS. They are a good many short in the District.

Mr. HARDWICK. No; I think the District schools are pretty well supplied.

Mr. CURTIS. The superintendent of schools stated to the committee that a great many teachers have left the service here during the last year and others would have left but for the fact that they had families here that they were helping to support. Some of the teachers who are getting $750 with $240 added and with $125 for longevity have been teaching for 20 years or more.

Mr. HARDWICK. Let me ask the Senator from Pennsylvania or the Senator from Kansas, either one, if they have estimated how much additional expense it would entail on the Government?

Mr. PENROSE. I do not care how much it costs.

Mr. HARDWICK. We ought at least to know that.

Mr. PENROSE. In an act of justice like this the cost is a minor matter. I should like to read, if the Senator will permit me, a statement from the Commissioner of Education, Mr. Claxton. He says:

> Teachers are now paid less for their work than any other class of workers, and the increase in their pay in the last few years has in no wise been in keeping with the increase in pay of other workers or with the increase in the cost of living. While the cost of living has increased approximately 80 per cent, the salaries of teachers have increased only about 12 per cent.
>
> Many of the better teachers are leaving the schools, and their places are taken by men and women of less native ability, less education and culture, and less training and experience.
> Many of the places are not filled at all. As an inevitable result, the character of the schools is being lowered just at a time when it ought to be raised to a much higher standard. The only remedy is larger pay for teachers.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am in thorough sympathy with the proposition, but I am trying to draw a distinction. While that is true about the country as a whole it is less true about teachers of the District than almost anywhere else. The teachers of the District of Columbia are getting exactly the same increase that we are giving other employees of the Government.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator asked me how much this would cost. I discover that I have a memorandum here. It would cost less than $400,000. We squander that amount on some ridiculous project in a few seconds here almost any morning.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am afraid the Senator is all too correct about that, but that is hardly a justification for other expenditures.

Mr. PENROSE. It is a redeeming feature.

Mr. POMERENE. I hope the Senator having charge of the bill will withdraw his objection to the amendment. The compensation of those who are doing common labor on the streets and elsewhere in various sections of the country is higher for what they do than the pay of the teachers in our public schools. There is not anyone who comes nearer to the child than the teacher save perhaps the mother, and it often happens that the teachers are the only mothers some of the children have, and I think——

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me just a moment, so that the Senator may not misunderstand this matter, of course the Senator knows we have already increased these salaries just as much as any other employees.

Mr. POMERENE. I understood that, and I am not finding any fault with the committee on account of that.

Mr. HARDWICK. We have not felt authorized to go beyond that.

Mr. POMERENE. I think you are authorized to go beyond that. I have such a very high regard for the work the teachers are doing and the influence they have on the children of the several communities, I think we ought to make these salaries so large as to make it attractive to the best young women and young men we have in the country. I am in entire accord with the amendment which the Senator from Pennsylvania has proposed and I hope it will be accepted.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to make a suggestion.

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. As a member of the committee and as a member of the subcommittee that had charge of this bill, in view of what has been said in reference to the action of the committee heretofore I do not think it is out of place for me to say that the subcommittee was divided three to two in reference to a proposition along this line, the two being for the raise and three being against it. I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be agreed to. I think the teachers ought to have more. It is true we may be raising the pay of these teachers a little more than we have raised others, but the trouble is their compensation has been much lower than that of other employees in the District of Columbia, and this is bringing them more upon a parity with the other employees, though it will not bring them to a parity with other employees.

I hope that the amendment will be accepted.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator from Georgia permit me on that point?

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. These boys, who are so useful to us in our labors, under the present legislative appropriation bill, if the Senate is in continuous session, will receive $1,140 a year, more than many of these deserving teachers. All of us have had our attention called to cases where pupils out of school during the war began to earn much larger salaries than the teachers were receiving who taught them. Yet it seems to me to be a most commendable feature of the situation that the most of these men and women have stuck to their post notwithstanding the temptation of larger salaries in the work of the War Department and other departments. They have continued in their profession of teaching and were not induced by larger salaries to abandon their post of duty.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There is very little hope held out to teachers in the way of advancement here. There was one teacher who appeared before the committee and made one of the most intelligent statements which was presented to the committee. She has been in the service for 18 years, and she gets $1,000 and can not get any more as long as she stays in that class of work.

I think the provision with reference to school-teachers ought to be changed, and while it is too much to hope, the District of Columbia really ought to be a model and furnish an incentive to the other sections of the country by paying this class of employees what their services are reasonably worth. In my judgment there is no class of employment that deserves better compensation than the school-teachers of the country.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I suggest to the Senator that those who train the mind and character of the youth of the country surely ought to get somewhere near approaching the salary paid to the dog catcher in the District of Columbia?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not want to take any further time.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not feel like accepting the amendment in behalf of the committee, especially as my associates who voted with me are not present. In their absence I do not feel authorized to accept it. In justification of the action of the committee I want to say that this is exactly the same increase in the District of Columbia that we gave every other employee of the Government, and while teachers as a rule in this country are very much underpaid, personally I believe as a rule in the District of Columbia they are much better paid than they are in most other places.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Senator will permit me, from the hearings before the Senate subcommittee——

Mr. HARDWICK. What year?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. This year, page 127, I find a list of salaries filed.

Mr. HARDWICK. Filed by the superintendent?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Filed by the superintendent, Mr. Thurston. I find that the elementary minimum salary in Washington is $750. That takes no account, of course, of——

Mr. HARDWICK. No; not of the longevity pay or of the $240 bonus.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. There is longevity pay in many of the other cities.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not know.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. But it takes no account of the $120 bonus.

Mr. HARDWICK. Not the $240 carried in this bill, which is $240 above the basic salary referred to by the Senator.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Nor does it take into account all the probable increases that have been made due to the same conditions in the other cities with which comparisons were instituted. I merely wanted to call attention——

Mr. HARDWICK. I am familiar with the statement.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wanted to call the attention of other Senators to it if the Senate will give me the time to do it.

Mr. HARDWICK. I have no objection.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The elementary minimum salary in Washington is $750; in Cleveland, Ohio, $920; in Jersey City, N. J., $900; in Berkeley, Cal., $900; Butte, Mont., $1,000. I had occasion just a day or two ago to note the salaries paid in 1916 to the men who swept the streets in New York City. Their salaries were raised that year to $880, that being more than the minimum salary which we pay to the teachers here. I hope the Senator will accept the amendment.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am not going to argue it any further.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I wish to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Is the $240 provided for as a bonus to be added to the salaries as they appear here?

Mr. HARDWICK. The $240 is to be added to the figures here, which would make the salaries here much more liberal than they appear on a casual investigation.

Mr. PENROSE. Will not the Senator accept the amendment and let it go to conference?

Mr. HARDWICK. All right; I will do that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I offer the following amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 21, after line 15, insert:

Damages and payment for ground on account of condemnation proceedings: To pay Thomas W. and Alice M. Keller for ground taken and damages on account of condemnation proceedings in square No. 2838 in the city of Washington, $3,820.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senate has passed on this item a good many times, always favorably, and therefore I am authorized to accept it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I offer the following amendment.

The SECRETARY. After line 2, page 76, the item reads:

For emergency, care, and treatment of and free dispensary service to indigent patients under a contract or agreement to be made with Eastern Dispensary and Casualty Hospital by the Board of Charities, $25,000.

The Senator from New Jersey moves to strike out "$25,000" and insert "$40,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I offer a further amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 75, beginning in line 18, the clause reads:

For care and treatment of indigent patients, under a contract to be made with Providence Hospital by the Board of Charities, $19,000.

In line 20 the Senator from New Jersey moves to strike out "$19,000" and insert "$30,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I also offer the following amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 75, line 23, strike out "$19,000" and insert "$30,000," so as to read:

For care and treatment of indigent patients under a contract to be made with Garfield Memorial Hospital by the Board of Charities, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PENROSE. I have an amendment to offer. I offer the following amendment relating to the two-platoon system in the fire department.

The SECRETARY. On page 55, after line 17, insert:

Provided, That from and after the passage of this act the officers and members of the fire department of the District of Columbia shall be divided into two bodies, or platoons, by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, which shall be designated as a day force and a night force. The said day force and night force shall alternate on tours of duty once or more every two weeks.

That one force shall be at liberty at all times except as otherwise provided in section 4 of this act.

That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are directed to appoint a sufficient number of men and officers in addition to the existing force to carry out the objects of this act.

That in case of serious conflagration or other great emergency to protect public safety, the chief engineer or other officers having charge of such fire-fighting force shall have full authority to summon and keep on duty any or all members of such fire-fighting force while such condition continues.

That, except as herein provided, the provisions of this act shall not act as a repeal of any act or acts, or part or parts of any act or acts, and shall not annul, modify, or affect any city ordinance, or part or parts thereof, relating to the salaries, annual leave, or vacation, sick or disability leave of absence of the officers and members of the fire-fighting force of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HARDWICK. I make a point of order against the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. STERLING. On page 3, line 1, I move to strike out the figures "$1,200" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,800," so as to read:

Storekeeper, $1,800.

Mr. HARDWICK. I make the point of order against the amendment. It is not estimated for.

Mr. STERLING. I think the Senator from Georgia is mistaken in that respect. It is estimated for. The estimate is not as high as the amendment, but still the estimate is higher than the amount provided in the bill.

Mr. HARDWICK. I make a point of order on the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is the estimate?

Mr. HARDWICK. The estimate is $1,500 and the amendment $1,800.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. STERLING. I wish to offer another amendment. In line 1, page 3, after the word "storekeeper," I move to strike out "$1,200" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,500."

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 101, after line 11, it is proposed to insert:

That for the purpose of examining into the question of the adoption of a zone system for the construction of buildings in the District of Columbia a commission, to be composed of three citizens of the District of Columbia to be selected by the President of the United States, the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds of the District of Columbia, and the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia be, and is hereby, authorized and constituted; and there is hereby appropriated, payable one-half from the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 for the purpose of carrying out the said examination and for the employment of all necessary personal services in connection therewith, which said sum is to be disbursed, on vouchers approved by the commission, by the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds, who shall be the secretary and act as the executive of said commission; and said commission shall report the result of its work, together with its recommendations, to Congress at its next session at as early a date as possible.

That a commission advisory, to be composed of three Members of the Senate to be selected by the President of the Senate and three Members of the House of Representatives to be selected by the Speaker of the House, is hereby authorized and constituted to counsel and advise the commission constituted by section 1 hereof, at the request of said commission.

Mr. HARDWICK. I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. CALDER. I hope——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I think, perhaps, the acting chairman of the Committee on Appropriations labored under a misapprehension as to the character of my amendment in regard to the platoon system. I understand that that system is in force now, and it is simply desired that the matter shall be regulated by law. The amendment does not propose to increase the appropriation bill one penny. I was going to appeal to the Senator's better instincts at this late hour of the evening to allow the matter to go to conference.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let me suggest to the Senator in charge of the bill that my recollection is that we had a law passed only a year or two ago providing for this system, but leaving it to the discretion of the District Commissioners.

Mr. HARDWICK. But this amendment will change the law, and is, therefore, subject to the point of order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know that; but we have appropriated every dollar of the money that will be required for this purpose. The only difference, as I understand, between this amendment and the law is that the amendment makes it obligatory upon the Commissioners of the District to carry out the double platoon system, while the present law leaves it discretionary, and yet we appropriate the money which would enable it to be carried out.

Mr. PENROSE. They have enough men for this purpose, and it is the system in every first-class fire department in the country.

Mr. HARDWICK. I have no doubt this is a good proposition and has all the merits for which the Senator from Pennsylvania contends, and will be certain and easy of adoption; I know very little about the amendment, and, personally, I should like to oblige the Senator; but, acting on behalf of the committee, I must insist upon the point of order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I desire to correct the statement I made a moment ago. I have since been informed that the matter to which I referred has not actually been enacted into law. The House of Representatives, however, has passed a provision which made it mandatory on the commissioners to provide for the double-platoon system, while the Senate has provided that it be made discretionary. The matter has now been in conference for several months. It has not yet, however, become a law. I was mistaken in reference to that.

Mr. President, I think it is due that I should say to the conferees with reference to the school-teachers' amendment, which was adopted, in view of my support of that amendment—and I know other Senators feel the same way, and they are very earnest about the matter—that I hope the conferees will strenuously insist upon the amendment.

Mr. HARDWICK. The conferees will do their very best about each one of these matters.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The matter will be considered when it comes in from the conference.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HARDWICK. I ask unanimous consent that the Secretary have authority to correct the totals in the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARDWICK. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. HARDWICK, Mr. SMITH of Arizona, and Mr. CURTIS conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House further insists upon its amendments to the bill (S. 2812) to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, and sodium on the public domain, agrees to the further conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FERRIS, Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, Mr. RAKER, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, and Mr. SINNOTT managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I desire to make a very short statement with reference to the conference report. The conferees have reported the Post Office bill back to the Senate substantially as it was passed by the Senate, with one exception: The Senate inserted in the bill during its pendency in the Senate a provision that the Postmaster General might in his discretion contract for certain tube service in the city of New York, and added a provision that he should not remove the machinery of the tube company, that is, the heavy machinery, such as boilers, engines, and compressors that were in the basement of the building. I thought this a very reasonable provision, and the Senate conferees insisted upon it as long as it appeared that there was a possibility of getting an agreement.

I am sorry that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] is not present. He has no objection whatever to the report, but he did desire to make a brief statement to the Senate with reference to the provision to which I have alluded. As I have already stated, the bill otherwise is substantially as it passed the Senate without any changes, except in very minor matters, such as correcting the phraseology of the bill. That is all I care to say now about the report and I hope the Senate will adopt it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama if he will not allow this report to go over as the unfinished business? I will assure the Senator that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] has no desire to speak at length upon the report; but, as the Senator from Alabama has stated—and I know it to be a fact—the Senator from Massachusetts desires to make a statement upon this report touching the pneumatic-tube question.

Mr. LODGE. My colleague has just telephoned me that he is coming right over from his office.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am very glad to hear the Senator from Massachusetts will be here.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Alabama will remember that I promised him I would try to get in touch with the Senator from Massachusetts after he left the Chamber.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am sorry that the Senator from Massachusetts is not present, but I understand he will be here in a moment.

PATENTS AND PATENT RIGHTS.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, while the Senator from Alabama is waiting, may I ask him for a moment's time in order that I may ask unanimous consent to report a bill and have it considered?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection.

Mr. KIRBY. From the Committee on Patents I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 5265) authorizing the Federal Trade Commission to accept and administer for the benefit of the public and the encouragement of industry, inventions, patents, and patent rights, and for other purposes. I should like to have the bill considered at this time. I do not think there will be any opposition to it.

This is the purpose of the bill: Certain persons in the different departments of the Government have made inventions or have perfected inventions while they were at work for the Government. Nobody is authorized to administer such patents or really to take out the patents. Under this bill, as proposed, the Federal Trade Commission can take out such patents, which are voluntarily transferred by the inventor—there is no compulsion about it—to the Federal Trade Commission, and can administer them, if it seems to be for the public good, and give the inventor whatever seems to be right or such amount as may be agreed upon with him for his invention. It is entirely a voluntary arrangement.

The Federal Trade Commission is mentioned because under the administration of the patent law as affecting the rights of aliens it has developed that a great many things have been administered to advantage by the Federal Trade Commission. They have an organization in that commission under which they can handle this matter satisfactorily. The Commissioner of Patents thinks it is all right; the Bureau of Standards thinks it is the proper thing to do; the Secretary of the Interior has recommended the bill; and the Committee on Patents have recommended it. I therefore ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. The bill applies, as I understand the Senator, to patents and inventions made during the war for war purposes?

Mr. KIRBY. Yes; by persons in the departments. It will also apply to other patents. The bill is not limited to patents growing out of the war, although that is the chief purpose of it.

Mr. LODGE. Does it apply to patents of all kinds?

Mr. KIRBY. It could apply to outside patents.

Mr. SMOOT. I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. I suggest that the bill be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection having been made, there is no use in having the bill read. The bill will go to the calendar.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I wish to suggest to the Senator from Alabama that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] made known his desire that if the conference report came up he wanted to have a little time to make a statement in regard to it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understand he is coming right over.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Very well. I was absent for a few moments and was not aware of that fact.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think perhaps it is well for me to state that the Post Office appropriation bill as it came over from the House contained provisions making certain advances in salaries and reclassifications permanent. The conferees struck out the permanent feature of that provision and made the advances temporary. That is about the only change that has been made in the bill in addition to those to which I have already called attention.

Mr. WEEKS entered the Chamber.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I have an appropriation bill ready for consideration, and I ask the Senator if he will not allow me to make that the unfinished business, and then when the Senator from Massachusetts returns to the Chamber I will move to lay it aside in order that the Senator from Alabama may take up the conference report on the Post Office appropriation bill?

Mr. WEEKS obtained the floor.

Mr. LODGE. Will my colleague yield to me for a moment before he proceeds?

Mr. WEEKS. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts has been absent from the Chamber——

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from Massachusetts is right behind the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. Yes; he has just come in. I understood that there was a tacit agreement that when the Senate passed the District bill we would adjourn.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not know anything about a tacit agreement.

Mr. PENROSE. I was assured by some gentleman in authority to that effect.

Mr. THOMAS. I am not an authority at all, but——

Mr. PENROSE. Apparently not.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator says "apparently not." I do not know who is in authority, but I do know that I am one who voted in a Democratic caucus—not a conference, but a caucus—to hold night sessions and stay here to make up a quorum, and tacit agreements are not sufficiently binding on me to overcome my sense of obligation to that agreement. We may not be able to get a quorum, but we have only seven days remaining of the session, and I think some of us ought to try to do a little business.

Mr. PENROSE. I am sorry the Senator from Colorado has introduced partisanship at the close of a harmonious session, during which we have been treating these public questions according to the high standards of patriotism.

Mr. THOMAS. I know the Senator has—he always does—but I am incapable, perhaps, of that.

Mr. PENROSE. I am surprised to know that we have to invoke a Democratic caucus to spur on our deliberations, particularly before the arrival of the President in Washington. It seems to me ordinary courtesy would have required that the caucus should have been postponed until conference could be had with him.

There is no quorum here, certainly; a number of Senators on this side of the Chamber were told that we would adjourn; some of them have gone; and now to compel the Senator from Massachusetts—he can speak for himself, but I wish to hear him, and I can not remain—to speak at this late hour is cruelty.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not wish to inflict any cruelty upon either men or animals.

Mr. PENROSE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FLETCHER in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Jones, Wash.	New	Smith, S. C.
Calder	Kendrick	Nugent	Smoot
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Overman	Spencer
Fletcher	King	Owen	Sutherland
France	Kirby	Page	Swanson
Gay	La Follette	Pomerene	Thomas
Hardwick	Lewis	Sheppard	Wadsworth
Henderson	Martin, Va.	Simmons	Weeks

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] are detained by illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 25, 1919, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 24, 1919.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord God, our Heavenly Father, without whom nothing is strong, nothing holy, increase our faith and confidence in Thee, that Thou being our ruler and guide we may fulfill all the duties and obligations of the hour to the best of our knowledge and ability; and Thine be the praise, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, February 22, 1919, and the Journal of the proceedings of Sunday, February 23, 1919, were read and approved.

AMENDING FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to file a conference report on the bill S. 5236, an act amending sections 7, 10, and 11 of the Federal reserve act, and section 5172 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to be printed under the rule.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13366) permitting any person who served in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps in the present war to retain his uniform and personal equipment and to wear the same under certain conditions.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 222. Joint resolution extending until July 1, 1920, the effective date of section 10 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill (H. R. 13306) to authorize the payment of allotments out of the pay of enlisted men in certain cases in which these payments have been discontinued, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. J. Res. 222. Joint resolution extending until July 1, 1920, the effective date of section 10 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

RIVERS AND HARBORS BILL.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the river and harbor bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

H. R. 13462. An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I may ask unanimous consent to consider it this afternoon, if it meets with the approval of the House.

The SPEAKER. But there are two or three other conference reports that have now been printed under the rule,

FIXING TIME FOR HOLDING COURT IN AMARILLO DIVISION, TEX.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 15675) to fix the time for holding court in the Amarillo division of the northern district of Texas.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to consider the bill H. R. 15675.

Mr. JONES. And I also ask, Mr. Speaker, unanimous consent that the bill S. 5627, a similar bill, be considered in lieu of the House bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the Senate bill be considered in lieu of the House bill.

Mr. MANN. Let the Senate bill be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 5627) to fix the time of holding court in the Amarillo division of the northern district of Texas.

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter the terms of the district court of the United States in the Amarillo division of the northern district of Texas shall be held at Amarillo, Tex., on the third Monday in April and the second Monday in September of each year.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the Senate bill being substituted for the House bill?

There was no objection.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The bill H. R. 15675 was laid on the table.

On motion of Mr. JONES, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PAYMENT OF DISCONTINUED ALLOTMENT OF SOLDIERS.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the House bill providing for the payment of allotments to soldiers where allotments are to be continued was unanimously reported by the committee, unanimously passed the House, unanimously reported by the Committee on Military Affairs in the Senate, unanimously passed the Senate, has come over here this morning with one or two immaterial amendments, and I ask unanimous consent that we take it up this morning, unanimously agree to the amendments, and unanimously pass it. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to take the bill H. R. 13306 from the Speaker's table and agree to the Senate amendments. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, what is the meaning of the first amendment?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I thought it was corrected at the time, but the House bill misspelled the word "rescision," and the Senate spells it properly, "rescision."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate amendments were agreed to was laid on the table.

DAM ACROSS SAVANNAH RIVER.

Mr. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13394) to extend the time for the completion of the dam across the Savannah River by authority granted to Twin City Power Co. by an act approved February 29, 1908, as amended by act approved March 1, 1916.

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted for the extension of the time allowed to the Twin City Power Co. to construct its dam across the Savannah River authorized by an act of February 29, 1908, as amended by act approved March 1, 1916, until three years from the date fixed in the amending act for its completion, to wit, February 28, 1922.

Section 1, line 7, after the word "approved," insert the words "June 3, 1912, and."

Section 1, line 8, after the word "sixteen," strike out remainder of said line and also line 9, up to the word "February."

Amend the title to read as follows: "A bill to extend the time for the completion of the dam across the Savannah River by authority granted to Twin City Power Co. by an act approved February 29, 1908, as amended by acts approved June 3, 1912, and March 1, 1916."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The Clerk read the title, as follows:

H. R. 13026. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide hospital and sanatorium facilities for discharged, sick, disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. For the present, Mr. Speaker, I object.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 16104.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 16104.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 16104, with Mr. GARNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 16104, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 16104) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Vocational rehabilitation: For an additional amount for carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1918, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, printing and binding to be done at the Government Printing Office, law books, books of reference, and periodicals, $1,500,000, which shall be in addition to the sum of $2,000,000 appropriated in the said act: Provided, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation in excess of $5,000 per annum, not more than 20 persons shall be employed at rates of compensation in excess of $3,000 each per annum, and not more than 30 persons shall be employed at rates of compensation from $2,500 to $3,000, inclusive, per annum.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves a point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Of course, this is necessarily a great increase in the appropriation. It is in addition to the $2,000,000 appropriation made in June, 1918. But what about this transfer of funds the other day by act passed through the House? Is this in addition to that?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It is in addition to that.

Mr. WALSH. Can the gentleman state how much that will place at the disposal of the board?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I can. If $2,000,000 is appropriated, as contemplated by my amendment, they will have $3,750,000. If it remains as the bill now stands, it will amount to about $3,000,000. They estimate that by July 1 they will spend $1,500,000 of their balance of $1,750,000. I do not believe that they will do it, and they should not do it, and I intend to make a statement in reference to the amendment which I have offered whenever the gentleman has argued the point of order.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts what his point of order is.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts state his point of order?

Mr. WALSH. Well, I do not know that this appropriation here is authorized by the act of June 27, 1918. That act was to provide vocational rehabilitation, and so forth, and carried an appropriation; but, pending the point of order, I want to ask the gentleman if this will not give this board practically $3,750,000 at their disposal to spend during the next fiscal year?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It authorizes this. They had $2,000,000.

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If this is given it will mean they will have a total of $3,750,000. If the amendment which I offered is accepted by the committee, it would mean that for this purpose they would have a total amount of $3,750,000.

Mr. WALSH. But, if the gentleman will recall, we passed a bill here the other day transferring to this board some funds.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I see the purpose of the gentleman's question. We did not add to the total amount available for this purpose. When the act was passed originally it segregated these funds. It provided, for instance, that a certain fund was available for the payment of tuition. When the board started to place boys in the schools of the country it placed them in State institutions, the mechanical colleges, and high schools; and, to the credit of those State institutions, they told the board they regarded those boys as their own boys and would not accept from the Federal Government any tuition. As a result, that fund was unexpended. In their administration expenses they have had a deficit.

They asked the Appropriations Committee to make available for expenditure immediately as a lump sum all of their unexpended funds, and while the committee was considering that estimate the House passed about 10 days or a week ago a Senate bill which gave to them that which they asked of the Appropriations Committee—the right to spend as a lump sum their unexpended funds. So to-day they have available as a lump sum $1,750,000, or that was the figure available at the time the board was before the committee. Then their estimate is that they will spend of that $1,750,000 $1,500,000 up to July 1. I disagree with them and do not think they can expend it unless they continue to expend money as unwisely as they have in the payment of high salaries to the men at the top of that organization. But even taking that into consideration, it is undoubtedly true that they will need a greater part of that. My own estimate is that they will expend $1,250,000 or $1,000,000, which will leave them a surplus to carry on to next year. That surplus, in addition to the fund provided, can care for this work during the next fiscal year. Their estimate is that the peak of their load—which is a phrase the gentleman is familiar with in recent days, "allocation" and "peak of the load" we have been introduced to—the peak of their load will be taken care of about October or November. In view of the expenditures made by this organization for salaries from $2,400 to $10,000, the director receiving a salary of $10,000, one $7,000 salary, one $5,000 salary, 20 salaries at $4,000, 28 salaries at $3,500, 2 at $3,400, 29 at $3,000, 62 at over $3,000, 49 from $2,400 to $3,000, inclusive, making a total of 111 between $2,400 and $10,000——

Mr. WALSH. And a noticeable scarcity of dollar-a-year men?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It makes an inexcusable and indefensible expenditure for salaries at the top of an organization.

Mr. WALSH. Now, is it the intention of this proviso to get those salaries down?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. This committee offers this proviso as the only hope——

Mr. WALSH. The proviso does not apply to the $2,000,000 appropriated. They will again pay these high salaries out of the $2,000,000 already appropriated.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes; out of the $2,000,000 which is carried by the bill introduced by Mr. BANKHEAD. This will only apply to the appropriations carried in this bill for the next fiscal year.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I offer an amendment to strike out the figures "$1,500,000" on line 16 and insert in lieu thereof "$2,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina: Page 38, line 16, strike out "$1,500,000" and insert "$2,000,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment by striking out the figures "$2,000,000" carried by that amendment and inserting "$3,500,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out "$2,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$3,500,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, this is a matter that is of considerable importance, and I do not think it is a subject that can be covered in five minutes, and therefore I ask the generous permission of the House to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I confess when I secured a copy of the pending sundry civil bill I was very much astounded and disappointed to see the enormous reduction that had been recommended by the committee from the estimates made up and submitted to the committee upon the hearings by the director and other officials of this board for the rehabilitation of disabled soldiers.

The committee will recall when this original bill was passed, as explained here a few days ago in the argument as to coalescing of the funds carried in the original act, it was almost impossible to make an intelligent estimate of the items to be expended the first year. Although $2,000,000 was appropriated it was not known definitely what those items were to be spent for. I am sorry the members of the committee have not had an opportunity to examine the hearings held before the Committee on Appropriations on this proposition. They are very full and complete, and although, if you examine these hearings you will find, it seems to me, an antagonistic sentiment in that committee against the board on these appropriations, nevertheless every item of the estimates covered by Dr. Prosser, the director of the board, as found on page 1252, for the necessities of the board for the fiscal year 1919–20 are thoroughly, and, it seems to me, completely explained on the basis of conservative estimates. It will be remembered, gentlemen of the committee, that by the very nature of the case, for the first few months of the operation of this law a large amount of the energies of the board and a large amount of the appropriations necessarily had to be used for the purpose of promoting an organization and getting the benefits of the bill placed into the machinery of operation. The board was deprived of an opportunity of coming in contact with all of the disabled soldiers who have been discharged from the hospitals.

The chairman of the committee, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], stated that it was estimated that practically all of the original appropriation of $2,000,000 would be expended by the 1st of July, and that is undoubtedly true. I do not doubt that, on account of the number of disabled soldiers who are being put into actual training under the provisions of this bill, it will all be expended. So that if the committee's recommendation is adopted, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from South Carolina will only provide $2,000,000 for carrying on the enormously enlarged activities of this great enterprise, which was the amount allowed by Congress for the first year when they did not have any men under training at all.

Now, up to the present time there are over a thousand men in actual training. A little over a month ago the board only had 227 men in actual training, and if you will take the testimony before the committee, it is estimated by them that by the ratio of increase as shown within the last 30 days by the 1st of July of this year the board will have in actual training over 7,000 of these disabled soldiers and sailors.

Now, gentlemen, it seems to me a rather peculiar discrimination against the activities of this great humanitarian enterprise, that the Committee on Appropriations should have in mind the purpose, admittedly, of making an inadequate appropriation, with the idea of the deficiency being taken care of at a time later on. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] very frankly admits to the committee that the amount suggested by the appropriation will not be sufficient to carry on the activities of the board for the fiscal year 1919–20. What will that result in? If the amount of the appropriation suggested by his amendment is agreed to and the activities of the board enlarged, as they will be by this constant flow of unfortunate soldiers who are being discharged from the hospitals and who are displaying an eagerness and anxiety to take advantage of this great act we have passed for their benefit, and suppose as a matter of fact the appropriation should be absolutely exhausted, as it no doubt will be, what will be the position of the Federal board with these soldiers on their hands? Out of this fund must come the maintenance in case of dire and extreme necessity.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. If it is brief.

Mr. WALSH. Is it the gentleman's information that these returning soldiers are eager to take advantage of this?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The statistics show to-day that there are over a thousand of them under actual training by the activities of this board, and from the estimate based upon it there will be over 7,000 by the 1st of July.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. For a brief question.

Mr. FESS. Was there not an application of nearly 1,000 to enter training in one month?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; more than that. If you will look at the figures on page 1228 of the hearings you will find them very illuminating on that proposition. They show what is being done.

Here are some of the figures: Number of new cases in which placement in employment has been made by the board and other agencies, 2,455; number of cases in process of placement in training, 2,331, and other statistics showing the activities of this board.

Now, gentlemen, I appeal to this committee upon the proposition of the absolute necessity of making this appropriation. Why should we discriminate in a bill of this sort? This very bill carries $660,000,000 for building new ships, and yet this committee wants to deprive these wounded soldiers of this little meager opportunity to remake themselves and establish new opportunities for their hopeless lives after they have been discharged from the service.

Neither I nor any other member of the Committee on Education would make this contention if it were not justified by the evidence before the committee, which I recommend to your perusal before you vote on this bill if you have any doubt as to the propriety of the vote you should cast.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Do I understand they are cutting the appropriation for this work?

Mr. BANKHEAD. They are cutting the appropriation under the estimate of the amount required for the coming fiscal year. As shown by the hearings, $4,000,000 will be required to carry on the work for the next fiscal year. The committee originally cut it down to $1,500,000, but now the gentleman proposes to amend, raising it to $2,000,000. That would still leave a deficiency of $2,000,000 under the estimates made by the board for their requirements.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. It seems to me that if ever it was needed it is now when they are coming back.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes. Now is the time when the board should exercise its full activities.

A good deal has been said by the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of the bill about the large salaries paid. If you will look over the hearings it will appear at first glance that some of these salaries are exorbitant, but they were all made under civil-service examinations. The very nature of this work requires men of discrimination and ability and capacity and experience, and in order to fill these places it was necessary for them to give them adequate monetary inducements. These men who have accepted these positions have had to go to new fields at a sacrifice in many instances and make arrangements for the maintenance of their families at home. But the committee have put into this bill a provision limiting the salaries to suit what the committee thinks should be the maximum limit, so that there can be no argument on that proposition.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Is it not a fact that there are in sight at least 10,000 soldiers who come under the provisions of the act?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The estimate is based on the calculations and the experience of the Canadian and British Armies and upon those of our own Army up to this time that there will be at least 15,000, and most probably 20,000, discharged soldiers who will claim the benefits of this act in the next fiscal year.

Mr. WELLING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. WELLING. I understood the gentleman, in discussing the matter last week, to say that almost the entire cost of the rehabilitation of these men was borne by the institutions in the States.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is true, as it relates to their tuition. A very small amount of the appropriation will be used for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I trust, Mr. Chairman, that the committee will adopt the amendment and give the board the amount of their estimate. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I think it was Madame Roland who lamented the crimes that were committed in the name of liberty. It is high time that some one should call attention to the crimes of extravagance being committed under appropriations made by Congress for the benefit of our wounded soldiers.

Congress in its wisdom provided liberally for the rehabilitation of the wounded soldiers, and Congress and all its committees will provide liberally for that work. But I suggest to the gentleman that we had better pause before we are carried away with claims for appropriations which are really based on a desire to rehabilitate the fortunes of every broken-down civilian who is trying to obtain a place at the public pie counter under the pretense of doing something for the soldier.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I do.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does not the gentleman know that all these appointments were made under the provisions of the civil-service law?

Mr. MONDELL. I know that these appointments were made in a way under the civil-service law; in other words, this board prepared the questions, laid down the rules, fixed the inquiries, and, of course, the folks who passed that kind of an examination were in the main people who had been selected by the board. Of course, they went through civil-service forms, but it was a sham. There is no doubt about that.

I am not calling into question the character of the people who were employed under this appropriation, and I am not complaining about any particular employments. I simply want to call the attention of the House to what has been done under the claim and pretense of doing something for the soldier. When this board came before our committee they had 157 soldiers under their charge. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is interested. They had 157 soldiers under their charge, and they had at the same time 344 employees, every one of whom was receiving a goodly salary. One of them was receiving $10,000, 1 was receiving $7,000, 1 was receiving $5,000, 20 were receiving $4,000 a year, 28 were receiving $3,500 a year, over 62 were receiving more than $3,000, and 49 were receiving from $2,500 to $3,400.

This committee has had a good many cases of scandalous misuse of public funds brought to its attention, but never a case as indefensible as this.

This board was organized to do a good work, and went forth apparently with the principal purpose to give employment at high salaries to everyone they could find who would take employment.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. TOWNER. The committee has taken care of the question of the amount of salaries in the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. The committee has. The salary list was so indefensible that the committee felt it was necessary to limit it, but I am calling attention to the fact that the $4,000,000 appropriation which was asked—and I would like to have the attention of the gentleman who offered the amendment—the $4,000,000 estimate includes $2,745,000 for salaries and incidental administrative expenses. Now, if the gentleman wants to make provision for the soldiers by providing that kind of a pay roll, well and good.

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman, I think, is mistaken. The item he refers to is for lodging, subsistence, and travel of disabled men.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is not at all mistaken, and if the gentleman from Iowa will take the pains to add the various figures of administration and salaries contained in the list that has been handed him, as it has been handed other Members, he will find I am right.

Mr. TOWNER. I have it.

Mr. MONDELL. He will find that of the total of $4,000,000 asked and $2,000,000 heretofore granted, $2,745,000 is asked for the rehabilitation of the broken fortunes of the pie-counter hunters.

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am not mistaken; that is the sum I have named—for salaries and expenses.

Mr. TOWNER. If the gentleman will pardon me, I do not want to dispute the proposition. I want to call the gentleman's attention to how and why he is mistaken.

Mr. MONDELL. But I am not mistaken.

Mr. TOWNER. The item that the gentleman refers to in regard to salaries and traveling expenses, instructors and professors——

Mr. MONDELL. Unless I can have more time I can not have the gentleman using my time.

Mr. TOWNER. I see that the gentleman does not desire to be instructed, and therefore I desist.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman endeavor to get me more time?

Mr. TOWNER. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. If so I will analyze the figures, and I call his attention to the page of the paper which he has. Let me call his attention to item 2: "Probable expenditures for salaries and traveling expenses of employees, $1,195,000." That is up to July. "Additional appropriation needed for that purpose, $650,000." Then if the gentleman will go down to the next to the last item, item 8, "Miscellaneous expenditures—administration," he will find $550,000 as the item up to the 1st of July, and $350,000 as the anticipated expendture after that time, all of which makes the sum of $2,745,000, without including certain general administration expenses in item 7 under the head of "Miscellaneous," which amounts to $900,000 more, or $3,645,000 in all, for salaries and traveling and other expenses of employees, leaving for purposes which have more or less to do with the rehabilitation of soldiers——

Now, we want to do everything we can for our soldiers, and we are going to do it. We are going to take care of them. We are going to provide for them as soldiers have never been provided for in the history of the world. We want to do everything on earth for them except to rob them of their self-respect; and one of the activities of this bureau, if carried out as they suggest they propose to carry it out, is to hunt out, locate, find, visit every soldier who received a scratch at any time during the war, and try to persuade and cajole him to come onto the pay roll of this bureau. That is a part of their plan. If you will read carefully the statement they have handed to Members you will see that it conflicts with itself in almost every line and paragraph. It is not possible that there will be the number of men or half the number of men they suggest requiring their services; and the amount given by the committee, in addition to the amount which will be available the 1st of July, is more than they can possibly use, unless they spend it for salaries at the very high rates at which they have fixed them. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], out of abundance of liberality, has suggested an increase of $500,000. That, in my opinion, is not absolutely needed, but out of abundance of caution I shall be glad to have the House adopt it. If you accept the high estimate of the bureau, by so doing the House puts the stamp of its approval upon the indefensible conduct of the board in hiring a great many more people than they needed, at very high salaries, and on the plans they are proposing, of hunting out soldiers who received minor injuries and who do not need or desire the services of the board.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, it is not necessary for me to undertake to speak of the necessity for this appropriation. Congress having put upon the statute books the right of these disabled men to be taken care of, it is now up to Congress to see that they are taken care of.

There have been extravagant statements made in the heat of debate that I think no one here subscribes to; for instance, the reference to "pie counters," and the statement that these men are going around the country finding every soldier with a scratch or a blemish on his body. In other words, there is laid against the Department of Education of this great country the venal charge that it is not only incompetent, but that it is absolutely disobeying the law. If that is so, a resolution is in order to investigate that body and to impeach its officers, to change its administration, and to go to the root of it and correct it. Flights of oratory will not do that.

But let us regard this situation as it is presented to us in a cold, conservative way. The War Department report that there are 200,000 men disabled and diseased—100,000 disabled and 100,000 diseased. It further says that the Vocational Education Board reports that in the hospitals in France there have been recorded already applications of 11,000 disabled soldiers asking for the opportunities of this greatest humanitarian legislation.

There are 40,000 disabled soldiers in the United States hospitals, and it is regarded that the great majority of them will want the advantage of this legislation. Need I ask, need I dilate, when you see a youth of 20 or thereabouts with one leg off, some with two, some with both arms, some with an eye out, some with a shell-shock suffering, which is worse than all, to say that we should give them the advantage that is recommended by whom? By me? No.

Gentlemen, I am nothing but a kindergarten Member of this House, youthful in my experience and my membership, but I have laid down a rule that when a thing of a technical character comes before this great body for consideration, I have had the general experience of a man in middle life and I am mature enough to know that when a technical subject, when a special subject, is offered for my consideration I will take the advice of those men who have given their lives in training and education to it, and I will decide, with the discretion that is in me, in favor of the contentions they raise.

And so we find here this situation: Twenty-odd thousand men who are now loose throughout the country, who have been dismissed by the War Department and left to go to their homes, their hamlets, their boroughs, their towns, and their municipalities throughout the United States never having called to their particular attention the great advantage of this act. Now, it was supposed that it was planned by the administration of the Vocational Education Board and it was almost tacitly understood between the War Department and it that the demobilization of these disabled men would take place at large consolidated centers and very few in number. What is the result? The result is that the War Department, for reasons which may be justified—and I make no criticism of it—has decided that the distribution of these men to their homes, turned back into civil life, will take place at 200 points, and these twenty-odd thousand men who got away from the hospitals were not permitted to have the advantage of this act. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has claimed that the Federal board is asking for $2,745,000 for salaries for the one-year period ending June 30, 1920. He has attempted to prove it by figures submitted by the board and printed on page 1252 of the hearings on the sundry civil bill for 1920. I am sorry to say that the gentleman has not read the heads of the columns. Column 3 gives the total probable expenditures for the full two years ending June 30, 1920, and column 4 gives the expenditures from July 1, 1919, to June 30, 1920, which are the expenditures asked for in the sundry civil appropriation bill now before the committee. Assuming that items 2, 6, and 8 were all for salaries, which is not true, the total amount to be used for salaries for the one year, July 1, 1919, to June 30, 1920, would be $1,050,000. But the facts are that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] added together column 3 and column 4. In other words, to get his figures he doubled the request made by the board for the period July 1, 1919, to June 30, 1920, and, moreover, added the expenditures from July 1, 1918, to June 30, 1919. In this way he has made a great mistake and thoroughly misrepresented the request and the expenditures of the Federal board.

The facts are that the board has asked for an appropriation of $4,000,000, of which at least $2,500,000 will be required to pay for the lodging, subsistence, and traveling expenses of disabled men in connection with training; for $250,000 to pay the expenses of placing disabled men in employment, including necessary lodging, subsistence, and traveling expenses; for $200,000 for special contingencies, including mechanical appliances and special care, including medical attention in emergencies. In other words, $2,950,000 would be used on the disabled men themselves. Yet the Appropriations Committee has proposed to cut this in two, and cripple the work. Fifty-seven billion dollars to fight the war, but cheeseparing for those wrecked in winning it. How soon we forget!

When the gentleman from Wyoming complains that the board is seeking every soldier, sailor, or marine injured or diseased in the war, he is paying the board the highest possible compliment. What else would Members of Congress desire than that some Government agency should undertake the solemn duty of seeing that the Nation's obligations to the wounded and diseased from the war were met fully, carefully, but at the same time generously? Is it not better that the body charged with this duty should err, if at all, which I do not believe is true of the board, by being overanxious to reach every man in possible need of help than that by a barbed-wire policy of the old pension system a worthy disabled soldier, sailor, or marine should be neglected? What policy would the gentleman from Wyoming suggest that the board should adopt in meeting the anxious inquiries from his district? Should a representative be sent to see them if, unable to travel, they should request this service?

If able to travel, should the board provide transportation to a central point for interview? These are vital questions relating to the care of disabled men, and I hope the board will spare no effort and no reasonable expense to achieve their declared aim of making contact with every disabled victim of the war whom they could possibly help.

This country, through the Congress of the United States, has committed itself to the proposition of providing for its disabled men a means of training and subsistence which would relieve them of the necessity of appealing to charitable assistance for their education and support. The Federal board is the instrument designated by Congress to carry out this declared intention. The Federal board has undertaken this task in good faith. It has set up an efficient organization for discharging it and has made its plans on the assumption that adequate support for such a program would be provided by Congress. While this work has been going on Members of Congress have severely criticized certain other governmental agencies for neglect of disabled soldiers. If in the future criticism does arise from neglect in the training and support of these men, the blame will be squarely fixed where it belongs should Congress fail to provide ample funds for the work.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, in the estimate made by the board for expenditures necessary for the ensuing year it was found unnecessary to increase the item of $250,000 now made available. For salaries and traveling expenses, instructors and supervisors, and other experts, the estimate of the board, not for the time, as the gentleman from Wyoming said, up to the 1st of July of this year, but for the time up to the 1st of July, 1920, the year we are appropriating for, was $1,195,000, of which sum there is available under the original act $545,000. So to take care of the salaries and all these items up to the 1st of July, 1920, the sum of $650,000 only is asked for. A large amount of the total increase is in another item. It is for lodging, subsistence, travel, and for care of these men during the time, and prior to the time, that they are taking this instruction.

Gentlemen of the committee, there are now 22,000 men already discharged from the hospitals. They are subject to and ought to receive this training, and 13,000 of them were discharged before the board had an opportunity to reach them or to submit the proposition to them for their consideration. They are now increasing at the rate of over 1,000 a month. Last month over 1,100 applied for admission for training under the board. The peak of admission for training will be reached about June of this year. Then the men will be discharged from the hospitals and applying for admission, and the peak of training will not be reached until the 1st of October. The estimate of the department was that in addition to the $250,000 already available they would need $2,750,000 more, but they have scaled the amount down to $2,500,000, and that is the largest item of expenditure asked for by the board.

Now, gentlemen, why this condemnation of the board? Why this talking about "soldiers that do not want it and do not need it, and these fellows that are hanging around the pie counter in order to get places." You can have no idea of the difficulty of obtaining men of the necessary character, education, and ability for this work. You can not get them even at the price they pay. The board had extreme difficulty in finding men with the necessary education and training to take care of this emergency work. You have limited the salaries of these men, and that is eliminated from consideration. No excessive salaries after the 1st of July can be made, and that settles that matter. Now, gentlemen, it is with you to say whether or not you are willing at this time to discredit these estimates of the board for the wounded soldiers of the United States. Are you willing to take that responsibility? Are you willing to let these men go upon the streets of New York City, as they are now doing, begging for bread, and that is what they are doing, because they did not know and their attention had not been called to the fact that they could be taken care of and educated for an honest living and an independent existence as citizens of this country?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman does not want to be misinformed. There is no begging in New York City. We do not permit it; we look after the poor.

Mr. TOWNER. There was begging in New York City on the streets of the city. It is true that these men were selling shoe strings—they were selling little trinkets and various things on the street. But they were in their uniforms, to the disgrace of the city of New York and to the disgrace of the United States of America, and in reality they were asking alms under the guise of selling shoe strings.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman is entirely misinformed.

Mr. DYER. Had they been discharged?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Probably they had not been paid.

Mr. TOWNER. I suppose, of course, that they could not have been paid. They had nothing. They were apparently saying to the people of the world, "I am begging because the United States will not take care of me."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield? The gentleman is always correct in his statements——

Mr. TOWNER. I hope so.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. These men are being paid before they are discharged. That has been said so many times that I personally investigated it. There are no soldiers begging in New York City now—nobody begging in New York City.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. Just to say that I have myself seen begging in New York City.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Of soldiers in uniform?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes. Of course, the gentleman is technically correct when he says they were not begging; but what difference is there when they appeal to the charity of the people and ask them to buy their shoe strings and little trinkets?

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. When I saw them they were not selling these shoe strings; they were asking for alms on the streets of New York.

Mr. TOWNER. I thank the gentleman for the information.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. On the street?

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. I saw them in a room in a bank, where they came.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But not on the streets?

Mr. TOWNER. What is the difference? Gentlemen, when you hear the appeals that have been made on the floor of this House against the educational board that is established for the purpose of taking care of these conditions, I want you to remember that it is your board. You established it. They have a right to complain of you if it is not paid. Are you going to take away from this board the necessary funds for going on with their work because you say you do not like the board, that they are not the right kind of men, that they are men who are seeking the pie counter? If that is the case your true remedy is not to take away the necessary appropriations. Your remedy is to see to it that we have the right kind of a board and the right kind of employees, and when any gentleman will come before this House and say that an improvement can be made in this necessary—almost supremely necessary—service for the soldiers, if he can show any method by which it can be improved, then I for one stand ready to give him my hearty approval and say that he is a very patriotic Member of this House.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. What salaries have you been paying, and what is the necessity for limiting the salaries at all?

Mr. TOWNER. I will say this to the gentleman: You must look at this in a common-sense way. The board had to organize this work and organize it quickly. They had, as I said, the extremest difficulty in getting men at all who were qualified for this kind of work, as the gentleman can easily see. It is not ordinary employment. It takes a man who must have special qualifications.

Mr. BURNETT. But the gentleman has not answered the question about the salaries that they have been paid. How many have been receiving these big salaries?

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman heard the statement. The statement is that 62 are receiving over $3,000.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The statement was at the time that they came before the committee that they had put 277 men in training, and they were paying 257 men——

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman by that statement endeavors to discredit this work, but he knows just as well as anybody that the work has just been organized, and that there are applications now coming in at the rate of 1,000 a month. The gentleman knows that, because his committee was informed about it, and yet he tries to discredit it by saying that these men, these necessary employees, these experts, who had to be hired before the work could be carried on, were hired before the men were there. Of course, necessarily they were.

Mr. BURNETT. If they were getting excessive salaries, that is the thing that I am interested in.

Mr. TOWNER. We will take care of that, if the salaries are excessive, and I will say to the gentleman that I think now it will perhaps be easier to obtain qualified men at reasonable salaries.

Mr. BURNETT. How many were getting more than $5,000 a year?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Two.

Mr. BURNETT. How many more than $4,000 a year?

Mr. TOWNER. I do not know.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Twenty at $4,000.

Mr. BURNETT. Then how can the gentleman talk about it when he does not know?

Mr. TOWNER. If it was necessary for the purpose of organizing the board to pay $4,000, then we ought to pay it.

Mr. BURNETT. The gentleman may talk about the soldiers, but what is the reason these men, these very patriotic men, who want to do something for the soldiers, all want exorbitant salaries? If they wanted to do something in the interest of the wounded soldiers——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close, if no one else desires time——

Mr. DYER. I wish five minutes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I want five.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. In 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, does that include five minutes for me?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If the gentleman desires five minutes, I have no doubt the Chair will recognize him.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I think this is a very important matter, and I shall object to 20 minutes. If the gentleman will make it 30 minutes——

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. We have been discussing it, I will say to the gentleman, for about 45 minutes.

Mr. DALLINGER. I shall object.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I certainly should like to make some headway with the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Make it all day, for the benefit of the members of the Committee on Education.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 25 minutes.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FESS. I have the floor, and I refuse to yield for that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I regret that my friend from Wyoming is not here——

Mr. MONDELL. He is, and is listening to the gentleman.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. The gentleman from Wyoming is here.

Mr. FESS. I want to pay him a compliment in that he is always here whenever a bill of this kind is up for consideration, but I had not seen him at the time I mentioned it. I share in the concern that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] mentioned a moment ago when he spoke of the efforts to reduce unnecessary expenditure, and especially at this time; especially at this time I sympathize with such efforts. I also sympathize with the effort not unduly to increase salaries, and I think the suggestion made of the effort to hunt out these people to be rehabilitated would generally be disapproved, and yet that is a phase with which I must take issue with him, for the reason that unless these persons are solicited to take advantage of the provisions of this bill the Government will not perform its mission to the wounded soldiers.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. For a question.

Mr. MONDELL. There are perhaps 10,000 men who were severely wounded. Of course a large proportion of those men will entirely recover, and are in no wise rendered unable to follow their occupations by reason of such wounds. There are a great many thousands of men who are very slightly wounded. Does the gentleman think that this board should hunt out at their homes every man who had a scratch and was reported as being slightly wounded and find out whether or not he wants this vocational rehabilitation? They talk about 100,000 men; in one case of 200,000 men.

Mr. FESS. The failure that, I think, is so apparent to the House is to deal in exaggerations, and I sincerely regret that we have gotten in the habit of denouncing a good effort by saying we are hunting up everybody who has a scratch in order to rehabilitate him. That is beneath the dignity of the discussion of this question. The truth about the matter is—and I want to call attention to it for just a minute—it costs $275, according to the estimate, to rehabilitate a soldier; think of it, $275 in taking a wounded man and putting him on his feet and making him self-supporting and self-respecting, so that he does not become a charge upon the Government, but can look the world in the face and not feel that he is a pensioner, a subject of charity, and yet we educate in the universities under private management students at a cost of from $1,000 to $2,000 per year, and we send to the Naval Academy and to West Point Academy our own choice and educate them at the rate of $18,000 to $25,000 per student for the four years. All that is asked in this bill is to take $275 to educate and train a wounded man who otherwise might be a charge and subject to charity in this country. We here propose at this meager figure to train him, put him on his feet, and let him be able to look the world in the face as a self-respecting man because he can do this work. [Applause.] Two hundred and seventy-five dollars only, and if there are 15,000 soldiers to be trained at the minimum, as is submitted by the board, it means $4,125,000. It is a shame to cripple this work as is proposed by this bill to do in this way. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I was going to ask if I might——

The CHAIRMAN. The motion has been agreed to.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina desire recognition.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; I thought the gentleman from Missouri desired to ask a question.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will confess my ignorance of what the Vocational Education Board is doing. I have not heard any gentleman say what they were doing. I do not know what vocations are being taught or anything about it. I do not know whether anybody else does; but if he does, he has carefully concealed it from the House. But I have no doubt that they will do a good work; but here is the situation that confronts Congress: There is not a bureau of the Government, not one, which, if its appropriation is cut or its estimate is cut in an appropriation bill, can not get some very intelligent and estimable gentleman on the floor of this House to urge, when the appropriation bill comes up, that it be increased, and give very good reasons for it. Every Member of the House is in favor of economy on some item that he does not care anything about. He is in favor of cutting the appropriation which somebody else wants and in favor of increasing the appropriation which he wants. And that is proper; it is proper to bring these matters before the House; but you can not have economy without cutting estimates of appropriation and keeping appropriations down, and you can not make all of these appropriations without increasing taxation.

This bureau has been before a fair committee of the House. It has submitted, more fully than can possibly be submitted here on the floor, its case to the Committee on Appropriations. One gentleman said he would take the opinion of experts, and hence takes the opinion of the experts connected with vocational education, but not the opinion of the experts connected with appropriations in this House. If he would take the opinion of the experts on appropriations here—from the Appropriations Committee—he would not increase the appropriation; but if he will take the opinion of the experts outside, who want to get more money from the Treasury, he will increase the appropriation.

It may be it is idle to hope that this Congress will adopt any practice of economy. I am not sure but it is idle to hope that the next Congress will do any better, but somewhere the line will have to be drawn, because you can not keep increasing appropriations in the times of peace that are coming without increasing the taxes, and the men who vote to increase the taxes will mostly in a few years be outside in private life endeavoring to raise the money with which to pay the taxes. [Applause.]

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I intend to support the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], in charge of the bill from the Appropriations Committee. I believe that it is better policy to follow the Committee on Appropriations on these matters than it is to take up something sprung suddenly upon us wihout an opportunity for the committee to present its judgment concerning it. This Congress will expire, but the Sixty-sixth Congress will be in session, and an opportunity will be had, and the Committee on Appropriations, I am sure, will give every assistance that is needed for this work if more money is required.

Mr. Chairman, I would vote freely and willingly every dollar that is necessary for the carrying on of this work, as I believe every Member of this House will vote for it, when it is really needed and the time is appropriate. I disagree with some of the gentlemen, especially the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] in decrying this appropriation and saying that it will be wasted and ill spent. No doubt some of it has been spent in that way and some of it probably will be; but, Mr. Chairman, this war for which we have expended millions of dollars was won largely by the very boys that this appropriation is intended to help, and any public official who would knowingly ill spend this fund would be as bad as a traitor.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I notice in this bill that they appropriate thousands of dollars for monuments to the dead in Cuba and China. Does the gentleman think it is more important to appropriate for that purpose than to take care of these boys who are returning and who are disabled?

Mr. DYER. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that every sensible Member of Congress—and I think every man here is in that class—is in favor of helping these boys to be wage earners and to be able to take care of themselves. We had up here, Mr. Chairman, some time ago a bill to open the soldiers' homes in this country to the soldiers of this war. I opposed it and prevented consideration of it, because I want to see the soldiers of this war given the advantage of this very law that we are appropriating for—the opportunity that Congress is providing for them to enable them, disabled and crippled as they are, to go out and earn a living for themselves, instead of putting them in the soldiers' homes, shut off from the world, shut off from every opportunity to work and to support themselves and to raise families and be citizens in the various avenues of business. The soldiers' homes are all right for the old disabled soldiers, who no longer have the vitality or the ability by reason of age and debility to earn a livelihood, but to take these young men and say, "We will take care of you in the soldiers' homes; we will provide compensation for you," is not the way to treat men nowadays in this advanced age when we have the opportunity through this vocational educational training to equip them and put them in the world, where their help and influence will aid so greatly. Mr. Chairman, that they may have an opportunity to earn money for themselves and live honorably and peaceably is my great desire. They will be more than willing to do this and will be better citizens by reason of it.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman knows that this bill can not operate until after the soldier is out of the hospital. Most of them are in the hospital and the work will increase from now on very rapidly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, may I ask if there are only five minutes remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. There are only five minutes remaining.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the members of the Appropriations Committee are just as anxious as every Member of this House to provide a sufficient sum to carry on this work. The Congress originally passed this act. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] himself reported to this House a bill appropriating only $2,000,000 for this purpose. The war was then on, and he thought $2,000,000 sufficient. Before the armistice the board filed an estimate for $4,000,000. Based upon what? On the belief that the war would continue, and that a great many more men would be disabled as the result of the war. Then, after the armistice, when they came before the committee about three weeks ago they made this statement to the committee—that from the organization of the board they had spent but $250,000 of the total appropriation of $2,000,000. They had a balance on hand of $1,750,000. They asked that that be made available for all purposes of the board. By the action of the Congress in passing the Bankhead bill last week it is made available, so that to-day they have $1,750,000. If my amendment is adopted they will have $3,750,000.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I can not.

And, gentlemen who have spoken, with tears in their voices, present to the Congress the horror that would result by reason of not appropriating still more money to pay for the training of these disabled soldiers. What is the fact? The money that is provided for here is not paying for the training of the soldiers.

These soldiers on their return are being trained in the institutions which appear listed on the back of Document 743—in Amherst, in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, in the Colorado University, in the mechanical and agricultural colleges of the States of the Union—and the truth is, and to the credit of this country I am glad to say it is true, when they sent these disabled soldiers to the colleges of the country and to the State universities and offered to pay their tuition not one institution would accept the pay from the Federal Government. [Applause.] They said, "They are our boys, and we will take care of them." And so this money is not going for tuition of the boys in institutions where they are receiving training. Where is it going? What is not being spent in these excessively high salaries is being spent for the subsistence of the boys when they are in training.

The organic act authorizes the board in special cases to pay subsistence and lodging. I do not know that it was the intention of Congress to pay it in every case, but the board, in its liberality—and I make no criticism of it—has construed it to authorize them to pay to every man who takes the benefit of this act, in addition to $30 provided by the War Risk Bureau, $35 out of this fund for his lodging and subsistence, making a total of $65 per month. In addition to that, they are furnishing clothing and shoes as long as a man stays in training, and they furnish books. That is what is being done with it.

Now, gentlemen say that the criticism of the action of the board in paying these high salaries is irrelevant because of the limitation proposed, but the gentlemen who made the estimate of $4,000,000 before the armistice was signed are the same gentlemen who fixed the excessive salaries, and if they were so liberal in their ideas as to salaries we can assume that they were equally liberal in this estimate, which they say is but a guess.

At the time they came before the committee they had 277 boys in training, and it cost about $275,000 in salaries to put them there, or about $1,000 for every man in training, while the State universities are paying for the training. In the payment of salaries they said they followed the rule of not paying a man more than $500 in excess of the salary he previously received. In other words, they said to the world, "Bid for this man's services, and when you do we will raise you $500."

I say the amount recommended by the committee is enough to carry them through the year if any wisdom is exercised in the expenditure of the money. Certainly, it will carry them to the next Congress. If there is a deficiency, they can report to the next Congress, and if they have a good case Congress will provide it. If you give the full amount they asked for last October while the war was on, and the same spirit of extravagance shown in large salaries asserts itself in some other form, you have no remedy. I want the Congress to appropriate every dollar needed for the vocational rehabilitation of the soldiers, but do not want money appropriated for this purpose wasted, and $3,750,000 is ample for their needs.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, let us have the amendment reported again.

The amendment was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BANKHEAD and Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi demanded a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 30, noes 52.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. BANKHEAD and Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 31, noes 56.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

For five commissioners, at $10,000 each; secretary, $5,000; in all, $55,000.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, if this amendment had been for the appointment of people to some jobs that are noncompetitive or no examination required, there would have been no opposition to it, regardless of the salaries. I have persistently opposed large appropriations. I remember in 1917 when gentlemen came before the House with a bill for the appointment of explosive inspectors I urged that the positions be placed under civil service, but I was overwhelmingly voted down, and the reason given was that certain experts were required and needed because they were men with specialized training and skill, and they could not come under civil service. At that time I was told that it would be undignified and humiliating to subject these men to civil-service examination, and I was voted down. After the bill was passed, men selected by petty politicians in every congressional district, men unlettered and illiterate, were appointed at salaries ranging from $3,000 to $3,500.

Now that you need men of experience and education and men of training you come here and try to practice economy. The very fact that you reduce these salaries will make it impossible to get good, able men, and it will make it possible to employ a lot of unemployed petty politicians. I do not know what the State of Wyoming pays its school-teachers, but I know that in New York, where we employ thousands of people for educational purposes, we pay decent salaries.

Now you can not get good men for this kind of work unless you pay them good salaries, because the office-seeking, job-grabbing types are not the kind of people who will fill positions of this kind and do the work we have at hand.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. FESS. One of the richest States in the Union pays its school-teachers on an average $71 a month; one of the richest States in the Union.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is not New York.

Mr. FESS. No; it is not New York. That indicates the appreciation in a monetary way in which education is held.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes. Men on the floor of this House constantly preach about keeping away bolshevism, and the one thing that will keep this country free of bolshevism is education.

Mr. FESS. You are right. If the gentleman will further yield, I want to say that only last week a strike got under way in a Government shipyard where they were getting $64 a week, and they were striking for $70 a week—just $1 short of the wages paid to the teachers per month.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

A great deal has been said about soldiers begging. Gentlemen, you must understand we had 4,000,000 men in uniform, and they are being discharged, and there are bound to be individual cases where a man will go out and take advantage of the fact that he was in the Army. But I resent statements that soldiers are begging on the streets of New York. That is absolutely untrue and incorrect. Nobody begs on the streets of New York. We do not permit it. We take care of our poor in New York, and everyone who has been in the Army who is out of work will be cared for as long as he is in New York.

When you come here with a bill to "rehabilitate" the bank account of some disappointed profiteer, asking for a billion dollars, we hear but a feeble protest.

I believe we should have granted every cent the bureau asked. It is a great work, and should be directed and controlled by big men—educators of the first rank. I am certain the work is needed. All seem to agree on that; and yet the committee boasts that it reduced the salaries and placed a limitation. There is not a committee in the House would dare to limit the pay of a hod carrier. Then why limit pay here? I hope the men who are carrying on this work will not become discouraged, but will continue in the service. Perhaps a good many of the Members and, let us hope, the gentlemen of the committee will better understand the purpose and scope of the work and make necessary and adequate provision for its continuance next session. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALSH. What has become of the rest of the personnel of the Federal Trade Commission?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If the gentleman has in mind the employees carried in the last bill, I will say to him that by reason of our withdrawing from the Federal Trade Commission the right to rent buildings in the city of Washington there remained no necessity for the carrying of the messengers boys, general mechanic, watchmen, elevator conductors, skilled and unskilled laborers who were formerly employed.

Mr. WALSH. Do they go into the legislative bill?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. They go out entirely, because the Federal Trade Commission will have to give up its rented buildings and go into Government buildings, which will be maintained by some central authority, perhaps the custodian of public buildings and grounds. They will certainly have to go into a Government building, so that there will be no necessity for the employees who formerly looked after the building.

Mr. WALSH. They will have to have clerks, will they not?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The only clerks that were carried they will have to provide for out of their lump sum.

Mr. WALSH. There were about 50 or 60 clerks carried in the current law. Each commissioner has a clerk, and then in the current law there are 4 clerks of class 4, 5 of class 3, 10 of class 2, 17 of class 1, and 21 at $1,000 each——

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes; I have the law before me. In addition to those the gentleman has stated there are 21 at $900 each. The rest are messengers, general mechanics, watchmen, elevator conductors, laborers, and telephone operators.

Mr. WALSH. I was inquiring to see if the hope that was in my mind was being realized that we were cutting out some of the force of the Federal Trade Commission, in order to prevent them from committing further depredations upon the business of the country.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Last year we gave them a lump sum and we required them to file with us a statement of every employee and the salary paid, and after most careful consideration of it the committee must say that the Federal Trade Commission kept faith with the Congress. They showed in a statement the name of every employee of the commission and the salary received, and they had not increased the compensation of employees except in a few instances. We determined that it would be better to have them all on one list, instead of having a conflict by having some clerks on the statutory roll and some listed under the lump sum.

Mr. WALSH. The only difficulty with that is, the committee may have before it some day some other commission or board that will come in with a tabulated list and be able to show that they have not increased salaries, and the committee will then follow the precedent set in this case and give them a lump sum, and not give them a specific authorization for the number of clerks and other employees that they can have. Now, I think it is rather a poor precedent to establish in relation to a commission whose activities are going to be continued to wipe out the statutory personnel and give them a lump sum of $1,000,000, which is $500,000 less than they had last year, and let them employ anybody they please, and then bring in a tabulated list next year and say, "While we have employed so many clerks, we have not increased their salaries," but yet they may have increased the number of employees.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The reason for giving the lump sum last year was that this commission very naturally could not estimate as to the employees necessary to carry out the duties imposed upon them by the various departments.

Mr. WALSH. The duties as they viewed them.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes; and it would be unfair to put on the statutory roll the large number of employees who have been carried and make them permanent employees. Now, we are further confronted with this situation, that many of these investigations are being carried on; many of them are incomplete and should be completed. There is the coal investigation, for instance, the cost of production, and others which will be of great service to the industries of the country. Some of the economic investigations should not be carried on, and the committee has reduced the lump sum from $1,500,000 to $1,000,000. That necessarily reduces the amount that they can expend. We took $500,000 out of their appropriation for next year.

Mr. WALSH. They can do damage enough with $1,000,000, and I think some of the activities they have undertaken which are not completed ought not to be completed but they ought to terminate the inquiries they are making along those lines at once. I think they have gone far afield from the original purposes of the law providing for that commission.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for four minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to proceed for four minutes out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to quote some eloquent words delivered yesterday within the shadow of Independence Hall by a foremost American. He said:

"My friends, there is liberty in the air. The nations of the earth are clamoring for liberty. And why should not freedom-loving Ireland join in the general cry. Yes; Ireland wants freedom to breathe the air of heaven. She wants freedom to stretch her brawny and sinewy arms. She wants freedom to develop her resources. She wants freedom to develop the riches of her soul. She wants freedom to carve out her own destiny.

"And we are here to-day to plead the cause of Ireland's sons and daughters, that they may stand erect, redeemed, regenerated, and disenthralled on their own sacred soil."

These words were uttered by His Eminence Cardinal Gibbons at one of the most remarkable conventions ever held in the city of Philadelphia. That convention adopted resolutions which the cardinal himself presented. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including those resolutions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE RESOLUTIONS.

The resolutions are as follows:

"We, the delegates to the convention of the Irish race in America, assembled in Philadelphia, the city in which the immortal declaration of American liberty was given to the world, and speaking for many millions of American citizens, call upon the President and Congress of these United States of America to urge the peace conference now in session at Paris to apply to Ireland the great doctrine of national self-determination, and to recognize the right of the people of Ireland to select for themselves, without interference from any other people, the form of government under which in future they shall live.

"We urge this claim, in the first place, in the name of justice, recognizing and insisting on the truth set forth by the founders of our Republic, that all governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed.

"We urge this claim in the name of America, insisting, as we have just shown in the case of France, that we are not an ungrateful people, and recalling that no other people have contributed more than those of Irish blood to the creation, the upbuilding, the developing, and the preservation and defense of our great country.

"We urge this claim in the name of Ireland because of the unparalleled struggle for now seven and a half centuries that Ireland has carried on for national existence and liberty; because all efforts to break down and destroy that existence have failed, and because of the extraordinary majority by which less than two months ago the people of Ireland declared not alone their dissatisfaction with the government of their land by England, but also their determination to govern themselves without interference from any outside influence or power.

"We urge this claim in the name of humanity because we believe that war can not be ended and a just and permanent peace can not be brought about unless the doctrine of self-determination be applied to Ireland and the people of that country be permitted to decide for themselves the form of government under which they shall live.

"We point out that England has tried in every way to coerce or to persuade or to cajole the people of Ireland to give up their devotion to their national aspirations and tried them all in vain. Lloyd George within the last few months has been compelled to assert that Ireland is at present as much opposed to British rule as in the days of Cromwell.

"The industries of Ireland have been destroyed; her trade and commerce wiped out; her population cut in two; her leaders deported and held in English jails without indictment or trial, and yet within the last two months the people, with a unanimity never before attained, have again declared their utter dissatisfaction with English rule and their determination to be free. England refuses to listen to the voice of Ireland, but we point out that England likewise refused to listen to the voice of the American colonies. England was compelled less than a century and a half ago to recognize the independence of the colonies, and within the last year the efforts of our country saved England and her allies from total defeat at the hands of the central powers.

"The land to which England was thus compelled to do justice has just saved England in her hour of need. Let England now realize that justice to Ireland which she has so long denied, with grievous loss to Ireland, but also with great loss to herself, will now remove from her path the bitterest hostility which she has to encounter all over the world and will convince mankind in general of the sincerity of her declarations when she says that she believes in liberty and justice for others as well as for herself.

"Finally, we urge this claim that peace and order may be brought out of the chaos with which the whole world now seems to be threatened. In this great hour, when governments are being re-formed and when peoples long opposed by tyranny are emerging again into the sunlight of liberty, let there be sincerity and unselfishness upon the part of those who are controlling the peace conference, to the end that the mistakes of the Congress of Vienna may be avoided and a peace made that will be lasting and permanent because it will be just and right.

"Upon the shoulders of our President and Congress rests in the last analysis the responsibility of the peace that shall be made. We urge them to act in accordance with the doctrines laid down on our behalf when we entered the war and in accordance with the resolution recently adopted, almost unanimously, by the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives to the end that autocracy and militarism may be forever destroyed, and that the right of self-determination shall be given to all the peoples of the earth."

DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES.

With the adoption of the cardinal's resolutions, Michael J. Ryan, of Philadelphia, read the declaration of principles, which, he said, had been drawn up by a committee representing every section of the United States.

The declaration, in part, follows:

"As American citizens we uphold the honor and interests of the United States as our race has done during all the years that have elapsed from the start of the revolution to the present day. That we are proud of the splendid record our people have made in the fighting forces of the Republic in the war which has just closed and are ready to perform any duty and make any sacrifices our Government may, in the future, demand.

"We heartily approve the principles of justice, liberty, and peace for all mankind proclaimed by President Wilson in his declarations of America's objects in the war. These had the approval of the entire American people and were the chief cause of their enthusiastic support of the war. They were indorsed by the spokesmen of the British Government while hostilities were in progress; and the whole world was led to believe that the achievement of the purposes proclaimed by the President was the sole object of the war. Among those declarations the one that 'all peoples are entitled to self-determination' received universal support and became the war cry of the peoples who were fighting Germany. Our Government and those of the countries associated with us in the war are therefore bound in honor to apply the principle of self-determination to Ireland, as well as to the other submerged nations which have been granted their freedom as a result of the war. If it is not applied to Ireland the United States will be placed in a most unfavorable light before the civilized world, and President Wilson's solemn declarations will be made a mockery."

ENGLAND'S "CONSPICUOUS FAILURE."

After stating that Ireland is clearly entitled to self-determination and that she has asserted that right for 750 years, the declaration continues:

"Aside from Ireland's inalienable right to govern herself in her own way, without interference by any people outside her own shores, the attempt of England to rule her against the consent of her own people is the most conspicuous failure in all history. It has failed in every essential thing for which governments exist—the promotion of the welfare of the governed, the protection of their natural rights and interests, the development of their resources, and their contribution to the sum of human happiness and the world's prosperity.

"Even if conquest be acknowledged as giving one people the right to rule another, England has forfeited that right by centuries of continuous misgovernment and injustice, which are practiced by the English Government to-day as relentlessly as at any time in the past, and in utter disregard of the opinions, wishes, and protests of the Irish people.

"The condition of Ireland, which is the direct result of the deliberate action of the English Government, is an international scandal and a constant menace to the world's peace. Three times during the last 300 years her soil has been invaded by foreign armies to aid her people to overthrow English rule. So long as England holds Ireland by military force and denies her the right to govern herself, the Irish people will continue to assert their rights by every means in their power.

"In 1916 they rose in rebellion, and on January 21, 1919, their elected representatives, supported by the overwhelming majority of the people, met in the national capital, issued a declaration of independence, and proclaimed an Irish republic. This action was followed by an appeal for recognition to the free peoples of the world. They elected 3 delegates to plead their case at the peace conference, 2 of whom, with 39 other elected representatives of the people, are held in English prisons without trial and with no charge formulated against them.

"A state of war therefore exists between England and Ireland, which, in the interests of the peace of the world, the peace conference can not ignore, and President Wilson's great task of establishing a permanent peace will not be completed until the Irish question is settled on the principle of self-determination, to which he has unequivocally committed himself and the United States.

"We, therefore, in the name of the many millions of American citizens of Irish birth or lineage, who have contributed their full share to the winning of the war, and with the approval and sympathy of the overwhelming majority of the American people, now demand that President Wilson place before the peace conference and support with all his powerful influence Ireland's right of self-determination and secure for the elected delegates from her constituent assembly to the peace conference the same status and recognition which have been accorded to those of other small nations.

"We remind our fellow Americans of the farewell address to the American people of George Washington, and particularly that portion thereof embodying his advice to avoid all entangling alliances with European powers. These words are as true to-day as when he first uttered them. * * *

"We demand, therefore, if any league of nations be made, that all features of it which may infringe on the traditional American policy, including the Monroe doctrine, shall be eliminated, and that in any such league the right of self-determination of all peoples and the American doctrines of freedom of the seas, so often and earnestly advocated by President Wilson, shall not be overlooked, forgotten, or abridged."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. WATSON of Virginia having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 2812) to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, and sodium on the public domain be recommitted to the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4723) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 204) to provide for the fitting up of quarters in the post-office building at the city of Sacramento, Cal., for the accommodation of the district of California and its officers.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12211) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question in reference to the Federal Trade Commission?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Under the provision of this bill making a lump-sum appropriation for salaries of the employees, how much does the gentleman have an idea the chief clerk will get? He now gets $2,000. The disbursing clerk now gets $2,000, and a clerk to each of the commissioners now gets $1,800. How much does the gentleman imagine they will be receiving under this lump-sum appropriation?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will say frankly to the gentleman that based on the action of the commission this year, they will not be receiving one cent more.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will not, in correcting his remarks for the RECORD, change that statement, because I would like to have it in the RECORD when this matter comes up next year, when they submit a tabulated statement of their employees.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will not, and I shall remember, if I am here, and ask for an accounting. The action of the committee now is based on the act that the statement furnished by the commission as to salaries paid out under the lump-sum roll did justify the action.

Mr. MANN. It may be that the gentleman's statement on the floor here, which will go in the RECORD, will have its weight with the commission; but it is perfectly certain that if such a statement had not been made these gentlemen who now get $2,000 a year would get $3,500, and the private secretaries to these commissioners, hunting for something to do, would get $2,500 or $3,000 each.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will say that if I am here and they abuse the lump sum, and the gentleman does not make an effort, if I am here I shall personally make the effort to investigate it.

Mr. MANN. I probably will make no effort about it. I should say, as a rule, the most useless body we have at present is the Federal Trade Commission as now constituted. I heard some gentleman say a while ago that no one seeks the job except the job hunter, and I believe all of them were job seekers when appointed.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the committee proposes to give the Federal Trade Commission another chance to prove that given an opportunity to increase salaries it will not do so unduly. I do not know that the committee was entirely justified in its action. Gentlemen understand, of course, that it is difficult to provide a proper statutory roll for this sort of a service, so difficult that the committee concluded that it would be better, if the sums are economically expended, to appropriate in a lump sum, with the hope, expectation, and at least the implied promise that there would be no increases of salaries.

We took that action, still remembering what occurred not so long ago in connection with the appropriation for this same governmental activity. There had been carried in their appropriations a limitation of $5,000 of salary that might be made to any employee. Members of the commission came before the committee and said that they frequently had very important cases coming before them in connection with which it was necessary for them to employ, at least temporarily, professional people or experts, and pay them a sum in excess of $5,000 per annum, or at the rate of $5,000 per annum. They asked the committee to put them on trial and give them an opportunity to show what they would do, without limitation, and the committee did so, with this result, that almost immediately, or very soon after that appropriation became available, the Federal Trade Commission employed a certain gentleman, more or less known throughout the country, at the rate, as I recall it, of $17,500 per annum, with some per diem on top of that. In all, if my memory serves me right, that active, persistent—I was going to say distinguished—gentleman pulled down, I think, about $27,000 of the public money. And the echoes of the activities that arose out of that expenditure, far in excess of what the commission said they would make, have been ringing through the corridor of Congress ever since, and have led to the introduction of various bills and to hearings at each end of the Capitol, going on for some time now.

We hope that the Federal Trade Commission will do better, will come nearer adhering to its present good resolutions in this case than it did in the case that I have already referred to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I do not recall, and the gentleman may refresh my memory, of another instance where Congress has abolished the statutory roll and granted a lump-sum appropriation to a Government activity so that it might increase salaries as it deemed fit.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think the Congress did that or intended to do that. There was certainly no intent on the part of the committee to grant a lump-sum appropriation in order that salaries might be increased.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is what you are doing here; you are granting that privilege in this case.

Mr. MONDELL. I hope my friend from Wisconsin, who is an economist, will not make that statement, which may be held somewhere by some one as authorizing an increase of salary. We are insisting that this action is not taken with a view or for the purpose or intent or with the expectation that the salaries will be increased, but rather on the promise implied, if not direct, that the salaries will not be increased.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no limitation or qualification in the bill. You abandon the statutory roll and I do not recall another instance where Congress abolished the statutory roll and provided a lump sum. It leaves it to the discretion of the commission or the department to raise the salaries at will.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know or recall a case of that kind.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. That may not be the purpose, and I ask the gentleman why the statutory roll as carried in existing law was not continued and a lump sum carried for temporary employees. If the gentleman will permit, he has stated that there are instances where they wish to increase the salaries beyond the $5,000 limit. In a prior paragraph, the committee in good judgment has placed a limitation upon the amount of salary that could be paid out of a lump-sum appropriation of $3,700,000, which has just been voted. Here you abolish the statutory roll and allow increases without limit to be paid out of this million dollars.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. Could such a situation be possible, coming from the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. STAFFORD. That is what I am calling to the attention of the committee. I do not know of another instance where the Committee on Appropriations has abandoned a statutory roll and permitted a commission to fix the salaries.

Mr. LEVER. I am absolutely shocked.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would not be shocked if it had come from the Committee on Agriculture, because they pursue that practice frequently.

Mr. MANN. And the gentleman also recalls various instances where members of the Committee on Appropriations have attacked the agricultural appropriation bill because it carries lump-sum appropriations.

Mr. STAFFORD. I confess that I have been guilty on more than one occasion of that vicious practice, but I am surprised that the subcommittee on the sundry civil appropriation bill has seen fit to follow the established practice of the Committee on Agriculture. I am waiting for some explanation as to why they have done it.

Mr. MONDELL. Will my colleague on the committee be good enough to prepare and present a statutory roll covering these activities, in order that we may see whether it is proper to enact it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why, it is in last year's bill.

Mr. MONDELL. The statutory roll of last year's bill very clearly was not a proper one to continue. The committee was of the opinion that if this board would have due regard for the public funds, which we hope they will, they could better allocate, to use a now useful word, the appropriations among the employees in an economical and useful and workable way than the committee could do.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wanted to get five minutes when the provision was under consideration making appropriation to take care of the soldier boys and rehabilitate them for life work, but I could not do it. The amendment to increase the appropriation as offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] was voted down. I was curious to see what the Appropriations Committee, after turning down the estimate for this very just and necessary work, had made appropriations for, thereby giving preference over this item which proposed to take care of these boys. I have been looking through the bill. I want to cite a few items that they have given preference over this appropriation. I notice that they make provision to take care of the Commission of Fine Arts, which includes "the purchase of periodicals, maps, and books of reference." They provide for the National Advisory Committee on Aeronautics. The committee was willing to have advice given on aeronautics and make appropriations for it—it was very important—but not advice given to these boys that they might be fitted and trained for life's work. Then there is a large appropriation made, and it is made available immediately, "for the observation of the total eclipse of the sun that may be visible in Bolivia." How important! Then there is the "astrophysical observatory." It had to be provided for——

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Not yet. I have only five minutes, and I am very anxious to finish this statement. I want to see just how the mind of the gentleman from Montana——

Mr. GALLIVAN. Wyoming.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Wyoming—I apologize to Montana—worked in failing to take care of these boys.

Mr. MONDELL. Why does the gentleman charge a member of the minority with the items in this bill? Has he fallen into the error of believing that we have already on this side of the House taken control of the Congress?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Oh, yes; you will soon take charge, and I suppose you, too, will follow the estimates of the various departments on some of these matters, but not when it comes down to providing money for the soldiers to be trained. Members on your side are just as guilty as those on this side. Then here is an appropriation "for an international catalogue of scientific literature," a large appropriation "for American ethnology," and "for the National Zoological Park" out here, where people may go and look at the monkeys and see the wild beasts and other curiosities, and the committee is most generous in appropriating "for work of furnishing headstones for unmarked graves" and "for the roadways in national cemeteries." It is quite necessary to do that, but not necessary to fit these boys that they might be trained to go out and get good positions after they have served their country. Then there is an appropriation "for the expenses of burying, in Arlington Cemetery." It is quite necessary to bury a man, to provide for that, but not necessary to try to cure him and train him so that he can live and make a living.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Not yet. Let me read further—"Antietam battle field, for repair and preservation of the monuments and tablets" there. Likewise a large appropriation is made "for the disposition of the remains of officers, soldiers, and civilians." You want to provide for burying soldiers, after they are dead, but not for taking care of them and training them so that they can go and get a job while living. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is it not true that a distinguished gentleman on the Democratic side of the House argued against the amendment to provide money, while many gentlemen on the Republican side of the House voted for it?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I am afraid the gentleman to whom you allude was just mistaken in his argument, but opposition, I am sorry to say, has arisen on both sides.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I have only five minutes.

Mr. WALSH. I wanted to ask if the gentleman was going to move to strike out these items?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. No; I am not. I am for them, but I am going to give the gentleman from Massachusetts and others an opportunity to say whether they are in favor of taking care of these boys, so that they can be trained for their life work, by making this appropriation on a motion to recommit this bill, and we are going to have a roll call on it.

Mr. WALSH. I shall be delighted to take advantage of that opportunity.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. To see whether you believe it is more essential and more necessary to appropriate money "for tablets in China" than it is to take care of these brave, disabled soldier and sailor boys. Then, again, Mr. Chairman, there is an appropriation made in this bill for "burial of deceased indigent patients out in Arkansas," and all through this bill similar items are found. For instance, here is an appropriation to provide "for trees and shrubs and plants and skilled labor for the grounds of the Capitol and the Senate and House Office Buildings." Willing to appropriate money to make the Capitol Grounds and the House Office grounds beautiful, but not willing to appropriate sufficient money to take care of these disabled boys so that they can go ahead and make a living. And, again, here is an appropriation "for the reindeer in Alaska." Oh, it is very important to appropriate money for the "reindeer" and "for the protection of game" in Alaska—very important—but not important to appropriate a sufficient sum, such as estimated by the department, for these boys.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman join in an effort to strike out some of these appropriations?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I am for all of these items, but I am for a greater preference being shown these disabled soldiers and sailors than for the reindeer and other things I have enumerated. [Applause.] I do not yield further.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I would like to have two or three minutes.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, that paragraph has been passed.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I shall not insist on it.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech delivered by my colleague, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], in Boston on Saturday night.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that he may be permitted to extend his remarks by printing a speech delivered by Mr. TILSON, of Connecticut, in Boston last Saturday night. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I have withdrawn that motion.

Mr. WALSH. Then I renew it, merely to express my regret to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi, who will soon leave our midst to take up duties in a higher forum [applause]—for a long career, I assume—that in the closing days of his service in this House he should have expressed an opinion such as we have listened to in the last five minutes after the amendment which he had favored had been decisively defeated by the committee.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman wishes me to add to my regrets, I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I would like to say that if I could in the slightest degree before I leave this body help the soldiers to be trained, so that they could do something in life—if I could help them in any way—I would be satisfied in the thought I had done them a good stunt. [Applause.]

Mr. WALSH. Oh, yes; of course, that is the sentiment of all of us; but to take the gentleman's remarks as made, one would think we had stricken from this appropriation bill the item carried for that very purpose, and because we did not increase it by over a million dollars, as was asked by gentlemen who are interested on the Committee on Education, the gentleman seeks to convey the impression that the majority party are appropriating money for a lot of useless work and refusing to appropriate money for the soldiers. Now, Mr. Chairman, we have taken the estimates of this Federal Vocational Educational Rehabilitation Board and we have taken the manner in which they have expended the money given to them last session, and the Committee on Appropriations has reduced the amount that they ask for to be appropriated for the ensuing year, and the gentleman knows that if this amount is insufficient for the year 1921 there will be no difficulty in getting a further appropriation; but this trouble is that when you get a body of experts, particularly educational experts and scientists and scientific men and men drawn from the great institutions of learning throughout this country, and turn over to them vast appropriations, they are not always practical in its expenditure; they go upon theoretical lines, and on this work they begin spending money for large salaries. They had more salaried men upon the pay roll at one time than they had men who were being treated.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Now, with the amount made available for them for the ensuing year, plus the amount that was turned over by the act we passed the other day, it certainly ought to be sufficient for them to start out with and embark upon this program. There is nobody opposing this work. There is nobody opposing giving the wounded soldiers every benefit and advantage that they can get, and there is nobody here seeking to appropriate money for Rock Creek Park and erecting monuments to soldiers who have fallen in the battles of the Republic heretofore, and to withhold aid from the soldiers who have been wounded in this struggle across the seas. The gentleman is verging, I regret to say, upon the field of demagogy when he seeks to make that sort of an argument, and that only adds to my regret that he is about to depart from our midst, because I know that where he is about to go he may find a great many more opportunities to indulge in that practice than he would if he retained his membership in this body, where that kind of stuff does not go. [Applause.] I trust that the gentleman, upon further reflection, will be constrained to admit further in the debate upon this measure that we have done pretty well as to initial appropriations for the increased activities of this board by giving them nearly $3,000,000 to be available for their work.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I congratulate the gentleman on his plea of confession and avoidance.

Mr. WALSH. I thank the gentleman for his congratulations.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I understood the gentleman withdrew the pro forma motion.

Mr. FESS. He renewed it.

Mr. WALSH. I do not like to withdraw it; I would rather have the gentleman defeat it by his eloquence and logic.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to attempt the duty of lecturing the membership of the committee as some Members have attempted, but I want to call attention to this paragraph, upon which we have had a good deal of comment, where instead of limiting the salary to be paid as done in the preceding paragraph the limitation has been taken off so it can be increased. The comment is simply this, that on matters which have monetary value that are measured in materialism there is always a keen interest to extend or expand the opportunity of expenditure.

But upon matters which are not material, but which are spiritual, or more especially educational, there is always a desire to place a limitation. And the desire has been beautifully expressed by our friend, our colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], when he specifically states that those who have had academic training are unfitted for the expenditure of money, and therefore the clamp ought to be put upon them. Now, the crime of having an academic training some Members of the House will neither deny nor palliate. They are not going to apologize for it; and, while it might be true that there is an impractical trend among theoretical teachers or teachers of theory, I think that my friend will respect the fact that without the training there would be no accomplishment in the material lines, as there would not be in the spiritual line. And the mere fact that some men have committed the error of taking time to train themselves ought not to be a disqualification for a position on the floor of this House or anywhere else where legislation is proposed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. For a short question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have here a book that is gotten out by the Bureau of Education, in cooperation with the United States Food Administration, entitled "Lessons in Community and National Life. Series A. For the upper classes of the high school." I find this question:

Note in the title of the bill the different objects at which Congress aimed and show in each case what Mr. Hoover's interpretation of the different tasks is.

Is that a question for a highly educated man to ask of a pupil in a school?

Mr. FESS. I would say that that question would likely be suitable for a pupil in a school.

But, Mr. Chairman, what I have in mind is this: That in matters of business, where you are keeping a going concern going, there is no limitation on the expenditure, but you lift the limitation to give the latitude. But where, instead of keeping a going concern going, you are going to take a broken-down man who has been taken by the authority of the Government without his will and placed in the line, and he is wounded, and when we want to put him on his feet and make him creative and recreative and productive, you limit the amount to be paid for fear that they are going to take advantage of it. I say that it is a comment upon this body. The soldier rehabilitated is not material. It is to give him some ability to stand on his feet and use the powers that God gave him and that the Government took away from him by wounding him, and put him in shape to be himself again. [Applause.] I do not want to appear to be lecturing anybody. But I do not like to see this discrimination, simply because these men are trained academically and are experts. The fact that a man is an expert ought not to disqualify him for a position.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERDEPARTMENTAL SOCIAL HYGIENE BOARD.

The unexpended balances on June 30, 1919, of the appropriations for the fiscal year 1919 contained in section 5, 6, and 7 of Chapter XV of the Army appropriation act, approved July 9, 1918, are reappropriated and made available for the same purposes for the fiscal year 1920: Provided, That the unexpended balance of the sum of $100,000 in section 7 to be used under the direction of the Interdepartmental Social Hygiene Board shall be available for personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, books of reference and periodicals, printing and binding, traveling, and other necessary expenses of the board in the administration of the provisions of Chapter XV of the said act.

Miss RANKIN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WALSH. I reserve a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Miss RANKIN. I have an amendment I wish to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that no amendment can be offered unless the point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to hear the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be read for information.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Miss RANKIN: Page 39, after the word "act," line 25, strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the unexpended balance shall be made available for any State which permits the physical examination of females suspected of venereal diseases to be made by male physicians."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, if the lady from Montana will permit, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. How much money is available to be reappropriated?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I can not answer as to the exact figures. It is something under that $100,000. May I state to the gentleman from Massachusetts this——

Mr. WALSH. There was a million dollars appropriated under section 5.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. There is a fund providing $1,400,000 to be appropriated by State boards of health in 1919 and $1,400,000 for similar purposes in 1920. That was carried in the Army bill. The $1,400,000 it was estimated would be entirely spent during the year 1919. This $100,000 is included here for the reason that the language of the original act, while seeking to authorize the expenditure of this fund for the administration of the act, did not do so, because of defective language, and no part of this fund had been spent—that is, the $100,000 fund for administration. There was a fund of $1,000,000—this act had about four different funds—which was appropriated for the purpose of cooperating with the States in the isolation and detention of women with venereal diseases. Now, of that fund there is a balance remaining, unencumbered, of $549.866. It remains because of their inability to carry out their obligations with the States. That fund is used, I will say, in cooperating with the States in the construction of homes for girls, homes for women—State prisons, in other words. The board was anxious to have a large appropriation for this purpose and to secure authority to construct buildings.

The committee has not carried any appropriation for it, but simply authorizes the expenditure in the next fiscal year of the unexpended balance, for the reason that the board has already obligated itself to make these appropriations; and having obligated itself, we wanted to give them the authority during the next fiscal year to expend the unexpended balance.

Mr. WALSH. You want to reappropriate the $500,000 which is carried in section 5 of that act for the purposes set forth in section 2 of the act?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is right.

Mr. WALSH. Now, the $100,000 that you carry here, the unexpended balance, you want to make available for personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It is for the purpose of administering these funds.

That is the purpose for which it was appropriated in the act, but the act was not correctly worded, and the comptroller held that they could not spend any of that fund. It is to enable them to spend the money for the purpose for which Congress made the appropriation.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE This is to take care of the board provided for in a law which was enacted as a rider on the Army appropriation bill last year?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes; it refers to the unexpended balance of this appropriation.

Mr. McKENZIE. Put on by the Senate, and as a matter of fact the law was never considered by a committee of the House or in Committee of the Whole. Is not that true?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is true.

Mr. McKENZIE. It is just one of those things that went through as a rider, and it provides that the States shall make appropriations to meet the appropriations made by the Federal Government and that they shall act jointly in the suppression of this disease or for social reform.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Exactly.

Mr. McKENZIE. Now, what I want to ask the gentleman is, How many of the States of the Union have made appropriations to meet the Federal appropriation?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. On page 1327 of the hearings it is shown that about 25 States have.

Miss RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The lady from Montana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Miss RANKIN: Page 39, line 25, after the word "act," strike out the period and insert a colon and the following:

"Provided, That no part of the unexpended balance shall be made available for any State which permits the examination of females suspected of venereal disease to be made by a male physician."

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina reserves a point of order.

Miss RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, you have just heard this paragraph explained. This paragraph provides that the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the fiscal year 1919 contained in section 5, which provides for a million dollars; section 6, which provides for $1,400,000; and section 7, for $300,000, of the Army appropriation act, is reappropriated and made available for the fiscal year 1920.

As you will notice, this does not make the appropriation for 1920, as the act approved provided for an appropriation for two years. Every Member of this House appreciates the fact that much legislation was passed during the war that would not have been passed except for the emergency. We know that during that time the Member of this House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who keeps the House advised of such questions as this was ill and was not here to guard the people against such legislation. I feel confident that when you understand the power carried with this appropriation you would not wish to reappropriate this balance without the proviso that I have offered.

Section 5 provides, as I said, for an appropriation of a million dollars to carry out the provisions of section 2. Section 2 contains provisions that I believe should be explained to the House. I have talked with many women about this provision, and the only group of women I found that approved of it did so because they believed the "end justified the means" during war.

Section 2 reads as follows:

That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are hereby authorized and directed to adopt measures for the purpose of assisting the various States in caring for civilian persons whose detention, isolation, quarantine, and commitment to institutions may be found necessary for the protection of the military and naval forces against venereal disease.

This section gives blanket authority to the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to adopt measures—any measure, all measures, any measure they see fit—to assist the various States in caring for "certain civilian persons," regardless of the methods used in the various States. "Civilian persons" is a very innocent term, but when it means civilian persons dangerous to the military and naval forces in regard to venereal disease we know that for all practical purposes it means women. This provision gives blanket authority to the States and to the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to set up any regulation, to adopt any means they see fit, to determine when and how it shall be deemed necessary for women to be detained, isolated, quarantined, or committed to an institution for the protection of the military and naval forces against venereal disease.

Are they going to submit every woman to a physical examination? They say no; they are going to examine only the prostitutes. How do they know who the prostitutes are? Do they mean to include in this item all the young girls that are floating about the streets? They are a greater menace than the so-called professional prostitutes. Is there an organized body of women different from other women who can be classified as prostitutes who are licensed and legalized? Are they only going to examine those who have been convicted in the courts as prostitutes? Or are they going to examine any woman who is brought into the court as a suspect liable to prosecution? In the hearings the process of finding out when it was necessary was not mentioned.

Over 10 years ago I studied this question very carefully. For a time I worked in the night court in New York. I was very familiar with the handling of prostitution in some of the Western States, especially Montana and Washington. I know the type of man, the plain-clothes man and the policeman, whose business it is to hunt down prostitutes, and I also know that there is an opportunity for the most flagrant injustices. The man on the Council of National Defense who justified and instigated this section tried to convince me that in the past 10 years the moral standards of the individuals who would be responsible for the practical administration of this act had so changed and improved that there would be no danger of abuse. We must talk common sense. We know that there has been no such great change in 10 years, and that we are dealing with human nature.

This section is vicious in that it gives blanket authority both to the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy not only to adopt a measure but to assist any State regardless of the methods used by that State. They can assist States that are using the most inhuman procedure, and can ride over any regulation that has been made for the protection of women. It gives broad authority under which physical examinations of women might be made without requiring any evidence that the woman is diseased or guilty of prostitution.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the lady from Montana has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the lady from Montana may have an additional five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the lady from Montana yield for a question?

Miss RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have just examined the amendment at the Clerk's desk, and I would like to know whether we or the States have a sufficient number of women physicians to meet the requirements?

Miss RANKIN. There have been a great many women released by the ending of the war. We have many more women physicians than would be required to do this work. It may be that they will have to offer inducements for women to come and do this work. But whether they do or not, I think it is better to have the work undone than to pass legislation that would permit some of the injustices resulting from this legislation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Sympathizing with what the lady from Montana has in mind, I wonder whether the adoption of this amendment might not be regarded as coercive in certain States where they do not have a sufficient number of women physicians to meet the requirements of the situation?

Miss RANKIN. It might be.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Suppose in a State like Nevada or Montana there were no women physicians. What would the situation be?

Miss RANKIN. Then a woman physician would have to be brought from some other State.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Meanwhile the patient might be left suffering or the disease might spread.

Miss RANKIN. But this does not have anything to do with the woman who is diseased. It says "a woman suspected of having venereal disease." After it has been found that she has a venereal disease, if she wishes to have a man physician, that is all right. She may have any physician she prefers; but I object to having women examined by men physicians when they have not been proved to be subject to the disease or to being prostitutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. For one I want to compliment the lady for bringing this question up and for her courage in discussing it; but it did occur to me on reading the amendment that it was open to the objection I have stated, that, so far as those States may be concerned where there are no women physicians available, it might be regarded as in a measure coercive, compelling the State to employ women physicians when it did not have them.

Miss RANKIN. I much prefer to compel the States to employ women than to compel women to be subjected to this abuse.

Mr. FLOOD. Will the lady from Montana yield for a question?

Miss RANKIN. Certainly.

Mr. FLOOD. Suppose some woman should prefer to have her family physician examine her rather than to be examined by a lady physician. Your amendment would not permit that.

Miss RANKIN. Oh, yes.

Mr. FLOOD. No; your amendment provides that where a State permits the examination by a male physician no part of this appropriation shall be available.

Miss RANKIN. A woman suspected of venereal disease—a woman who is brought up under this act.

Mr. FLOOD. You would not permit a woman to be examined by her own physician, if she preferred to be, if her own physician was a man?

Miss RANKIN. If a woman prefers to have an examination of her own, that has nothing to do with this; but this bill will not permit money to be used to hire physicians where the State hires only men.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the lady from Montana yield for a question?

Miss RANKIN. Certainly.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to ask if it is not possible under this law that anyone who might desire could circulate the report about any woman in a community that she was suspected of being diseased, and she might be haled before a physician and compelled to submit to examination whether she was diseased or not and in that way be branded in the community as being a disgraced woman?

Miss RANKIN. What the gentleman says is true. I have not finished my remarks on that point.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The lady has had experience with the night court in New York. At that time we had women physicians doing the work there.

Miss RANKIN. That has nothing to do with this bill.

This section is vicious in that it gives blanket authority to the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy not only to adopt any measure but to assist any State regardless of the methods used by that State. They can assist States that are using most inhuman procedure, and can override any regulations that have been made for the protection of women. It gives authority under which a physical examination of a woman may be made without requiring any evidence that the woman is diseased or found guilty of prostitution.

It is unnecessary for me to talk to Members of this House about the evils of such legislation. Your sense of justice and your sense of precaution will not permit you to give to a group of people blanket power to take any woman they see fit and submit her to a physical examination made by men without any more protection than this section gives.

The next insidious evil in this bill is that it will give to men the false sense of security that comes from the belief that women who are diseased are locked up. Therefore, they reason, women who are out are free from disease.

Authorities in Europe admit that their system of physical examination and lock hospitals is a failure. The United States has been looked up to as the Nation which has handled its problem of prostitution with more intelligence and humanity than any other country—not that we have by any means solved the problem, for we can never hope to approach the solution of any problem that involves men and women by using wisdom of men only. Under the pretext of war are we going to revert to the practice in Europe?

This section has been in force for a short time. You say nothing has happened. Do you know what has happened? Let me give you a few instances which I know are typical of what is happening. Regardless of what may be said in defense of this section on the floor, I know these things and worse are true, because I know human nature, and I know prewar conditions in various States. In one camp, I think it was Newport News, a reliable woman, a personal friend of mine, was sitting in the Public Health Service office. A man came into the office and talked with one of the officials. The official became very angry, and when the man left he came over to my friend and excused his anger by explaining that the man who came in tried to bribe him. The man wanted his wife's red ticket changed to a white ticket so that she might ply her trade. This shows that at this place it was the practice to make a physical examination of the prostitutes and issue a white ticket to the well one and a red ticket to the diseased one. A white ticket was a notice to all men who came that she was free from disease, when, as a matter of fact, within the next hour she might contract the most virulent type and from then on infect every man who came. I reported this to the Division of Venereal Disease of the Bureau of Public Health Service last November. I was told that it would be looked into. I have heard nothing since.

Another incident that shows the method by which this section was carried out is probably known to every one of you. You are all aware of the practice in the Army of punishing men who failed to report when they contracted a disease and of merely giving medical care without punishment to those who reported. One instance came to me of where a man reported to the authorities that he had contracted a venereal disease. One of the questions asked him was, "Do you know where you contracted this?" The man gave the name of a young woman. That was ground enough for the authorities to force that woman to submit to a physical examination made by a male physician, without any other evidence than the word of one man. It means that no woman is safe if some man wishes to give in her name as a suspect. The women of the Pacific coast are already complaining of the operation of this section.

I want to say this, that no political party can go to the women of this country and defend this section, and no individual can ask the women for their vote and defend his vote for an appropriation which will make it possible for women to be dragged in and examined by a man, to be so humiliated, disgraced, and marked, while there is the slightest chance that the woman is innocent. It is against every principle of decency and humanity to have such examinations and lock hospitals as this section permits.

The women are sensitive on this subject. The women of Australia voted down conscription because of the manner in which the authorities handled venereal diseases.

I received a letter from a man in one of the camps in France saying that they were allowed only three-hour furloughs because of the prevalence of venereal disease. When these men come home they are going to tell what happened. When the men who were kept on this side are out of their uniforms the women will know more.

I was through with talking about curing venereal diseases 10 years ago. We can never rid the world of this plague as long as we try to cure half of those infected and let the other half go free, or while we refuse to look for the cause of the trouble. We will never make any headway until we recognize the fundamental principles. We must see that all feeble-minded persons, males and females, have permanent custodial care, that all the rest of the men and women have education in the processes of life and right living, and that every woman has the training and opportunity to earn an adequate living by her own efforts.

I ask the adoption of this proviso that many young women may be spared needless humiliation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina insist on his point of order?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I make the point of order on the ground that this is a limitation on the expenditure of a fund provided by legislation in the last sundry civil bill. In the form in which it is now presented, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. On the ground that it is not a limitation?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the position I take is that it is a limitation upon a fund that was provided by the Army act of the last session, if it is a limitation on anything.

Mr. MANN. But this is a reappropriation of the fund. The appropriation is exhausted. The item in the bill provides that certain unexpended balances are reappropriated and made available for the same purposes for the fiscal year 1920. No one would, in fact, claim that when we reappropriate an unexpended balance it is not exactly the same as appropriating the money originally, except that we evade adding it as an amount in the appropriation bill.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. While it is a limitation, is it not a limitation requiring the States to do certain things?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. No.

Mr. MANN. What is the gentleman's question?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Is it not legislation, in that it directs what the States shall do?

Mr. MANN. No; it is a mere limitation upon the expenditure of the money, precisely on all fours with the proposition about the appropriation for the benefit of soldiers' homes controlled by States. That is probably the leading case on the subject where a proposition was made that no portion of the money appropriated for the benefit of soldiers' homes owned by States should be given to the States if they permitted the sale of intoxicating liquor of any kind, including wine, beer, and so forth. Now, here is a provision appropriating the unexpended balance and a limitation upon the unexpended balance. It is clearly a limitation. The only provision that is subject to a point of order is the proviso that is in the bill.

Mr. CRISP. Is the Chair ready to rule?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. Does the gentleman desire to be heard?

Mr. CRISP. No; I think it is clearly a limitation; but if the Chair has his mind made up, I do not care to say anything.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FOSTER). The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair thinks that the point made by the gentleman from South Carolina that this is not an appropriation is not well taken. It does reappropriate the balance for the year 1920. So far as the amendment being a limitation, there was a decision by Judge ALEXANDER on January 16, and also a decision by the gentleman from Texas, Mr. GARNER, and also one by the gentlemen from Virginia, Judge SAUNDERS, all of them able parliamentarians in this House, who decided that a similar amendment to this was a limitation, and the Chair is justified in overruling the point of order. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Can we have the amendment read again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I desire to amend by adding the words "when there is a female physician available." I want to say that I am in sympathy with the purposes of the lady from Montana. There was a request from the department for a permanent establishment with activities along the same line, but the committee did not see fit to include it in the bill. I made some inquiries through the Health Department of the manner in which this work was carried on. I was informed that under the regulations whenever an examination is made that it is made by a Red Cross nurse, who has been at the office of the clinic for the purpose.

But they say that in some States no women physicians are available; and as this work has to be carried on around the various camps all over the country, that it is essential that they be permitted to carry it on where no woman physician is available. For that reason I offer the amendment, so as to provide that where women physicians are not available male physicians can be used.

Miss RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina entirely nullifies the amendment I have offered. They do use women physicians where they are available and convenient and at hand. The Red Cross nurse can not make the examination. It has to be done by a medical person. It is a difficult examination to make, and they are using men all over the country to make these examinations of women who have not been found to have the disease, who have not been found guilty of prostitution, and that is in the testimony given before the committee. Women who have not been found guilty of any sexual offense are held for examination, and these examinations are conducted by men in the great majority of cases.

There is a possibility that there may not have been enough women physicians when there were so many women physicians in France, but now that the women physicians have returned there are plenty to do the work if they will make the inducements to get women to do it. I believe that the humiliation and disgrace, not only to the woman who submits to the examination, but to all those who participate in the examination, is a greater evil than the evil that will come from allowing a few suspects to go free. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. What objection would there be to providing that it shall be made by a male wherever the female physician is not available?

Miss RANKIN. Because it nullifies the whole amendment.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Take a State like North Dakota, for instance; there you would not have female physicians available.

Miss RANKIN. They use women anywhere where they can. It absolutely nullifies my amendment and it would have no effect whatever.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The result would be that unless there was a woman physician the work could not be carried on. That is the reason why I say "when a woman physician is not available."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the amendment: Amend the amendment by adding, after the word "physician," the words "when there is a female physician available."

Mr. MANN: Mr. Chairman, I want to compliment the lady from Montana on the bravery and intelligence she has shown in presenting the woman's side of this matter to the House. [Applause.] The amendment now proposed by the gentleman from South Carolina, if adopted, would mean that the entire amendment offered by the lady from Montana would amount to very little. It rests then wholly with the department to say whether a female physician is available or not, while it is just as easy as rolling off a log for the department to have a female physician available at any camp where it is sought to make any examination whatever. [Applause.] They can put a female physician there if they want to, and that will be the case if the amendment of the lady from Montana prevails. But if the amendment proposed by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] is agreed to, then the department is without any obligation to have a female physician anywhere, and here is the situation: Do not think for a moment that these examinations are confined to prostitutes. Probably no one cares very much how the examination of a prostitute would be made, whether by a man or a woman; but under this broad provision of the law the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy can arrest any woman anywhere and submit her to an examination, and while the chances are that they will not walk into your home or into mine or arrest anyone connected with our families or our acquaintances, yet it is extremely probable that there will be, as there certainly have been in the past, many arrests for this purpose of young girls, probably improperly hanging around camps, who have not yet reached the point of prostitution. The moment such a girl is arrested and examined by a male physician her respect is gone. You might as well turn her on the street and tell her to make her living by prostitution. I am opposed to taking any innocent girl anywhere in the country and aiding in sending her to prostitution. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FLOOD). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina to the amendment of the lady from Montana.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the lady from Montana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the amendment just adopted, after the word "provided," the word "further."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to keep informed regarding and to enforce compliance with acts to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads; the act requiring common carriers to make reports of accidents and authorizing investigations thereof; and to enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate and test block-signal and train-control systems and appliances intended to promote the safety of railway operation, as authorized by the joint resolution approved June 30, 1906, and the provision of the sundry civil act approved May 27, 1908, including the employment of inspectors, and per diem in lieu of subsistence when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, $313,600.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FLOOD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 16104, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

OIL-LEASING BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill S. 2812, to encourage and permit the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, and sodium on the public domain, with Senate amendments thereto, and that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I wish the gentleman would tell us why he asks this.

Mr. FERRIS. A point of order to the conference report, on the ground that the conferees had exceeded their authority in providing for the leasing of coal in Alaska, was made and sustained in the Senate on the consideration of the conference report, and it is the thought of the conferees to go back and cut out the objectionable part.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will there be something printed to show what is going back to conference?

Mr. FERRIS. As I understand it, the adoption of the conference report in the House discharged the conferees.

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. FERRIS. So it is a question of going back to conference again.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but it goes back with the part eliminated that went out on the point of order.

Mr. FERRIS. It does not have that effect. It has the effect of rejecting the conference report, and we are now where we were at the start. The whole matter goes to conference.

Mr. ELSTON. And then comes back to the House for consideration?

Mr. STAFFORD. Just as a new conference report.

Mr. FERRIS. Exactly. It comes back for consideration in the event the conferees agree.

Mr. STAFFORD. Subject to points of order and all other privileges in the House.

Mr. MANN. Then the gentleman is moving to insist upon the disagreement of the House to the Senate amendments?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Chair announced the following conferees: Mr. FERRIS, Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, Mr. RAKER, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, Mr. SINNOTT.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee on the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, with Mr. FLOOD in the chair.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman having the measure in charge tell us the reason for the $63,000 increase, apparently, in this block-signal and train-control system investigation?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. In the last session of Congress, Congress increased the salaries of inspectors and other employees from $1,800 to $3,000, and this increase is simply due to the necessity of carrying out the law as it now stands. It is the exact amount of the increase made necessary by the legislation.

The Clerk read as follows:

Valuation of property of carriers: To enable the Interstate Commerce Commission to carry out the objects of the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof," by providing for a valuation of the several classes of property of carriers subject thereto and securing information concerning their stocks, bonds, and other securities, approved March 1, 1913, including per diem in lieu of subsistence when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, and including not exceeding $15,000 for rent of buildings in the District of Columbia, $2,500,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to obtain some information. How far has the work of valuing the property of carriers proceeded?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The information given the committee was that on January 1 they had received engineering reports on 25,000 miles of roads, and that they would, at the end of the year, receive reports on 25,000 miles more; that the field work in connection with the valuation of railroads would be completed by January 1, 1920; that the work in the office, the compilation of the information, will not be completed for two years. The opinion of Judge Prouty, who has been in charge of this work, is that from this time on they will be able to make much greater progress because during the war they have been somewhat hampered.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman state how much money has been expended in valuing the railroads up to date?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Fifteen million eight hundred thousand four hundred and sixty-two dollars was appropriated and $13,706,197 has been spent in the valuation of both railroads and telegraph and telephones—$499,366 having been expended in the valuation of telegraph and telephone lines, the balance in railroads.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. When was the work commenced?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The first appropriation was in the year 1915. My recollection is——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It was before that.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That the fiscal year of 1915 was the first appropriation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It has been running four years and has cost up to date over $13,000,000, is that correct?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Fifteen million dollars appropriated and it cost $13,706,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And now they are selling off the private cars, are they not? Are they not offering the private cars at auction in which they used to go around and value these physical properties of the railroads? Are they not selling them at auction?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I have no information about that, I never heard——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the gentleman will look in the newspapers in Virginia he will find they are advertising them. Now, why not lop off some of these unnecessary expenses——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Now, I am making this inquiry of the gentleman, because for several years it seemed to some of us this appropriation ought to be curtailed, that their work ought to be finished. It will probably run on as long as we continue to make appropriations.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania knows it was a special act of Congress which directed this work to be done. Three years ago the gentleman in charge of the work guessed that it would cost in all not more than $20,000,000, and to-day, notwithstanding the increased cost of everything and the increased salaries, his opinion of it is in the same amount of $20,000,000 that he prophesied three or four years ago. This work is to be completed, and his guess is that it will be entirely completed in two years.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The opinion of many men, some of them railroad men, is that this is a valueless work, and that it is a waste of public money. That is the opinion that many men hold. I am inclined to think they are right and would like to see this business wound up some day. How many men are employed on this particular branch of the service now?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will try to give that to the gentleman in a moment. So far as the work is concerned this Congress directed the commissioners to do it. They have now spent $13,766,000. Their field work is almost completed, and the whole work will be completed in a year and a half or two years. The total expenditure, according to those having to do with it, is that it will not exceed their original estimate of $20,000,000. Therefore it seems to me the wise thing is for us to wind it up, so that if it is of any value we will not have wasted $15,000,000 of appropriation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How does the commission get jurisdiction as to telephone and telegraph companies?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Why, the original act directed the valuation of telephone and telegraph supplies, and they have already completed the valuation of the Western Union line.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And that was included in that of railroads?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask the gentleman, whether there was any argument on behalf of the commission in favor of the continuation of this work?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The commission takes just this position, that Congress directed them to do it, and they make no special plea for its continuation. They believe as it has been commenced it ought to be completed, in view of the fact that we have spent $15,000,000, and if all this work is not to be thrown away we should complete it, but they make no special plea for it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And they have submitted to the committee that the work can be completed and ought to be completed in the year 1920?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. By January, 1920, they say their field work will be completed. This year the estimate is for little less than 800 employees.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington offers an amendment: Page 41, line 22, after the word "Columbia," strike out "$2,500,000" and insert "$1,500,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, right in line with the argument which was presented in the discussion in reference to the physical valuation of railroads here is a chance for this House to lop off $1,000,000 and do no harm. The statement was recently made on the floor that an effort will be made to recommit this bill in order to get a larger appropriation for the rehabilitation of soldiers—an additional million. If you want to pay that extra $1,000,000, you can save it right here in the bill. It is agreed that this physical valuation is running out very thin. In my opinion it will amount to nothing more than a great mass of books and statistics of doubtful value. Right now the valuation commissioners are selling some of the cars that they used to go around to make these valuations. The valuations have been run down and there can not be much left to do. All they need is to have sufficient money to wind up and make reports on it. Here $1,000,000 can be cut off. Save it. Here is your chance.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Washington, I desire to say that the appropriation for the current year was $3,500,000——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And could be cut without——

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. This appropriation is for $2,500,000. The only result of the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington would be that less work would be done and the work stretched out over a long period of years.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Did not the gentleman in his argument say that they were doing this work just as Congress directed they should go ahead with the work——

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; the gentleman misunderstood me then. They have an organization which, according to their plans, will enable them to complete this field work by January, 1920.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. What about these private cars which have become more or less unpopular which were formerly used to haul a lot of experts around to make and remake this valuation? Let the House of Representatives show its authority and lop off $1,000,000 and no harm will be done, I can assure the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. But the adoption of the amendment would simply mean a prolongation in the time of the work and delay the time in which it can be completed and would be uneconomical in my opinion.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. But would save a million and a half dollars, nevertheless.

Mr. WALSH. I move to strike out the section.

Mr. Chairman, this work has been going on for several years, and, as the gentleman says, Congress first recommended it, and it has continued for such a length of time that I do not see and neither have I been able to find out from any testimony that has ever been given before any committee, how the work when it is completed will be of any value to the authorities, the Interstate Commerce Commission having some jurisdiction over the railroads, or to any other department of the Government, or to the Congress in legislating in the future touching the railroads. All they pretend is that they have got some scheme whereby they can take valuations made in 1914 and bring them up to standard wages paid in 1921, when the work is hoped to be completed, and increased prices and cost of materials and equipment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH. But I do not see how, if we are going to continue this appropriation of millions of dollars year after year upon the plea that, "Well, we are almost finished now, and if you do not let us have $2,000,000 this year or $3,000,000 next year all we have spent heretofore will have been wasted."

I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Just a statement to the effect that this physical valuation has never yet been able to keep up with the wear and tear of railroad ties alone, to say nothing else.

Mr. WALSH. I submit, Mr. Chairman, it is better to charge off the $13,000,000 or $14,000,000 that have already been expended and to cease making appropriations of $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 annually to continue this work, when the end of it is not yet in sight, and particularly in view of the situation which now confronts the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. FESS. What is going to be the substantial value of the report when it comes in?

Mr. WALSH. I have just stated that I have not been able to ascertain from either the testimony of Mr. Prouty or any other member of the Interstate Commerce Commission what the value of this report is going to be when it is completed, if it ever is completed.

Mr. FESS. Could it be used as a basis for rate fixing?

Mr. WALSH. I certainly do not see how it could be used as the basis for rate fixing. It started in 1913 and 1914. The gentleman thinks it was in 1915, but I think he will find that a part of the work began in 1914, from a lump-sum appropriation. And I would like to ask the gentleman under what authority they undertake to value the telephone and telegraph property?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Under the original act.

Mr. WALSH. Under the basic act of February, 1887. Well, they have hitched that on as another alluring feature.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It was a special act authorizing this valuation.

Mr. WALSH. I was of the opinion that the special act authorizing railroad valuation did not comprehend telephones and telegraphs. But I trust that the House here will quit appropriating money by the millions annually for a work the nature of which seems to keep just a lap ahead of us year after year. Last year we were given to understand, if I recollect aright, that by 1920 we would have the end so near that we could almost grasp it. Now it has gotten up to 1921; next year it will be 1922, and so on.

I recall that in the State which I have the honor to represent in part, on the program of publishing the old Province laws, they started out with a modest appropriation and with an assurance that next year would see the completion of it, and that continued for 14 or 15 years, and every year they cut the appropriations, because the end would probably be reached in the next year. And this is parallel to that. They are trying to value the railroads, and they will have a part of the valuation based upon 1914 prices and values, and part of it in 1921, and after we have got it it will be of no particular use. I trust we will just eliminate this $2,500,000 and give the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] an opportunity to use that for his rehabilitation purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] to strike out the section.

Mr. STAFFORD. It has never been reported, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WALSH: Page 41, line 11, strike out the section.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. It is not because I consider it necessary to do so, but because I think we owe it to the House to have a few words said to counteract some portion of the very considerable amount of misinformation which the gentleman has proceeded to give us in the last few moments.

As to the ultimate value of the work that is being done in the matter of valuation of the railroads of the country, that is a matter of opinion. There are folks who think that the information will be of little value. There are others who believe it will be of great value. I belong to the latter class. And while when the work was undertaken I had some doubts about its value, my belief in the value of the work has increased as time has passed and as I have familiarized myself with the work, and as I have tried to study and forecast the effect of it.

This work has been carried on systematically, energetically, in the main not extravagantly, and is nearing a conclusion. And great as the work is it will be concluded approximately within the sum originally estimated by the more intelligent of those who favored the appropriation in the beginning and had the courage to declare how much they thought it would cost. Of course there were some gentlemen who, approving the work, did not have the courage, or possibly the foresight or the judgment, to say what the cost would be. The work will cost somewhere between $20,000,000 and $21,000,000.

We have appropriated heretofore $15,800,000. We are appropriating in this bill $2,500,000, or in all, $18,300,000 in round figures. The work in the field is very nearly completed. The work on the larger railway systems of the country is practically all completed in the field. The valuation figures are made with regard to quite a number of them. They have been submitted to the roads in some cases, and it is hoped that the work may be completely finished some time in 1921, possibly early in the year. In my opinion, while this work has cost much money, it is worth all that it has cost and more, providing we continue the work, and by continuing, keep pace with the changes and modifications and improvements and extensions, so that we may have for reference and information an estimate of the value of the railways of the country at any given moment of time.

Now, those values will be serviceable in fixing rates. They will be one of the useful factors in fixing rates; not the only factor. They will be of value locally in fixing assessments. Their value will be utilized in many lines. In my opinion we were well justified in entering upon the work, although I was not enthusiastic about it in the beginning. It has been carried out faithfully and well. It has been done intelligently and thoroughly. It is about to be completed. About one more appropriation and we shall see the work wound up, and shall have the benefits of the work, which I hope will be considerable.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask that my amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be reported.

The amendment was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For all authorized expenditures under the provisions of the act of February 17, 1911, "To promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their locomotives with safe and suitable boilers and appurtenances thereto," and amendment of March 4, 1915, extending "the same powers and duties with respect to all parts and appurtenances of the locomotive and tender," including such stenographic and clerical help to the chief inspector and his two assistants as the Interstate Commerce Commission may deem necessary, and for per diem in lieu of subsistence when allowed pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, $288,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I did not ask for a division on the amendment to reduce the great sum asked for physical valuation of railroads. It was an effort to save a million dollars, and I felt it would be useless, for the reason that nearly all the paragraphs in the items in the sundry civil bill are the result of special appeals, pulls, and drags from the departments, the bureaus, and the commissions, which are the arms of the Government, that never weaken when it comes to reaching into Uncle Sam's money sack. That is their main business. I have no doubt whatever but that the House in appropriating $2,500,000 to carry on this physical valuation of railroads is wasting a large sum of money. The valuations made in my part of the country some years ago were made on material that is now in the junk pile, and yet the valuations are going to appear in the figures and statistics some day.

It is the same way all through this bill. I feel the same as the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], that there is something the matter with a great many of these items. We should all speak plainly, but we do not. There is a popular song that should be sung as this bill weaves its way through the House, and the title of that song is "Do Not Forget Me." [Laughter.] Why, the bureau chiefs themselves are around these doors singing that song—whispering, lobbying, and begging either to hold on the old appropriations or to get a little more. That is the trouble with regard to most of the items in the sundry civil bill. Deny it if you can. We are shortly to come to an item for money to buy more land for Potomac Park. That scheme should be cut in half. But it will not be. Somebody will be around here singing the song, "Do Not Forget Me."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Has the gentleman examined the Book of Estimates and the particular information that this committee has had to deal with, and the amounts they have cut out? Has the gentleman examined how much the committee have reduced the estimates?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Oh, yes. I give the committee full credit for making some reductions in the face of tremendous pressure. But as we increase departments and bureaus and commissions, we know how that pressure is bound to increase. Really, I am surprised that Members of the House are willing as committee men to work on this bill. As the bureaus and commissions continue to grow and continue to work their press agents and their pull, the work will be harder year after year. Too many people on the pay roll of the Government; too many bureau chiefs with fads and notions. Too much desire to have Uncle Sam do everything for everybody. Too much for Uncle Sam to do in the way of philanthropy, uplift, education, and reform for us ever to hope for governmental economy. I offer these amendments, but what is the use? But wait until the revenue bill begins to get in its work. Then there will be a change.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington withdraws his pro forma amendment. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

LINCOLN MEMORIAL COMMISSION.

For expenses of dedicating the Lincoln Memorial, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, $5,000, to be available immediately.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that item.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama reserves a point of order on the item.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if that item is authorized by law?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The Lincoln Memorial was authorized by law, and the money here is intended to provide for its dedication.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. What is the money to be spent for? For the completion of the building? It may be spent for feeding the witnesses to the dedication. It might be expended for wine, if we did not have a dry law here. It might be expended on seats for somebody to see the spectacle.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. As a matter of fact, that is true. The Members of Congress, and the gentleman himself, will be invited, along with others. The Congress has expended that much money, and it is the custom to invite Members of Congress and the Supreme Court and other officials of the Government to see it dedicated.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I do not know if the Chair heard what was said by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood what the gentleman said as to the reason for the appropriation.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman from South Carolina said that the purpose of the appropriation was to build seats, so that the spectators might view the ceremonies of the dedication. He also said it was not a part of completing the building, and had nothing to do with the building. The Lincoln Memorial is a public building and, as is suggested, was authorized by law, and anything which tends to the completion of the building, of course, is entirely appropriate in this bill. But I want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this item provides for an expenditure of money in connection with the dedication of the memorial and "for each and every purpose connected therewith."

It is quite clear that the appropriation has nothing to do with completing the building. It seems to me that as a matter of principle we ought not to be spending public money to provide spectacles for people. It would be just as legitimate to provide costumes for somebody to take part in a spectacle, or to perform a play or something else that would portray some incident in the life of Lincoln. I do not think it is proper.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman knows that it is customary to have ceremonies in the dedication of these great buildings. This is a building constructed out of a special appropriation, costing a very great deal of money, in honor of a very great man.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes; but is this spectacle that is proposed to be presented in honor of Lincoln, or is it just to afford pleasure to a lot of people, to go there and see it. It is not for the benefit of those who are going to be spectators, instead of being in honor of the great man who is gone? Are we not doing this for ourselves instead of for Lincoln? If we are, we ought not to do it. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that it is not authorized by law. It is not a part of completing the building, and it is not contemplated by the original statute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

On motion of Mr. KITCHIN, the committee rose; and Mr. CRISP having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. FLOOD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 16104) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

VICTORY LOAN.

Mr. KITCHIN, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported a bill (H. R. 16136) to amend the liberty-bond acts and the War Finance Corporation act, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and, with the accompanying report (No. 1131), ordered to be printed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania reserves all points of order on the bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. I should like to state to the Members of the House that the report is printed and can be found on the desk by the door. I would be glad if Members would get copies and read it this afternoon or to-night.

Mr. BUTLER. When does the gentleman expect to call it up?

Mr. KITCHIN. I expect to call it up about 4 o'clock to-morrow afternoon.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS.

On motion of Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, H. R. 16104, with Mr. FLOOD in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

For scientific research, technical investigations, and special reports in the field of aeronautics, including the necessary laboratory and technical assistants; traveling expenses of members and employees; office supplies, printing, and other miscellaneous expenses, including technical periodicals and books of reference; equipment, maintenance, and operation of research laboratory and wind tunnel, and construction of additional buildings necessary in connection therewith; not to exceed $1,500 for the purchase, maintenance, and operation of one motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle; personal services in the field and in the District of Columbia: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation for clerical, drafting, watchmen, and messenger service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, shall not exceed $43,000; in all, $175,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph just read. I have gone over the hearings, but I could not find any reference to the authorization for the purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That request was made last year, and I know it was discussed this year in the hearings, and I do not know why the gentleman can not find it. I can tell the gentleman the necessity for this. Langley Field is located 8 or 9 miles from a town. There is no street-car connection and no other public-vehicle service. During the war these men have been using an Army automobile as a general thing to go back and forth. They can do that no longer, and there is no way of getting out to the field except to walk. Their desire was that we authorize them to spend this amount for the purchase and maintenance of a machine, which would make it possible for them to get to that field.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 42, beginning with line 15, strike out the entire paragraph ending with line 6, page 43.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, there is no necessity for this appropriation at this time. What I am trying to do, as I stated when the Army appropriation bill was before the House, and the naval appropriation bill, and the Post Office appropriation bill, is to concentrate the aviation activities in one department.

I want to point out to you on what information the committee brings in this appropriation. Mr. Walcott testified, on page 95 of the hearings:

During the war the development of aeronautics has been very rapid, and we have probably in America to-day as high-grade fighting machines and engines as any country in the world.

Gentlemen, that witness is from now on entirely discredited, because that statement is absolutely incorrect.

The next witness, Col. Jesse G. Vincent, says:

I am very much afraid that the future of aeronautics is going to be jeopardized by a wholesome attempt to use the war machines, which are now available, for air-transport work. These machines have been built strictly for fighting and bombing purposes, and, while some of the larger day and night bombers can be adapted to certain kinds of commercial use, they will never be ideal; or, in other words, the best of these machines will fall far short of what could be accomplished by designing machines especially for commercial purposes.

Col. Vincent is the gentleman who has been telling you for the past 18 months that we had solved the problem of aerial navigation, because the Liberty motor was created and produced—the great miracle—a motor which was good for all purposes. Now that he is through with the Liberty motor, now that he has been exonerated by the President for any crimes committed by him, he comes in and says it is not advisable to use these war machines with his same motor, and so on. Was he telling the country a falsehood during the war, or is he right now? Col. Vincent, according to the investigation of Judge Hughes, was charged with misconduct and went pleading to the President in the last few days before the President sailed, when the President must have been extremely busy with other important matters, and he goes home with an exoneration. If he was innocent, why did he not go to trial before a court-martial? Of course the President has the power to pardon any person committing a crime, and he had the right to exercise that power in the case of Col. Vincent.

Then we have the Navy Department coming in, and the Navy admits that it is conducting its own experimental work, but says that they might make out of this a bureau.

The Smithsonian Institution and the Bureau of Standards have enough to do with their own work, and they can not properly develop aviation by just dabbling in it from time to time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman know whether Col. Deeds will have anything to do with the expenditure of this money?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If he has anything to do with it, we had better cut it out.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman know that Col. Deeds is regarded by the War Department as a very able man in aviation?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Col. Deeds has received the clemency of the administration.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is using harsh terms, harsher than I should want to use. Col. Deeds was recommended for court-martial by Justice Hughes, and the Department of Justice recommended that Col. Deeds be court-martialed, but the Secretary of War concluded that Col. Deeds was all right and said so at an interesting function in New York where Col. Deeds was present. I was wondering if we make this appropriation whether Col. Deeds will have anything to do with it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Because the House believed that Col. Deeds would do all that he said he would do it appropriated a billion dollars for aviation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That which Col. Deeds had to do with amounted to $640,000,000, and he never put a fighting plane into France, yet the Secretary of War appeared delighted.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The Secretary of War is too honest and intelligent to be really delighted.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The Secretary of War is an intelligent man and seems to know the business of the department.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks to extend his time five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In other words, the gentleman will not forget in discussing a matter of this kind, and which comes up from the Bureau of Standards, which is really doing efficient work for the Government, that when we were in the midst of a great war, when we had thousands of young fighters and aviators in France waiting for American machines for which Congress appropriated $640,000,000, the boys did not get the machines.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The Hughes report, subsequently approved by the Attorney General, should have caused Col. Deeds to do one of two things—to waive immunity, go before a grand jury and tell all he knows or blow his brains out.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is still harsh. The Secretary of War whitewashed Col. Deeds, holding him to be a very creditable officer.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Let us not whitewash this item.

Mr. BUTLER. Who is Col. Deeds?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. He is the head of the Delco Lighting system, I believe.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is the company that Col. Deeds is interested in the same company that Secretary of War Baker's brother was interested in, or are they two different companies?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think the gentleman will find that Secretary Baker's brother was exonerated. He is eliminated from this discussion. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] attained a record in aviation of which he should be proud, and all Congress was proud of him while he was fighting in an Italian machine over in Austria, and I thought it fair to consider in his statement of facts, that Congress had performed its duty toward the aviators, that it had appropriated $640,000,000 to provide for the American boys, and that it was lost largely through mismanagement.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Congress was generous, but the Packard Co. got the fruits of the generosity. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARIA. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Was the commendation of the Secretary of War after the investigation of Col. Deeds?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It was.

Mr. HARDY. The gentleman does not know whether the Secretary of War was cognizant of all the facts?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am confident that the President was not cognizant of all the facts when he granted executive clemency. It was hardly fair to ask the President in those trying days. He was the busiest man in this country.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I can answer the gentleman from Texas in a few words. A gentleman by the name of Borglum presented certain charges to the President of the United States which the President did not fully indorse. The President apparently did not want to involve the Nation in any scandal. But Mr. Borglum was a very persistent person, and insisted that there were certain gentlemen concerned in aviation who were working for their own benefit. The President appointed Justice Hughes——

Mr. HARDY. I know all those facts.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The President appointed former Justice Hughes as the head of a committee to investigate——

Mr. HARDY. The gentleman is not answering my question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And that committee discovered that a vast amount of money had been expended, but not for combat planes in France.

Mr. HARDY. Oh, I think the gentleman has told us that himself three or four times.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then Justice Hughes came along with his report, in which he recommended that Col. Deeds be court-martialed. That report went to Mr. Gregory, the Attorney General, and the Attorney General sustained the report of Justice Hughes and said yes, Col. Deeds ought to be court-martialed——

Mr. HARDY. Has not the gentleman told us that before?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And that went to the War Department, and the War Department finally whitewashed Col. Deeds, with the sanction of the Secretary of War. Subsequently they gave Col. Deeds a dinner, and they all got around the table and sang "For he's a jolly good fellow," and that was the end of our $640,000,000. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I want to say this in reply to the gentleman's amendment, that the purpose of this board is to continue the scientific investigations in connection with aviation. The result of the continuance of that simply means this: That instead of the Army having an investigation of its own and the Navy having an investigation of its own, and the Bureau of Standards a scientific investigation, under this board which has been appointed, representatives of each of these services being on the board, this investigation will be continued. The board asked for an appropriation of $325,000 for the next year, and the committee has recommended in the bill an appropriation of $175,000. That will enable the board to go on with this investigation in order to devise means which will best adapt aeroplanes to civil purposes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Can the chairman of the committee give us any assurance that by the adoption of this section of the bill providing for this appropriation, it will cut off the experiment in the War Department and in the Navy Department and in the marine department? The gentleman will remember that in the military appropriation bill they asked for $10,000,000 for just this character of work.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Not for this character of work, because that question was specifically asked of the officials, Admiral Taylor and other representatives of the departments, and it is in connection with scientific investigation of air currents and things of that kind, which should be investigated, if we are to develop this particular branch of the service. It is in the line of concentrating this work instead of having money spent by each bureau and in line with what the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia] desires.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. The gentleman knows that I am entirely in sympathy with concentrating this work.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. This is a good start. To do the work that the gentleman indicates $175,000 is not a drop in the bucket. They need at least $5,000,000 to carry out this work. We have given $15,000,000 to the Navy——

Mr. BUTLER. How many millions to the Navy?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Fifteen million dollars.

We took ten off, and $15,000,000 to the Army. They are going to do this work. As I said the other day, when the postal bill was under consideration, we have got to starve these people into reason, and by cutting out the appropriation they will get together and stop this opposition that exists between the Army and the Navy and the Post Office Department.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The appropriations to which the gentleman refers were not for this specific purpose—scientific investigation—and the result of defeating this would simply mean that in addition to these appropriations now provided for the Army and the Navy and the Post Office Service we would have an additional bureau for scientific investigation in each one of them, and this is really in line with economy.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Does not the gentleman think that out of $30,000,000 they could devote a part to carrying on that work, at least $175,000?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It would not be done, because it was not asked for that purpose. It is not included in their request.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to heckle the gentleman, but I desire him to answer me this question. Will this enable the two military forces to do away with their appropriations for such purposes? Will these people be able to do that work?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. For scientific investigation. There is no reason why this board should not concentrate this work, but it would not enable them to do away with investigation under the $10,000,000 or $15,000,000, which may have been for constructive purposes.

Mr. BUTLER. But for the purpose set out in this paragraph?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The purpose of it is to do that.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Is not the purpose of this appropriation for scientific investigation that is common to all branches of the service, whether the Army, or the Navy, or the Post Office Department, or commercial, or any other?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Exactly, the gentleman has correctly stated the proposition.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say just a word about this. I hold no brief for the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, but the reason given by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGuardia] for striking this out seems to me not to be one which would justify that action. He says he is very anxious to create a unified air service, and, therefore, he wants to hitch all of the various air services which may exist in the Government in order to force them some day to accept his viewpoint—a viewpoint as to the wisdom of which there has been a great deal of controversy, not only here but in England and other countries where they have air service. For my part I am not very much concerned about creating an independent, additional service to grow to be as big and as expensive as the Army and the Navy service.

But this particular work of this board, which was created in order to deal with scientific matters that related to air navigation, did not pertain particularly to the Army or the Navy or any special phase of air navigation, but the whole problem. Now, it may be that its work does not justify its existence. If that be so the committee can strike it out, but to say you want to strike it out for the purpose of forcing somebody to come to a conclusion that we ought to have a unified air service seems to me to be following a predilection instead of a reason. These people are in touch with scientists in regard to a great many developments in connection with the air service and with the knowledge of the air and the currents of air, with problems that are truly scientific as contradistinguished from problems of construction and of type. That is the reason they came into existence; that is the reason they are urging for continuing in existence.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Can the gentleman give one specific scientific problem that was solved by this board during the time of its existence?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not know that I could give it offhand, but I think they could give quite a few; but if the gentleman is opposing it on the ground that the work is inefficient and therefore they have no reason to exist, all right; but when a gentleman states his reason is because he is going to take a crack at everything related to aviation until he can force what he believes to be an ideal unified air service I disagree with him.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. But the gentleman will agree that we want to stop waste and produce something?

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, I think I have spent some little time since I have been a Member of the House in trying to stop waste.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Can the gentleman inform me if this committee has constructed a wind tunnel as yet?

Mr. SHERLEY. They have not, I think——

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Have they absolutely anything to show in two years——

Mr. SHERLEY. They are now building that wind tunnel. They have been doing work, they have got a very small one, and they are building a large one, but they have done work with the small one. Now, we have the hearings and reports, and if the gentleman wants it I will be glad to turn them over to him so he can go into the report of the details as to their expenditures. Then after the gentleman has read that carefully, knowing he is an authority on the matter, if he will come back and say their work is absolutely worthless, I, for my part, will vote with him.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. I will say this, we have more reports and more papers on aviation in this country and less to show for it than any country in the world.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is probably true, and probably one reason is that people do not read them. I suggest that the gentleman read this particular one and give it the benefit of his special knowledge on the subject, and I am perfectly sincere in saying to him that if he says the work they are doing and have done is worthless I will agree with him to vote to strike it out. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. LAGUARDIA) there were—ayes 4, noes 17.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

ROCK CREEK AND POTOMAC PARKWAY COMMISSION.

To enable the commission created by section 22 of the public buildings act approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stats. L., p. 885), to continue proceedings toward the acquisition of lands required for a connecting parkway between Potomac Park, the Zoological Park, and Rock Creek Park, $250,000, to be available until expended and to be payable one-half out of the Treasury of the United States and one-half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia: Provided, That the total area of lands finally to be acquired for said parkway shall not exceed the area and parcels described and delineated in the map No. 2, contained in House Document No. 1114 of the Sixty-fourth Congress, first session: Provided further, That the expenditure of the funds appropriated herein shall be subject to all the conditions imposed by the sundry civil appropriation act approved July 1, 1916.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Page 43, line 14, after the word "Park," strike out "$250,000" and insert "$150,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, there is a chance for the House to save a few cents.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington) there were—ayes 8, noes 22.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the subcommittee where this land is to be acquired?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It connects Rock Creek Park with Potomac Park, following and going under the Connecticut Avenue Bridge up to Georgetown, and joins the Potomac Park there.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Well, is there any particular street or road involved? It speaks of a connecting parkway. I would like to know whether there is any particular street there?

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, he will recall that several years ago there was a detailed report made as to the area to be embraced in this connecting link of the two parkways, and that was approved by the Congress and a small appropriation made. From year to year the commissioners and the people in Washington have urged that this work ought to be more rapidly pushed and this desirable connection be had at an earlier date, but the committee has felt that while it was desirable to go forward and not abandon a project that meets the approval of Congress and of those acquainted with it, that we ought not to go forward too rapidly, and we have carried a small sum from year to year with the idea that as fast as the property could be properly acquired at the figures set in the report that the money might be available. It is not a new scheme. I will say to the gentleman; it is one that has been thoroughly thrashed out and authorized, and it is simply a part of the general park scheme of the city of Washington.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Is there any reason on earth why we could not wait a few years when we are appropriating all this money? Have not these people got enough parks?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think there is no good reason why we should refuse to make any sort of appropriation. The matter was authorized a number of years ago. The advocates of it believe we have been very slow as it is. And this commission has been making very careful inquiries into values and securing options within the price that was fixed in order to avoid condemnation proceedings. It is simply a question of policy. If the Congress wants to stop all sort of park work, this as well as other park work could stop. But I do not think the committee has been extravagant in its recommendations. I think we have been very conservative in connection with it, and after five years the extent of expenditure on this work seems to me to have been very moderate.

Now, that is simply a matter of judgment. The gentleman can say whether he believes we ought to stop any part of the development or not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I say this, that I doubt if we will ever be able to give the people of the District of Columbia anywhere near enough parks to satisfy them as long as they have real estate to sell.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think that may be true; but I do not think because you can not satisfy the unreasonable people that you should not satisfy the reasonable ones. I am not being controlled in my judgment because somebody wants to do something that is extreme and absurd. The park problem has been carefully considered and approved by Congress.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will.

Mr. TILSON. Are we protected in any way from abnormal rise in the price of this land we must have, or is there any assurance that we shall be able to get hold of all this land that is necessary in due time except at an exorbitant figure?

Mr. SHERLEY. There is a limit of cost, as I recall it, of $1,300,000, and the purchases that have been made have been made on the average lower than the assessment and estimate upon which that limit of cost was made.

Mr. TILSON. Is there anything to prevent a holdup on any part of this line up and down Rock Creek that would prevent us from paying an exorbitant figure for it?

Mr. SHERLEY. We have a right to condemn, and I have to assume that the gentlemen who were carrying out the authorization in the act of Congress are protecting the Government, and each year when they make purchases out of the moneys that have been appropriated for it we make careful inquiries as to the price at which they have taken the options and the money that has been spent.

Mr. TILSON. I think that we ought to have it, and I was just wondering if we were protected against exorbitant prices.

Mr. SHERLEY. The Secretary of War, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of the Treasury are on the commission, and while it is true that they necessarily rely on Col. Ridley, or who happens to be the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, I do not know anything that would warrant the belief that this money is not being spent for property at its fair and proper value.

Mr. TILSON. How much has been appropriated?

Mr. SHERLEY. In 1917, $50,000; in 1918, $100,000; in 1919, $150,000. That would make $300,000.

Mr. TILSON. And this would make $550,000?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Can the gentleman inform the House the average price per acre for this land in the past?

Mr. SHERLEY. I wish we could buy it on an acre basis.

Mr. KNUTSON. It is not fit for building purposes or agricultural purposes. All it is good for is park purposes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think the gentleman is mistaken as to a part of that. A part of it is fit for building, and it was because it was not wanted to have it built up that this parkway plan was approved.

Now, I simply submit to the House that here is a project that had the very careful consideration of a previous Congress. The price that it should cost was determined upon after a very elaborate investigation. I personally made two fights against including in this area land which I did not think was necessary, and which the commission voted against, but which various people wanted to put in. They have not succeeded. Whether they will in the future or not I do not know. But I do believe in the Nation's Capital it is proper to connect the Potomac Driveway with Rock Creek Park; and while I am not willing ever to spend any money for any property at a false value, I think the history of park development in the cities of America will bear out the general statement that the mistakes that have been made in acquiring park areas have been mistakes because of the refusal of a community to go forward, and if they had gone forward in a bolder way in the beginning the cost would have been very much less to the community. I am personally in favor of parks for cities. I favor this driveway.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman will admit that a great deal of this——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KNUTSON. I dare say that 75 per cent of the land in Rock Creek Park would be designated as waste land out in the West. I do not know about the East.

Mr. SHERLEY. That may be.

Mr. KNUTSON. It is fit for nothing but park purposes.

Mr. SHERLEY. It might be perfectly proper to condemn it as waste land situated there, but not proper to designate it as waste land situated here.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman will agree that land that is not fit for anything but park purposes is partly waste land.

Mr. SHERLEY. I say that land that is fit for park purposes in a community is far from being waste land. It is a question as to what the gentleman considers waste. I do not believe man lives by bread alone, and I believe there is scriptural warrant for that belief.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the discussion just had indicates how easy it is to criticize the committee with limited or partial knowledge of a subject. Six years ago the Congress determined to buy more of the land between the Zoo and the Potomac River along Rock Creek, with a view of extending the Rock Creek Park to the Potomac and improving that parkway, so that there would be a continuous park from the head of Rock Creek to the end of the peninsula of East Potomac Park. One million three hundred thousand dollars was placed as the limit of cost. That is six years ago.

Of course when Congress determined to take those lands over they were no longer useful; they were no longer salable for ordinary purposes. For six years we have been holding the owners of those lands in a position where they could not dispose of their holdings. We certainly are not likely to secure the lands any more cheaply by reason of holding them year after year out of use. Some of the lands are usable for residence purposes, and some of them have been used for those purposes. But having entered upon the development of this park we should carry it forward as rapidly as may be consistent with the interests of the Treasury and other activities. We have gone very slowly up to this time. In six years we have appropriated $300,000.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Have you bought in occasional tracts or have you tried to buy as you go?

Mr. MONDELL. The commission handling the matter has bought tracts as they could buy at what they considered reasonable prices, and up to date they have purchased what they have purchased for something less than the assessed value; a little below the assessed value. Of course the commission has not started at one end or the other end and refused to buy any property that was offered unless they could buy all of the property in the section. That would not be a wise policy. We are obliged to purchase all that property. We can condemn all or any part of the property at any time, but it is not wise to condemn unless it becomes necessary. In the meantime it is wise to buy here, there, or elsewhere any tract that is offered at what is considered a reasonable price within the limit of cost.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. What are the prospects of our getting a sufficient amount as would make a physical connection between Potomac Park, so that we can get a road between them in the near future?

Mr. MONDELL. I think we could buy most of the property now at a reasonable price if we were to appropriate the money for it. A million dollars was asked for this work this year.

That is for the purchase of land and improvement. The committee limited the amount to $250,000, and yet certain gentlemen who are not fully informed on the subject think the committee is subject to criticism for having gone that far.

Mr. TILSON. I should rather think it would be the other way.

Mr. MONDELL. I think perhaps the committee should be criticized for not having gone further in this matter.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Has not the gentleman noticed that that park road is already marked on the map and needs only to be reworked in order to make connection between the two points?

Mr. MONDELL. We can not, of course, make any improvements on the park until we have acquired all the land. The gentleman will realize that, and after the sum contained in this bill is appropriated, $750,000 will have to be appropriated before we begin to improve the park. If we appropriate further at the rate in this bill it will take four years to secure the land. It seems to me we are not moving along too rapidly. As a matter of fact we are subject to some criticism that we are not moving more rapidly, in view of the fact that only half of this money is to come out of the Federal Treasury, the other half coming out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SHIPPING BOARD.

For five commissioners, at $7,500 each; secretary, $5,000; in all, $42,500.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, no subject is so fraught with concern for the United States at the present time as that of the construction of ships and the transportation of troops and supplies. We want to get our boys home. Therefore we ought to have ship bottoms in which to bring them. We want to transport American products. Therefore we ought to have sufficient ships.

But one of the difficulties at this time arises from the fact that we are not yet ready with American ships to do our business as it ought to be done. That is one reason why our boys are lingering on the other side when they ought to be home. Another reason for delay is that much space that might be utilized in carrying this human freight is devoted to carrying supplies for the people on the other side of the water.

We passed an appropriation here recently evincing the friendly disposition of the Congress of the United States toward the people in distress abroad. It carried $100,000,000 for food supplies. I presume Mr. Hoover will be authorized to spend that money. A few days ago we passed another bill, which proposed to make good the President's guaranty of the food price that involved, or is supposed to involve before we get through with it, a billion dollars—certainly an evidence of our desire to do the right thing—and this apart from the fact that we have involved ourselves more deeply in obligations and indebtedness than the people of the United States have ever been involved before, in order to show good faith with the people on the other side.

I hope Mr. Hurley may be able to make good on his shipping program. Sometimes I question whether he will. There is a controversy now between Mr. Hurley and the marine insurance companies of the United States. While some of us have been thinking for a long time that the preference was in favor of foreign bottoms as against American shipping, Mr. Hurley, who was abroad and fraternizing with our allies and their shipping masters, appears to have come to the conclusion that some preference has been given by marine insurance companies to our foreign competitors. That controversy is now pending.

Mr. Chairman, I believe in protecting the United States. I believe in protecting the industries of the United States. I wish we had shipping enough on our own account to take care of the business of the United States, but notwithstanding our expenditures it appears we have not. We have appropriated millions, hundreds of millions, yea, billions of dollars to build ships during the war. We do not yet have the ships. We are making all kinds of dickers with foreign nations concerning ships. We have been told that our shipping expenses have grown so great that rather than account for them in ships the president of the Shipping Board is going to wipe out $1,000,000,000 that we have appropriated for the purpose of constructing ships. That may have gone into the "know-how," it may have gone into wasteful fields, it may have been extravagantly spent, it may have been spent under pressure of war without the results that we have expected in peace times. I know not, but the story is that we are wiping out $1,000,000,000 of the money we have appropriated for this purpose by mere departmental edict.

On Washington's Birthday in Paris there was a dinner attended by a number of Americans, some very distinguished men. They were over there speaking for us, telling the people on the other side of the water what they thought we ought to do, notwithstanding the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations recently brought in a very large deficiency bill, and notwithstanding that we shall come in from the Ways and Means Committee to-morrow with another bill to provide for another $7,000,000,000 to take care of our friends on the other side of the water as well as ourselves. These Americans on the other side, some of them official and some not—what do they say by way of pledging the Congress of the United States to do certain things? Oh, they get very philanthropic. They have broad ideas. They visualize the world. There are no limitations to their eloquence nor to their promises.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent that my time may be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. One of the gentlemen at this dinner was Mr. Herbert Hoover, a gentleman who normally lives in England, whose home is in Kensington, London, but who has been given great credence by the President of the United States and who has attained a world-wide celebrity because of his charitable and philanthropic disposition. He is a man of extraordinary ability. We concede all that; but he is like a number of other gentlemen who, when they have the power to dispense other people's money, are extremely liberal. Hence $100,000,000 for food-supply administration in the United States. And another $100,000,000 to keep up the work and another $100,000,000 to spend in Europe. And, incidental to it all, but greater than it all, $100,000,000,000 to guarantee the food prices in the United States, which in the last analysis means we must either keep up the price to the consumer in the United States, when the price is reduced one-half abroad, or the Treasury of the United States, which means taxes paid by the people of the United States, must make up the difference. We passed that billion-dollar bill the other day. It is hung up in another body. It may stay there indefinitely. I do not know. But here is what Mr. Hoover, in the exuberance of after-dinner oratory, suggests that we of the United States should do:

Before the war—

he says—

the supply of food in Europe was sufficient to last six months. But European production was never at such a low ebb as at present.

He presents a beautiful picture for us.

It has practically stopped. The situation, however, is not desperate.

Oh, it may be that some people are begging for food in New York, as was stated on this floor a little while ago. It may be that returning soldiers in uniform who have reached New York are penniless and without food, but Mr. Hoover says the situation in Europe is "not desperate."

Conflicting ideas, we hope, will be removed, and that the good, common sense which helped the father of our country to conduct the destinies of our country through troublous times will enable his successor—

That is our present President, who is coming home to-day——

Mr. BUTLER. He is home already.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. He is home already. I accept the amendment—will enable his successor—

Woodrow Wilson—

to help guide the world out of its present predicament.

Get the full force of that. George Washington, the Father of his Country, is applauded by Herbert Hoover, but equal or greater applause goes to that modern President of the United States who is "to help guide the world out of its present predicament." That is the job set for the Congress of the United States if it supports the President of the United States as Mr. Hoover interprets it. We are to "help the world out of its predicament." We have got into a pretty big predicament ourselves, and we will be generations, aye, centuries getting out of the predicament in which we find ourselves now, and into which we will go deeper to-morrow when we pass this new $7,000,000,000 bond bill. But the Hoover picture comes in from Paris and is spread abroad over the world to illustrate the altruism of our people, who are to labor and starve in order that the whole world, which has had trouble from the beginning, is to be helped out of its predicament. That is the job Mr. Hoover sets down for us.

But he is not the only one. Our returning ambassador, Mr. Sharp, formerly a Member of this House, for whom we all have high personal respect, followed Mr. Hoover in this discussion. What did he say? Ah, here is the feeling that is being spread over Europe as to the duty of the United States with regard to this foreign situation:

All jealousy—

says Mr. Sharp—

should disappear between nations. Food is needed badly in certain countries. The question which should be uppermost in the statesmen's minds should be to carry food where it is needed. No feelings—

That is, no feelings about this future indebtedness, no feelings of our predicament, no feelings about the soldier boys we have contributed—should be expressed because certain countries, owing to circumstances and transportation facilities—

Referring to our shipping which we have not got—are able to float foodstuffs more promptly, thereby reaping quicker benefits than the others.

That is to say, that if England can float foodstuffs quicker than we can and profit thereby we are not to complain. No; they are to have their way and we are to bear the burden.

The end alone—

Continues the ambassador—the American ambassador—must be considered, and this is helping needy brothers.

Yes; go on, ye men at the hoe, ye men at the harrow, ye men at the plow, ye men at the mill, ye men at the factory in the United States, go on. It is your duty to plod forever and forever, to tax yourselves with burden upon burden, in order that this altruistic dream may be made good.

We are to go on striving to help our needy brothers—those from every clime, of every color, of every race, no matter how many centuries they have fought with each other nor how intricate and difficult their problems. We must all strive. Our Americans are striving through the ambassador toward a better world, without envy or jealousy. It is the duty levied upon us. And such is the dream of several of our great leaders, several of our great national figures, and supporting them are headlines on the front pages of metropolitan newspapers teaching us to be patient, to be generous, to pursue our daily labors, in order that the world may be relieved of it troubles.

Just how does it work in practice? Here is an everyday letter from a practical everyday business concern, the N. & G. Taylor Co., of Philadelphia, which sets out that the War Industries Board of the United States, made up of dollar-a-year men during the war, fixed the price of tin plate in the United States at somewhere about 72½. The world price has gone down to 54, and we are holding the price up against our own people. Shall we continue to permit our competitors to make tin plate, while we attempt to keep in the running at extravagant figures and furnish them food besides. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert some of these letters in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to insert letters in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We passed a billion-dollar food-guaranty bill the other day.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. Is not the gentleman aware that he is inviting and subjecting himself to the charge of being a little American because he is speaking of American rights?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; but I have no fear of being called a little American when I stand on the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. But will they hold you up?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think they will. I think enough people remain in the United States to sustain American principles. I think when we show them that the hand of every other fellow is down to his elbow in our pockets, taking away from us to enrich themselves, we can make them understand it. I think when we come to show that our house has been invaded, our domesticity has been disturbed, our homes and factories have been gutted, and that others are reaping the benefit of it we can bring them back to their senses.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent to proceed with the reading of this letter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to finish the reading of the letter.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Reserving the right to object, how long is the letter.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It will not take over five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARDY. Can not the gentleman save time by putting it in the RECORD?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert these letters in the RECORD. That is what I want to do. They will speak for themselves.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman already has that permission.

The letters are as follows:

TIN-PLATE MEN COMPLAIN.

N. & G. TAYLOR CO. (INC.),
MANUFACTURERS OF TIN PLATE,
Philadelphia, January 9, 1919.

Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE, Representative,
Washington, D. C.

Subject: Arbitrary action of War Industries Board in connection with the pig tin situation.

DEAR SIR: The pig tin committee of the War Industries Board arranged in an interallied agreement for the purchase of a quota of pig tin for this country. All arrangements were distinctly a war measure, and a quantity of pig tin was bought, on the authority of the War Industries Board, for American consumers, and the medium through which this pig tin was brought to this country was the Steel Products Co. (the export end of the United States Steel Corporation).

We are led to believe that the questionnaire sent out by the War Industries Board, and the data secured by them, were neither complete nor thorough, and, based on certain incomplete figures which they procured, they proceeded to buy for this country from 10,000 to 12,000 tons of Straits pig tin at a Government cost to the consumer of 72½ cents per pound. With the cessation of hostilities—in fact, prior to that—the open-market price of pig tin started to fall, and the present open-market price is something less than 54 cents, as against a Government monopoly price of 72½ cents.

The War Industries Board insists that the American consumers be forced to use this 72½-cent pig tin, and consume the entire quantity before they will allow the American consumers to benefit by the open-market price of the world. In other words, the consumer has to carry the burden, and it is this very un-American plan of forced monopoly, insisted on by Mr. Armsby, that we wish to call to your attention as a serious menace to our industry.

We are asked to compete with the tin-plate markets of the world for export trade. The British manufacturers have access to lower costs of pig tin; the American manufacturer has not. When pig tin was being bought at 72½ cents the fixed price of finished tin plate was $7.75. The Government insists on holding up the cost of the raw material to 72½ cents, and has allowed the price of the finished tin plate to go to $7.35.

We believe that the purchase of these 10,000 tons of pig tin through the United States Steel Products Co. should be looked on as a war measure. No longer is need evident for tin regulation, and the sooner a free market is established the better. The logical solution is to let down at once the bars on imports. The loss incurred on the tin now held by the Steel Products Co. should be charged to profit and loss account of the war, and not be borne as a burden by the American manufacturer.

No redress is seemingly to be secured through the War Industries Board, who naturally are loath to go to Congress and ask for the assumption on the part of the Government of the four or five million dollars represented by the difference between the cost of the pig tin they bought and the present market. We have had letters from a number of tin-plate manufacturers agreeing with our position, and we urge you to give your attention to this situation, which has been given considerable publicity in the trade papers, noticeably, the authority on the subject, the American Metal Market, published by Charles S. Trench, editor, New York City, who would be very glad to give you such further data as you might require.

The injustice of the situation is so apparent that we beg your careful consideration and action.

Very truly, yours,

N. & G. TAYLOR CO. (INC.),
WILLIAM W. JUSTICE, Jr.,
Vice President.

COMPETITION IN WHEAT PRODUCTS.

Operating the only automatic pretzel plants in the world. Capacity 16,000,000 pounds per annum.

AMERICAN PRETZEL COMPANY,
Philadelphia, Pa., February 10, 1919.

Congressman J. HAMPTON MOORE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: On behalf of myself and others among your constituents I am writing to call your attention to the guaranteed price on wheat and sugar obtaining in this country and the injury this may bring to the American manufacturers brought in competition with South America and Europe.

Unless the Government places a high tariff on the imported product and allows a draw-back on exporting, the baker can not hope to compete with European manufacturers. Under normal conditions the cracker bakers of England were able to sell large quantities of crackers in this country. Under present conditions they could come over here and undersell any cracker baker in the United States.

This alone is a most serious matter but when combined with the high taxes proposed for 1918–19 would tend to be disastrous to the cracker baking industry.

Flour and sugar are the principal raw materials used by the cracker bakers and if they are forced to pay a minimum price as high as existed during war times they will have difficulty in carrying on their business when the price of other foodstuffs is permitted to be responsive to the laws of supply and demand.

Asking that you give this your serious consideration, we are,

Yours, very truly,

AMERICAN PRETZEL COMPANY.

CAPTURING THE AUTO TRADE.

From the Barley Motor Car Co., Kalamazoo, Mich., comes the following letter from its agent in London, England:

"So that you may be absolutely conversant with the situation here and will not expect the impossible, I am going to outline to you just what is happening here at the present moment.

"As you know the Government controls all importations; motor cars are on the prohibited list and can only be imported on special licenses. My customers have been trying now for six weeks to get a license but so far without success. I called at the Government department dealing with the matter myself and found that they were not prepared to make any statement as to when the prohibition on motor cars would be withdrawn. It is strongly rumored, however, that the Government intends to continue this prohibition in force for at least a year and possibly two years, as by law they can control imports for three years after peace is signed.

"The policy of the Government in power is to exclude all American manufactured articles either by absolute prohibition or by a high tariff. While, of course, the regulations are not aimed at America especially, we all know that America is the only country which will be affected, because we are the only people who are in position to supply. Of course you can not blame the British for wanting to give their industries a chance to get on their feet before being subjected to our competition, but, on the other hand, it is mighty poor return for our assistance in winning the war to do everything possible to eliminate us from England and the British colonial markets and this is just what is being done.

"It is not necessary now to get export licenses for practically anything unless they go to countries bordering on Germany. In other words, the whole scheme is 'speed up English exports and block American imports.' This is the policy of the Government as far as I can find out. There is, however, a strong body of opinion in this country, including the Labor Party, which feel that a high protective tariff would be a disaster for the country and I do not think the Government are going to have it all their own way in dealing with the matter. Nobody knows what to do or how to act until the policy of the Government is determined, consequently all propositions which are based on supplies from America are hanging fire for the moment until Parliament meets after the first of the year and we know where we are at. The situation in France is very much the same.

"It is quite possible that we may do a very fine business in England; on the other hand it is equally possible that it will be out of the question to get a single car into this country for some time to come.

"I have followed the situation very carefully and I think the above is a fair outline of the position as it exists at the moment.

"I was told the other day by a manufacturer that he had been approached by a representative of the British ministry of munitions, who submitted to him an article now being made in the United States. He was asked if he could make it, and on his replying that he could he was told that if he would manufacture on a quantity basis the Government would see that none were allowed to be imported from America. As the manufacturer told me this himself, and as it is quite likely they will do it with others if they will do it with one, it gives a better idea of the situation than any other instance I have run across.

"As I said before, if conditions will allow it we are sure to do a good business on Roamer cars and chassis, as the market is starved for cars and could easily absorb all the cars which could be made in this country under the most favorable conditions for the next five years. The British Isles have approximately one-half the population of the United States but they only have one-twentieth as many cars in use. This gives an idea as to the capacity of the market when given full freedom of development.

"I have written you at some length because I do not want you to be disappointed if nothing matures."

COAL-TRADE SHIPPING.

THE WHOLESALE COAL TRADE ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK (INC.),
New York, February 8, 1919.

DEAR SIR: You and your constituents are interested in developing the foreign trade of this country.

This is being restricted by the governmental control of bottoms which may be used for that purpose.

This is true with respect to all lines of business, but especially as to coal.

Will you give your consideration to the inclosed resolution and lend the weight of your influence by indorsing it in a personal interview with or letter to the Shipping Board?

Respectfully, yours,

CHAS. S. ALLEN, Secretary.

Whereas the armistice has checked the movement of our armies and munitions across the ocean and has thereby released a large number of vessels for commercial purposes; and

Whereas the past and present restrictions and regulations on shipping present great difficulties to the exporter and have led to the loss of much business in the past, and will continue to do so: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Wholesale Coal Trade Association of New York that all vessels not actually required for the movement of troops, munitions, and present food supplies be forthwith returned to private ownership and control, to the end that the usual view of supply and demand be given full operation and business be once more reinstated on a normal basis.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words in connection with the appropriation made for the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and I do it because the amounts are so large that I am not willing that the House should pass them without consideration. Before undertaking to tell you something of the amounts of money that have been appropriated heretofore for the Emergency Fleet Corporation and the amount of $660,000,000 carried in this bill, I desire to call attention to the situation that confronted the Congress in the past and that now confronts it in connection with the emergency shipping fund.

Members will recall the situation that confronted the world, and confronted America, in connection with shipping as a result of the German submarine warfare, and it is important that we should remember these matters in considering what is reported to the committee now and what has been done in the past.

One great cry that went up all over the world from the leading nations fighting Germany was for ships. There were many anxious weeks and anxious months when men wondered whether the combined energy of the world would be sufficient to produce ships as fast as the submarines of the Germans were destroying them. And unless we could reduce the destruction or increase our output to more than make it good, it was apparent that it was only a question of time when Germany would be successful in her war. Therefore pressure was brought to bear all over the world, and particularly in this country after our entrance into the war, for the building of ships, ships, and more ships. The very large authorizations that were made in connection with the shipping program were made in the last sundry civil bill, although there had been prior to that a sum authorized to be expended in shipping construction that was way beyond anything that this country had ever dreamed of putting into shipbuilding.

Last May the Shipping Board came before the Committee on Appropriations with a program as of date April 30, which called for a very great enlargement of the building and requisition program, a program that contemplated the acquiring of about 18,300,448 dead-weight tons of shipping by requisition, purchase, and construction; this total embracing steel, wood, and concrete ships numbering 3,425, at a cost for the ships only then estimated at $3,423,713,218.

It is well to recall that in March the great German drive started. It continued for many weeks. There were days and days here when we wondered whether the next day's news might not show us a complete breaking of the allies' lines and the taking of the channel ports and the capture of Paris. Everybody realized what either of those events must mean to the allied cause. So it was that the American program for the movement of troops, and consequently for ships, underwent a very great expansion. As a result of that expansion officials of the Fleet Corporation came to Congress and asked for very large additional sums in cash and in authorizations particularly as to troop ships. Congress voted those sums. It voted them without division. There was not a man in Congress as I recall, House or Senate, who ever challenged the wisdom of voting those huge sums, and I doubt if any man who had undertaken to very seriously oppose the appropriation of those sums would have been in very great favor with the people of America. He would likely have been burned in effigy, if nothing worse happened to him, and that was because of a then tremendous, pressing, compelling need that the people of America recognized and proposed to supply, no matter if it did cost billions of dollars. We voted the Emergency Fleet Corporation these huge sums, and it went ahead to carry out that program. How efficiently and how economically it was carried out is another story, and a story that can not be told here in five minutes, or 10 minutes, or in an hour's speech, and a story concerning which we probably have not sufficient data now to fully arrive at a correct conclusion. That there has been great extravagance, and that there has been great waste in many, many particulars, I have not the slightest doubt, and I do not think the country has the slightest doubt. As to how far the costs could have been reduced is a question about which men will differ. There were many things that served to increase the cost. The labor situation in the country was anything but ideal, and we did not have the skilled people to carry out such a program as this. From the standpoint of economy, such a program could not have been justified. The only justification that can possibly be made for the size of the program for shipbuilding that this country undertook was the need from a military and national standpoint that I have tried very briefly to portray. No nation could suddenly undertake to expand its shipbuilding industry to the extent that we undertook to do it and hope to accomplish it economically and efficiently, but there were a lot of things that we had to do in those days of stress when we could not count the cost and this was one of them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. We have authorized in previous bills an expenditure of $3,903,500,000 in the way of ship construction and those things that were related to it; $2,884,000,000 was for building ships ourselves—I mean as contradistinguished from requisitioning ships that other people were building or had built in the country at the time we entered upon this program; $515,000,000 was for the payment for requisitioned ships, built or building, for which contracts existed, which the Government proposed to take over; $150,000,000 was for the purchase of ships other than those so requisitioned; $55,000,000 was for purchase of ships constructed in foreign yards; $122,000,000 was for the acquisition of establishments or plants in connection with building of ships; $75,000,000 was for housing in connection with the workers in the shipyards; and $65,000,000 was for operation of ships. It was to create a working fund in connection with those operations. Twenty million dollars was to help transportation systems in connection with the movement of workers to the plants engaged in shipbuilding, and $17,500,000 was for recruiting, training, and instructing officers and crews. This makes up the total amount of authorizations, including cash, that was voted from time to time in connection with the shipbuilding program.

As to the construction of ships, we have heretofore appropriated $1,938,451,000, and there is carried as one of the items about to be read in this bill $549,653,254, which will make total appropriations made in what is spoken of as the ship construction item of the program of $2,488,104,254. That is $395,895,746 less than the amount that we have authorized the President to obligate the Government for.

A gentleman said to me, "The Appropriations Committee seems to have been pretty liberal with the moneys it is recommending for the Emergency Fleet Corporation for shipbuilding." I said to him, "The committee has practically no option"; and that is what I want to bring to the attention of the House, so that if the House does not in any way agree with the committee it may indicate its disagreement by its motions and its votes.

We are carrying this money as part of the obligation that we authorized—I say we, the Congress authorized—the President to incur in connection with shipbuilding. Now, the need of this money and the need of some three hundred and odd millions that will have to be appropriated subsequently, if the program goes through as now outlined, is predicated upon the amount of money that we will have to pay for the ships that have been built and are building and those that it is proposed to have the keels laid and to complete and it represents what is the judgment of the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation as the extent to which their shipbuilding program that they have entered upon could be reduced by cancellation. Now, I do not know whether they could reduce economically more by cancellation than they have, and I do not know how I possibly can find out, because I have not the opportunity now nor have I personal information that would warrant me in coming to a judgment as contradistinguished from their own. They testify that they have undertaken to cancel all contracts that they could cancel with a real saving to the Government. You will realize that probably as to every ship that is proposed to be built and where the keels are not laid there has been an expenditure of from 30 to 35 per cent, roughly speaking, in materials that have been assembled and that have been ordered and which must be assembled prior to the laying of the keel.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It has been said to me that these ships we are building now and for which the keels are being laid and construction started could be bought cheaper if we bought them from English and French shipyards than we can build them ourselves. What does the gentleman think about that?

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, I do not know, except I am satisfied that you could not buy them from England, and I know you could not buy any of them in France, because the French have not the yards and would like to buy ships in America. I doubt very much if England is going to sell us any ships for a number of years to come.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Is this true, that the construction of these ships is costing a great deal more per ton than it is costing to build like ships in English and French yards?

Mr. SHERLEY. I would say it is unquestionably true it is costing more for us to build ships than in England and always has, except perhaps as to a limited number of a given type of ship that were built on the Great Lakes, where we have standardized to a point that it probably would cost us about what a similar type of an English-built ship would cost.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Here is the question in my mind——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Here is the question I am trying to get at in all good faith. If it costs so much more to build these ships than it costs the foreign shipbuilders, how can we expect ever to compete with them on equal terms for the world's commerce?

Mr. SHERLEY. If I was able to answer that question, I think my answer would probably be worth a great many millions of dollars to the Government of the United States. That is one of the problems that is going to be left over to the next Congress that has so few problems to deal with.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Will the gentleman permit me to answer that question?

Mr. SHERLEY. I doubt if anyone can answer fully that question, certainly within five minutes. I wish to say to the gentleman I would like to proceed.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If the gentleman will not yield——

Mr. SHERLEY. I will yield for a minute, but I do not wish to get into a broad discussion of that question in my limited time.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will not ask for it; I will take my own time and answer the gentleman.

Mr. SHERLEY. Speaking for myself, I question very much whether we are going to be able to compete with foreign nations in a highly competitive market upon successful terms, counting in the cost of those ships during these war times. I think those ships will have to be run on a basis of less capital investment than what they actually cost, but I think it is one of the least of your problems in connection with the operation of ships successfully in a normal competitive market. I think you have a good many problems in connection with the manning of your ships, with your shipping laws, with wages, and a lot of other things. The shipping business is not a simple thing, and I have not the wisdom to think I can settle it briefly here.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will.

Mr. BLACK. That is to what extent the Emergency Fleet Corporation has made cancellations of contracts?

Mr. SHERLEY. That is what I am going to try to come to. I did not want, gentlemen, to go into the question of a shipping policy for this Government except to say this: That I think it is of the very highest importance that a policy should be determined and determined at a very early date and that almost any policy would be better than a complete absence of one that exists now and the drifting that has taken place in connection with the whole question of our merchant marine and what we propose to do with it. I know nothing that is more important than that there should be presented to the Congress a real program, one that the Congress in its wisdom may modify or accept as the facts may warrant, but to drift along having what will amount in a last analysis to nearly $4,000,000,000 investment in ships and in plants, without any knowledge of what we are going to do with it, seems to me the height of national folly.

My judgment is that you may practically count off as profit and loss incident to the war 50 per cent of your investment of four billions, and at the end of this building program you will probably have about $2,000,000,000 worth of property in the way of ships and yards, and of the ships a certain percentage of them will be of a type of value in competitive trade and others will be of a type of rather restricted value in restricted trades.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Will it be agreeable for the gentleman to yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. I notice on page 4 of the hearings there is given the number of vessels to which we have been committed and the total tonnage, something like 16,196,761 dead-weight tons. Will the gentleman tell us what part of that total tonnage is actually in the water and under control of the Shipping Board as of December 31, to which these figures relate?

Mr. SHERLEY. Those figures relate to a program which is supposed to have been undertaken up to December 31 and were figures that were given last May as to a program. There is in the hearings—and I do not know whether I can find it immediately or not—the tonnage that we would have if the present program is carried through. Unfortunately, I say frankly to the gentleman, I have practically had no opportunity to reread this testimony. I tried to get some condensed tables of ready reference, but I am not sure that they have been put in here in the form that would give me the information. But the gentleman will find in the hearings a letter from Mr. Hurley, head of the Shipping Board, as to the policy that they have proceeded on, on page 218, in connection with this program, and he will also find statements from the division of planning and statistics undertaking to show the number of keels that have been laid between January and February and the number that is proposed to be laid after February 14.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. I had seen figures of that character, but I had not observed anywhere figures showing the tonnage actually in the water and under control of the Emergency Fleet. I was anxious to get that if it was readily available.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is available, but I can not put my hand on it at the moment.

Now, the program that they now are undertaking to complete contemplates a total construction of something under 12,000,000 tons of ships, exclusive of requisition ships. Including all ships it represents a tonnage of about 14,500,000 dead-weight tons. There is to-day supposed to be a deficiency in world tonnage, including that which has been built by us, of 9,750,000 dead-weight tons as against the figure that existed in 1914 prior to the submarine campaign. Excluding what we already have built, we are going forward now with about 10,000,000 tons of shipping. So we are probably not building any more than what would be necessary to replace the tonnage that has been destroyed.

I think Mr. Hurley in his letter states that some 5,000,000 tons are being built by other nations, which would seem to indicate that if we carry out this program and they carry out theirs we will have supplied the tonnage that has been lost by virtue of the war and some 5,000,000 tons in addition; and it is thought that represents about what should have been the normal growth in tonnage between 1914 and 1920.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Can the gentleman tell us how many tons have been constructed in this country since we entered the war?

Mr. SHERLEY. I was trying to tell the gentleman that we have a plan, with this program of ships purchased, built, and building, representing about 14,500,000 dead-weight tons of shipping.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. How many tons were actually built?

Mr. SHERLEY. I am trying to find that. It is in the hearing. I can not for the moment put my hand on it.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I wanted to ask the gentleman this: I notice he made a reference to the fact that he hoped some definite policy would be defined. I want to state that since the election in November I have been called on to state what definite policy would be pursued by the change of administration that would take place. I said I was not able to disclose it at the present time, because we had not gone so far as even to create committees, and I could not tell what the definite plan would be. Certainly we who have been in the minority have been largely kept in the dark as to what is being done. We are getting only indefinite reports, and not many of them. We are rather at a loss to define a policy, but will endeavor whenever we have the control of the legislative branch of the Government to define some kind of definite policy.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, I made no reference in any partisan or party sense.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. And neither did I.

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand you did not.

As to the matter of policy, I simply presented this situation to the House and to the country, that we have invested practically in moneys spent and moneys contracted to be spent something like $4,000,000,000. Now, that was made necessary because of the war, and we went ahead. All of us went ahead.

There was no division and there was no question. There was not 3 per cent of the people in America that questioned the wisdom of building ships at the time these commitments were made in the spring and early summer of last year. But, having done that, I think it is up to the Shipping Board, I think it is up to this administration, I think it is up to the Congress to work out a plan. I do not care whether it is a Republican or Democratic plan if it is the right plan. And I do not think any of us are so sure——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more, and then I will not take any more time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not think any of us feel warranted in saying that we know the last word on what should be the national program. It has got to be approached from the standpoint of a tremendous ownership by the Government of ships. Shall the Government operate? Shall it sell them or lease them upon the value they are to the Government or upon the value that they think it is necessary to place upon them in order to put them on terms of equality and competition with the rest of the world?

What shall be our navigation laws? How shall we undertake to equalize our operating expense with that of European countries? Those are great problems. They are not going to be settled in a minute by speeches by anybody. All I am trying to do is to show that the Committee on Appropriations have recommended the appropriation of these moneys because there is nothing else it could have done, and that in bringing in this six hundred-odd millions in this bill it is doing it on representations by the Emergency Fleet Corporation as to the amounts of money they will have to pay on contracts that have been entered into and which they believe they can not properly cancel.

Now, if anybody knows that there can be a cancellation of more of these contracts than they state, then I want that person to suggest the amount and to offer a reduction, so as to bring that about, and to justify it. But I have felt that it was not right that the Committee on Appropriations should recommend these huge sums without stating to the House the basis upon which we made the recommendations.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I thank the gentleman for the statement he has made. It was not my point to criticize his action or any of the action of the committee as to this large amount. I simply want to say that is a problem that will call for all the wisdom that we can possibly find anywhere on both sides of the House, and we will endeavor, so far as we can in the coming Congress, to arrive at some definite policy.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, I have found the tables which the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] inquired about. If the gentleman will look on page 27, of part 3, of the hearings on the sundry civil bill, which relates entirely to the shipbuilding situation, he will find a table which undertakes to show the number of delivered vessels, those that are in the water, those that are on the ways, and those of which the keels have not been laid, and the total amount.

Now, of requisitioned ships there have been delivered 298, with a dead-weight tonnage of 1,931,061. Of contract ships there have been 164 delivered, with a dead-weight tonnage of 968,425; of wood ships there have been 106, with a dead-weight tonnage of 376,400; and 10 composite ships, with a dead-weight tonnage of 37,500; or of wood and composite ships there have been 116, with a dead-weight tonnage of 413,900. The total number of ships which have been delivered, both those requisitioned and those built under contract, amounts to 578, with a dead-weight tonnage of 3,313,386.

Now, without undertaking to separate them into their classes, there are in the water at this time 348 ships, with a dead-weight tonnage of 1,643,475 tons. There are on the ways 774 ships, with a dead-weight tonnage of 3,791,985 tons. There are of keels not laid, which it is expected we can go forward with, because they believe it is uneconomical not to do so, 832 ships, with a dead-weight tonnage of 5,829,365, which would make a total of 2,532 ships, with a total dead-weight tonnage of 14,578,111 tons.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. As to the authorization of the requisitioned use of vessels, as distinguished from the taking of title to the vessels, can the gentleman tell whether of these 348 ships in the water any are ships of which we have only the use?

Mr. SHERLEY. No. These are all ships in which we take title.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. The actual tonnage we have now completed is something like 3,000,000 tons?

Mr. SHERLEY. Including the requisitioned ships there have been delivered 3,313,000. Those that are in the water are 1,643,000, and those that are on the ways are 3,791,985 dead-weight tons, and those with keels not laid 5,829,365.

Mr. FESS. That amounts to something like 14,000,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. It amounts to 14,578,111 tons. I am not sure now as to the keels not laid. They represent the program as it has been reduced by cancellation. I would want to look at these tables with some little more care than I can do it just on my feet here.

Mr. FESS. If work on the fleet we are obtaining can be continued has the gentleman any idea of when we will have the 14,000,000 tonnage?

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, I think that if we went ahead with this program rapidly we would have it in the course of a year and a half, but I am hoping that we are not going to build ships under the pressure with which we have been building them heretofore, with all the overtime and the waste incident to it, and it is my understanding that they have cut out all overtime, and they are not undertaking building with extra shifts and all the expensive costs which were only justified when time was the most important thing to be considered.

Mr. FESS. I think the gentleman is entirely correct.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman one more question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Then I will subside. I understand we requisitioned a whole lot of ships which were under construction on foreign account. This table is a condensed table of construction. Does it include only those ships, or does it also include those ships which were completed and under charter to Americans?

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, the 298 ships of 1,931,061 dead-weight tons are requisitioned ships that were building or contracted for and which we took over. They were not built. They were ships that were building.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I regret that I can not give to the committee all the accurate, detailed information that is contained in this hearing of two hundred and odd pages. The committee tried very diligently to get the information, but I have been continuously engaged in work that has been pressing from day to day——

Mr. BUTLER. It is not necessary for the gentleman to make any apologies, because we know he has given us the best he could.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not making any apologies, but I wanted to call the attention of gentlemen to the hearings, so that they can there find out more fully the facts.

Mr. BUTLER. The trouble is we always wait for the gentleman to give us the information instead of getting it for ourselves.

Mr. SHERLEY. The amounts that we are carrying here represent what these people insist they must have during the next fiscal year, and in point of fact they insist that they need part of the money before the 1st of July—something over $100,000,000—which they submitted as a deficiency estimate. We threw it all together in the sundry civil bill, making that part immediately available; and in the event that the sundry civil bill should not be going to pass it would be my expectation that the Senate would take that part of the amount of these appropriations which are made immediately available and carry them on the deficiency bill, because they unquestionably need something over $100,000,000 in order to pay their bills within the next three months. The balance is moneys that are going to be needed during the next fiscal year, and if this program is not reduced further it means that Congress will have to appropriate $395,000,000 in addition before we are through.

Mr. BUTLER. Before we get our 14,000,000 tons of ships.

Mr. SHERLEY. And when we shall have done that, we shall have appropriated $3,913,500,000, in addition to the $50,000,000 that we appropriated in the original shipping act. Now, with the permission of the committee, I will endeavor to revise my remarks and get these figures accurately stated and arranged for easy consideration.

Under the permission granted, I insert the following data:

On December 31, 1918, the total number of vessels, both built and on order, under direct contract and requisition by the United States Shipping Board, Emergency Fleet Corporation, was 2,963 ships of 16,482,611 dead-weight tons, including suspension.

As of the same date the Emergency Fleet Corporation had made actual deliveries of 578 ships of 3,313,386 dead-weight tons, excluding Japanese purchased ships.

As of February 4, 1919, it had canceled or suspended subject to cancellation 132 wood ships of 503,350 dead-weight tons. Two wood barges, 10,000 dead-weight tons; 15 wood ocean-going tugs, and 49 wood harbor tugs. In addition, 110 steel cargo ships, 74,800 dead-weight tons; 5 steel tankers, 37,500 dead-weight tons; 20 steel transports, 160,000 dead-weight tons; 56 steel ocean-going tugs; and 8 concrete tankers of 60,000 dead-weight tons, making a grand total of suspended or canceled of 397 ships of a dead-weight tonnage of 1,618,650. This leaves 1,988 ships of 11,550,575 dead-weight tons for delivery after January 1, 1919, provided all ships under suspension are canceled.

As of December 31, 1918, there were under contract and requisition 2,385 ships of 13,169,225 dead-weight tons not delivered, of which number 348 ships of 1,643,475 dead-weight tons were fitting out afloat, 774 ships of 3,791,885 dead-weight tons already had keels laid and practically all of their material assembled and were in advanced stages of completion. This left a balance of 1,263 ships of 7,733,865 dead-weight tons which have not as yet had their keels laid. Out of this balance it has suspended as of February 4, 1919, 397 ships of a dead-weight tonnage of 1,618,650, leaving a balance of 866 ships of a dead-weight tonnage of 6,115,215 on which keels have not been laid.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, during the general debate on this bill on Saturday I discussed at some little length this matter of shipping construction to a large and enthusiastic audience gathered at the other end of the Capitol, listening to a discussion of the league of nations. That is, while I was discussing this matter here, many of the Members were at the other end of the Capitol listening to a speech on the league of nations. As what I said then is immured in the RECORD, where few will ever read it, I feel that I owe it to the House to make at least a brief statement for the minority side with regard to this shipping program.

There is a program of approximately 2,500 ships, of which 876, built and requisitioned, have been delivered, with a dead-weight tonnage of 5,245,447 tons.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield there for an explanation?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I have heard this tonnage business referred to so often——

Mr. MONDELL. Not being a seafaring man, I hope the gentleman will not interrogate me too closely about the details of this matter of tonnage.

Mr. MANN. I know what the ordinary tonnage means, but the Shipping Board in order to conceal the facts, so it is stated—I do not know—have devised a new method of stating tonnage.

Mr. MONDELL. I see the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] has delivered to the floor leader of the minority an official explanation of what dead-weight tonnage means.

Mr. MANN. Well, I know, but I think it ought to be in the RECORD.

Mr. SHERLEY. A year ago I undertook to do that, and it was printed in the RECORD. I explained the difference between gross tonnage and dead-weight tonnage and net tonnage. It is a technical thing that I do not like to trust my memory on without rereading.

Mr. MANN. All these things are matters of measurement.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. These are dead-weight tons.

Mr. MANN. Dead-weight tonnage and gross tonnage and net tonnage are not necessarily related.

Mr. MONDELL. No; they are not.

Mr. MANN. Nearly everybody who has studied tonnage knows about gross tonnage and net tonnage, but very few know what dead-weight tonnage is.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Dead-weight tonnage is about one-third more than gross tonnage.

Mr. MANN. That is the reason they use it.

Mr. SHERLEY. The reason they use dead-weight tonnage as against either gross tonnage or net tonnage is because dead-weight tonnage does not have to bear a relationship to the particular character of the ship. Now, gross tonnage and net tonnage, and the relationship they bear to each other, vary according to the type of the ship.

Mr. MANN. After all, it does not make a particle of difference what the weight of the ship is. What they want to know is what its carrying capacity is.

Mr. MONDELL. That is what dead-weight tonnage is.

Mr. MANN. They deliberately conceal the carrying capacity in order to make people think they are doing a great deal more by building something that weighs heavily.

Mr. MONDELL. With apologies to gentlemen who know much more about it than I do, I will say that, as I understand it, the dead-weight tonnage more nearly measures the cargo capacity of the ship than any other classification of tonnage.

Mr. TILSON. But does not that refer to the maximum weight that it could carry?

Mr. MONDELL. We have then received of built and requisitioned ships; that is, ships requisitioned on the ways, or the contracts for which were requisitioned, 876 ships of a tonnage of approximately 5,250,000 tons, as against a gross program of approximately 14,000,000 tons, or approximately 2,500 ships. About a third of the program has been completed and delivered. The cost when we have completed the program will be a little less than $4,000,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I want to ask the gentleman a question. Would he prefer to finish his statement?

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will just let me finish the statement I have in mind.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] estimates the loss on the shipping program at about $1,500,000,000. That is a very conservative estimate, in my opinion. I think it will be somewhere between $1,500,000,000 and $2,000,000,000. About 35 per cent must be taken from the first cost of the ships of all sorts.

Then, from the wooden ships there must be taken a considerable larger percentage of cost. There is the cost of the yard, which is not charged against the fabricated ships in estimating their tonnage cost. Sixty-six millions at Hog Island. Mr. Piez says there is no future for Hog Island, and Mr. Piez knows. I estimated the other day that we might get 25 per cent of the sixty-six millions out of Hog Island. I was very optimistic on Saturday. It may be that we will get more than 25 per cent from some of the other fabricating yards, but there is over $100,000,000 invested in yards and many millions for housing, all of which must be greatly reduced before we shall reach the value on which we may ultimately realize.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Before the gentleman leaves the Hog Island proposition I want to ask a question.

Mr. MONDELL. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I understand these yards are adapted to the building of one, or at most two, types of fabricated ships and that it is not possible and will not be possible to use them for any other type of ship.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will read the hearings—and they are most interesting—he will find that Mr. Piez discussed that subject at length. These are fabricated yards, assembling yards that have no shops; they take the assembled steel and rivet it together in ships. Hog Island has so many ways that it would not be practicable to maintain it as a shipbuilding establishment with its present number of ways or anything like that number of ways. When you reduce the number of ways for building fabricated ships, then your overhead becomes so high that you can not afford to build the ships; and, furthermore, Mr. Piez says that in time of peace it possibly would not be practicable to build fabricated ships because of the fact that it would be difficult to get industrial plants to agree to fabricate the steel that would be needed for construction.

If an effort was made to remodel these yards into yards for building ships in the ordinary way, there would be an increase of overhead by reduction of the number of ways. There would be a great expense, perhaps 50 per cent of the expenditure already made, for shops and for all the necessary appliances.

What I am saying is not in criticism of the shipbuilding program. I voted for it, and we believed at the time that it was the thing to do, although we voted for that, as we did for many other things, with very serious doubts. But this is true: There has been an enormous and unnecessary waste in carrying out the program.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for another question, and then I will quit bothering him?

Mr. MONDELL. It does not bother me.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Here is the thing I have in my mind about this bill. It is apparent that we are going to lose about 50 per cent of the cost of constructing the ships, that they will be worth about half of what they cost, and we have 516,000,000 tons to build. Would not that loss be less as a matter of pure finance if we canceled the contracts and pay the shipbuilders the amount of damages under the uncompleted contracts?

Mr. MONDELL. My understanding is that the purpose of the Emergency Fleet Corporation is this: To cancel where the least loss would result through cancellation and build where the greater saving results from building. It is the opinion of the Shipping Board, which the committee must accept because they could not be fully informed on the subject, that we lose much more by not appropriating the sum in this bill than by appropriating it. In other words, that there are ships so far along in construction, there is so much material assembled that can not be used advantageously for other purposes, that unless we go forward with the program the loss will be much greater than if we stopped now.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. We have authorized about 850 ships of which the keels have not been laid.

Mr. MONDELL. While that is true, the material has been assembled and in the matter of fabricated ships the material has been fabricated; it is on the ground and it is apparently of little value for other purposes. Now, there is another matter that must be considered—the ships are not costing us as much now as during the war. The ships we are building now will not be so great a loss as the ships we built during the war. And it is possible, if the price of ships keeps up fairly well, the loss on the ships now building will not be as great as on the ships first built—25 per cent is about the difference in cost between the cost of building ships in American yards and foreign yards at this particular time.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. RAGSDALE. In view of the fact that we have established a principle, provided a billion dollars to take care of the wheat growers when the spring wheat has not been planted, and we raised a surplus when it is apparent that we are not going to have a surplus of ships, does not the gentleman think that we might establish a precedent that it would be hard to get away from on this proposition?

Mr. MONDELL. I understand we are not building ships purely on the theory that we have contracted to build them. Where we can cancel a contract with less loss than we would suffer otherwise we cancel it, but where we can not cancel it with less loss than we would suffer otherwise we fulfill the contract.

Mr. RAGSDALE. About the only contract that we are carrying out, which the carrying out of will entail a great loss, is the wheat contract.

Mr. MONDELL. We are always good to the farmers, and we always should be. Furthermore, that was altogether a different obligation than a shipping contract.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that he be permitted to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARDY. What I wanted to ask the gentleman is this: Our country is needing every ship that we can build, if we carry out the whole program?

Mr. MONDELL. I think the world's business is; yes.

Mr. HARDY. Is it not altogether probable that the ships under way in the shipyards, whatever the extravagance that has heretofore accompanied their construction, can now be built in those yards as cheaply as they could be built anywhere in the United States.

Mr. MONDELL. I think that may be true.

Mr. HARDY. So that we are up against the proposition, if we want the ships, of building them under the arrangements that have been made or else turning to new quarters?

Mr. MONDELL. I think that is true.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. Are these ships being built all under contract or are some of them being built by the Government direct?

Mr. MONDELL. They are all being built under some form of contract.

Mr. PLATT. The Emergency Fleet Corporation is, of course, the Government itself?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. And is doing some of it itself?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to undertake to answer one question asked by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. He asked, if the American capitalist had to buy ships that would cost him more than ships cost his foreign competitor, and in addition had to pay more for the operating expenses of those ships than his foreign competitor has to pay for his ships, how would he be able to compete on the high seas for the trade of the world? The answer to that is exceedingly simple, not very difficult, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] suggested. He can not do it. [Laughter and applause.] Here is the situation that confronts us to-day. We have been building ships at a great rate as a part of our war operations. If we take those ships that the Government has contracted for on Government account and turn them over to the American capitalist at a cost which will match the cost of the ships of his foreign competitor, then the American can enter, so far as the race is concerned, up to that point, on equal terms, but that means, of course, that the Government will bear all loss connected with the transaction of sale. The moment that the Government of the United States is willing to take that action, that very moment we can put American capital into business on the high seas under favorable conditions, so far as his foreign competitor is concerned. But even after you have gone that far, if the cost of operating the ships on the high seas is greater than the cost to the foreigner, you must go one step further. It will be necessary to guarantee out of the Federal Treasury to any capitalist who proposes to go into the shipping enterprise the difference between the cost of maintenance of his operations and the cost of the foreigner's maintenance.

That means again a charge on the Federal Treasury. There is no use of this talk about legislation. We do not need any legislation. What we need are appropriations, not legislation. American capital can to-day buy foreign ships if it wants to do so, for practically all of the restrictive legislation that formerly surrounded mercantile shipping operations on the part of capital in the United States, on the high seas, has been swept away under legislation that this House has heretofore passed, reported out of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, of which I happen to be a member. The whole problem is one, not of legislation, but of appropriations. The moment that the Government is willing to launch merchant-marine operations on the high seas on the basis that I have suggested, then at that very moment, so far as private capital is concerned, it can enter into competition with the foreigner on a fair and equitable basis, but not sooner.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] knows as well as the rest of this House that there was a time when American shipping did compete upon the high seas under a very simple arrangement, as old almost as the Constitution itself. Goods carried in American bottoms entering the United States were given a differential of 10 or 20 per cent, so far as custom duties were concerned.

It has been always urged that we could not return to that system. We lost it in a singular way. By a treaty made with France immediately after the Revolution her ships were given equal rights as to duties with those of America, and gradually in the course of years the most-favored-nation clause was introduced into our treaties and finally in 1854, or about that date, that most-favored-nation clause was extended to England and from that time our shipping fell off. It is always urged that we can not go back to that system. It seems to me that now is the time. The whole world is in a state of upheaval, new arrangements have to be made, England, if she respects her own interests, ought to believe that it is to her advantage that American interests shall be encouraged and American shipping shall furnish a recruiting ground for our Navy and a chance for our being a power upon the seas, and now is the time when those treaties with other nations should be denounced so far as that clause is concerned.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I do.

Mr. MANN. Of course the gentleman knows that the differential provision is in existing law now?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. But subject to those treaties. The treaties must first be denounced, because, though it is not in the law, our Government can not enforce it because of those treaties.

Mr. MANN. I do not remember there is anything in the law about treaties.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Not a word.

Mr. MANN. That is a matter of construction?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. That is a matter of construction.

Mr. MANN. And probably of legal construction.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. It is a matter of legal construction, I take it, because the treaty being made with other nations has to be obeyed until it is denounced, until the administration of this Government has the courage to say to foreign nations that they order that differential by statute and they desire those treaties should be reformed so as to give a chance to Americans to sail the seas. Now, I believe there are some other ways of encouraging our shipping, which are not really a charge upon the United States Treasury. The United States requires for its defense a Naval Reserve. I have proposed for years that it should be provided by law that any man who has stood a tour of duty of one year in the United States Navy and entered his name upon the Naval Reserve should be entitled to go to any shipowner sailing the seas and say, "You will receive so much toward my wages if you employ me." My proposition was that shipowners should be paid, not a speed subsidy—speed changes from year to year, and what is fair in one year becomes unfair in another—not a tonnage subsidy, the rates of tonnage vary so that any subsidy might become unfair, but a man subsidy, saying, we will pay the shipowner for employing Americans and induce them to go to sea. We have, thank Heaven——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, we have that system now to the extent that we have a system of transports that are now manned by the Naval Reserve. Their officers have had to pass through naval examinations. The business the United States carried on during this war has been by men trained and certified by the Navy in the Naval Reserve. This is a system adopted by other countries in the world, the only difference being they subsidize their steamers for carrying the mail, they subsidize their steamers for carrying trade, or for instituting and maintaining a certain line. We can go on the direct plan of saying the reason we can not sail the seas is that it costs more to employ Americans and we will pay to the shipowner the difference of that cost, so that it pays them to sail the seas. Still the cost is not lost or a charge on the Treasury, for it comes back to us in the existence of a Naval Reserve of men ready for service in our Navy.

I proposed this plan years ago to the Naval Board, in which Admiral Dewey sat as chief. It was received with the greatest interest. But the difficulty was that at that time it would have cost $3,000,000 to give $20 a man per month in extra wages to the shipowner to see that Americans were employed, and they thought that ought to be done through the shipping committee or through a shipping appropriation, and would not put it on the naval appropriation. On the other hand, the shipping men said it was not sufficient to get men on ships. And so they let it drop.

I do not want to pay men who go into the Naval Reserve. That has been tried in England. The result is that those men become longshoremen very soon, which the shipping merchants do not want to employ, because they have to go away once a year to take a month's training, and they are not worth so much on the ships. But if the simple plan is adopted providing that they do not require a month's training a year in the Navy, but only require that the man shall have stood his year's training in the Navy before he takes his rating, and then providing besides that whenever he wants to take a place as an officer he shall have qualified with a naval examination and got the right to belong to the Naval Reserve, and that then the shipowner shall be paid for the officer or the man a good proportion of his wages, we can secure a merchant marine such as the national defense requires, without excessive cost to the Government by what are called subsidies, which almost always run into abuses.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer a little contribution on this subject. So far as the shipping is concerned, we are staggering along like a drunken man. I might say that we are like a vessel without compass, rudder, destination, cargo, or captain, tossing on a stormy sea. No one knows whither we are drifting or where we design to land. We have no program except to spend money with prodigality and wastefulness. We propose now to add merrily, with a smile and with no knowledge, $660,000,000 to the amount to be expended by the Government in this fantastical chase. Everyone knows that the ships which we construct in this way, if they are shown to be seaworthy, and I hope we get at least that much, can not be operated by the Government directly without an immense assistance from the Federal Treasury. Everyone knows that they can not be operated by private parties even on easy leases from the Government, without assistance from the Federal Treasury. And while some gentlemen assume that the whole difference of cost of operation is in the difference in wages paid to seamen, still that is far short of the difficulty.

Under the seamen's act which we passed and which I think we are not likely to repeal, we not only would have higher wages, which come though the natural laws, but we require better food, more space per seaman, and a great many other things which add materially to the cost of operation of an American ship over that of a foreign ship. We have made no effort to correct these things. Of course, while the war continued we would have operated ships if we had had them, no matter what it cost, regardless of expense. But gentlemen need not imagine when the war is over and peace is finally concluded the people of the United States will continue to pay taxes in large and onerous sums for expenditure without knowledge of what the money is used for and why.

I am not offering any contribution from a man who knows about these things. I do not. I have listened to the gentleman who talked this afternoon, and before, on the subject. While they give us a few figures, which the Shipping Board supplies, those are misleading, and no one seems to know anything about it except that the Shipping Board wants more money. Therefore, we give them more money. How are you going to get the men to operate these ships? Where are you going to get the sailors, the seamen, from with which to man American ships?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. This bill carries an item of $11,000,000 for recruiting, instructing, and training officers, engineers, and crews for American vessels. Where are they to come from? The Shipping Board can not get them now. The Navy is operating a lot of ships; they can not get men to operate them without holding the men who enlisted for the war in the service and refusing to discharge them. And to say that we need them in our business, that we will not let them go, are we going to come to the point where we are going to draft men throughout the United States to operate ships either owned by the Government or leased to private parties or owned by corporations and sailing the seas? Are we going to say that we will pay twice as much, either in the form of freight rates or taxes, for the transportation of goods in bottoms, both our own and foreign, coming back to us as we can get goods carried for by other countries?

Are we prepared, in addition to wasting, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] says, at least half of the $4,000,000,000 already appropriated; in addition to wasting that $2,000,000,000, are we prepared to keep on operating these vessels and paying the expense out of the Federal Treasury? If it is not paid out of the Federal Treasury, who is going to pay it? We can not regulate the freight rates charged by foreign vessel owners, and we can not force our American shippers to use American vessels at higher rates as long as we admit foreign-owned vessels into our ports.

The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] referred to the differential that used to exist, which he says established the American shipping on the high seas. I do not think that was what established it myself. In the days when the ships were sailing vessels and it required courageous and brave and intelligent people to operate the ships Americans could compete with the world. But when it requires at the best but a low order of intelligence you can not force a large share of the American boys on board of these vessels, not even along the coast, not even where they are used to the sea. But the differential which was referred to by my distinguished friend from New Jersey is now the law. We put it—I do not say I had anything to do with it; I made fun of it—into the Underwood tariff law. I said when the bill passed that it either meant nothing or it meant a great deal more than was contemplated. Well, it seems that it means nothing. It is there. It is the law, and now it is proposed and suggested by the gentleman from New Jersey that we change these treaties.

Why, Mr. Chairman, in this day, with the spirit that there is in the world to-day—even acknowledging the extent that a league of nations may be controverted in the United States—with the spirit in the world to-day it is an impossibility to have all the different nations of the world enter upon a warfare, to begin with, that they will not treat vessels of different nations equally with their own. We can not say to England: "We will prefer our own vessels," and then say to England: "You shall not prefer yours." They will be both treated alike or there will be war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech delivered by my colleague [Mr. FORDNEY] in New York last Friday evening on post-war legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech made by his colleague [Mr. FORDNEY] in New York last week. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For construction of ships authorized by the deficiency appropriation acts approved June 15 and October 6, respectively, 1917, and the sundry civil appropriation act approved July 1, 1918, $549,653,254: Provided, That obligations not to exceed $35,000,000 heretofore incurred for the construction of requisitioned ships may be paid out of or charged to the appropriations herein or heretofore made for the construction of ships.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. I reserve a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized. He reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, as to this provision as to the payment of obligations, $35,000,000, for the construction of requisitioned ships, why is that needed in here? Have they spent a lot of money that was not appropriated and was not authorized?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. My recollection of the statement of the Manager of the Fleet Corporation is that as the result of the requisitioning of ships claims were filed for just compensation, many of them by the Norwegian owners of ships under contract, and that while this amount of $35,000,000 is estimated for here the claims go as high as $80,000,000 or $85,000,000; that they have not up to this time paid any of them.

Mr. MANN. That is where the Shipping Board seized the Norwegian vessels?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is, where they had a contract for the ships, and the Shipping Board came in and took the ship after it had been sold to an innocent party—took the right to construct after he had actually paid out his money.

Mr. MANN. Where was the ship?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Sometimes the ships had been started in our yards when we requisitioned the contract in order to proceed to construction, taking them at the original cost, where the contracts had been sold in many instances to a third party, who had a monetary interest and whose claims, according to my recollection, are as high as $80,000,000.

Mr. MANN. Why did they not pay for it? They had the money.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. They are asking for it now.

Mr. MANN. I know they are now seeking to get the money to pay for it. I do not pretend to be very well informed on the subject; but, so far as I know, either they did not have the money, in which case, I think, they were not authorized to obligate it, or else they did have the money and were authorized to pay it out.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will say to the gentleman very frankly that the impression made upon my mind at the time of the hearing was that they could not avoid exceeding their authorization by the sum of $35,000,000.

Mr. MANN. I think I will fix this, if I can, so that the Senate will have an opportunity to consider the item. It may be perfectly proper.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It is proper; but, no doubt, they exceeded their authorization.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the provision must be carried sooner or later. A certain sum of the appropriation made for the construction of ships was used as a requisitioning fund, or was used as a construction fund under the requisition item, and it is necessary either to make an appropriation under that item or make $35,000,000 of this appropriation available. They did exceed the limit under the other item, although, of course, there is some question as to whether or not they were authorized to use a part of what was strictly a construction fund for requisitioning construction.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the item may be perfectly proper. I do not know. Apparently there is not very much information about it here; and without any criticism at all of the Committee on Appropriations——

Mr. MONDELL. We know exactly how it occurred.

Mr. MANN. I do not think anybody knows much about what the Shipping Board is doing, except those who are doing it, and they carefully conceal the information. But I do not think it would hurt any to have this item considered in another body, in the Senate committee, where very likely it would not be very carefully considered if it were put in here, but if they were asking to have it put in over there it would be carefully considered.

Mr. MONDELL. Our committee did carefully consider it, and my idea was to save the honorable gentlemen at the other end the necessity of going into the subject as carefully.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman may have the information. I do not say that he has not. I have not got it, and I have not heard it.

Mr. SHERLEY. If I can help the gentleman any, I shall be glad to do so. I was off the floor when his inquiry came up. The gentleman is inquiring as to why we provide $35,000,000 which can be charged to the construction of ships rather than to requisitioning?

Mr. MANN. I inquired whether they had the authority to incur this obligation when they did it; and if they had, why they did not pay it out of the appropriation that was made.

Mr. SHERLEY. Strictly speaking, I think they did not have the authority to exceed the $515,000,000 that could be spent for requisitioning ships; but they did it. Of course, they did have the authority up to $515,000,000, and to that extent we were obligated to appropriate the money. Now they have gone ahead and requisitioned these ships. The amount of shipping that they requisitioned as such was less than $515,000,000. I think it was about $506,000,000; but they charged against the requisitioning fund expenses in connection with the requisitioning, moving to the seaboard, and reconstruction of vessels from the Great Lakes, and for some other ships that were not figured in when they made their original statement to us last year of the total need of $515,000,000.

Now, this was the problem with which the committee was confronted: They had these obligations, which were Government obligations and which would have to be paid. We did not want to increase the authorizations that had been made for all purposes for the Shipping Board. There was a leeway of over $100,000,000 in the ship-construction funds, and, without increasing the authorization, it seemed to us wise to authorize $35,000,000 of this to be charged against the ship-construction fund instead of increasing the authorization for requisitioning ships. I think it was that reason that controlled the committee in the matter.

Mr. MANN. The committee had no authority, had it, to increase the amount for requisitioning ships?

Mr. SHERLEY. We did not increase the amount originally, except——

Mr. MANN. No; but the gentleman said he did this in preference to increasing the amount for requisitioning ships. Did the committee have any authority to increase that amount?

Mr. SHERLEY. It would have power to bring it in here subject to the rules of the House. But what I meant was this: There were already obligations incurred which had to be paid unless we were in some way to get the Government out of them or to repudiate them. Now, instead of appropriating $35,000,000 which they need according to their statement to pay their liabilities under action which they had taken in regard to requisitioning, we thought it was better to reduce by $35,000,000 the leeway that still existed in the construction of ships and pay for the requisitioning of them in that form.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, then, they have incurred obligations for $35,000,000 on account of the construction of these requisitioned ships more than they were authorized to incur?

Mr. SHERLEY. In regard to construction and other matters incident to requisitioning.

Mr. MANN. I really do not think it would hurt them any to have to go and explain all that to the Senate committee. Probably it will not be very difficult.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have only tried to give the gentleman the information I have. There is a good deal of information in the hearings, but I am frank to say that I can not, just on the spur of the moment, recall it all for the benefit of the gentleman.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNYDER. A short time ago the gentleman made a statement with regard to certain tonnage that had been built and was to be built. In those figures did the gentleman include the tonnage that had been requisitioned?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. Then, this $35,000,000 we are now referring to has not been referred to as pertaining to the cost of that tonnage?

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, yes.

Mr. SNYDER. If that is so, then we must add to any figures that have been given heretofore this $35,000,000?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; I think the gentleman is in error.

Mr. SNYDER. I may be wrong, but I want to have it made clear.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will try to make it clear if I can. Congress authorized obligations to be incurred in the way of requisitioning ships to the extent of $515,000,000. We also authorized certain expenses to be incurred in connection with the construction of ships to the extent of $2,884,000,000. We actually had appropriated considerably less sums than that, but they have incurred obligations in the way of shipbuilding and plants that will require a sum to be paid out of the requisitioning ship fund, instead of $515,000,000, of $35,000,000 additional, or $550,000,000.

Now, the "construction of ship" obligations they have incurred, and which they expect to have to meet, is something under $100,000,000 of what they were authorized to incur. In other words, they went over their limit as to the "requisitioning ships" authorizations, and they went under the limit in the "construction of ships" authorization. They contend that strictly speaking some things were charged to requisitioning ships that ought not to have been so charged, because they were not requisitioned ships in the sense they had spoken of when they got the limit of cost of $515,000,000, but were sums paid out in building ships, where they had canceled private contracts and then built ships, and such sums should have been charged under the construction fund.

In giving the figures I did I gave the figures which represented the amount of ships from all sources that they expected to acquire. I do not know that I stated the amount of money that they would cost in detail, but assuming that all they have been authorized to spend will be spent, and no more than that spent, there will have been spent $3,953,500,000, which would represent the cost of all the ships, plants, and so forth.

Mr. SNYDER. Including the requisitioned ships and those constructed?

Mr. SHERLEY. All ships, whether requisitioned, constructed, or purchased.

Mr. SNYDER. This $35,000,000 is not in addition to the moneys appropriated before?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is a transfer of $35,000,000 now charged against the requisition fund to the construction fund.

Mr. MANN. Does this include all claims in regard to requisitioned ships?

Mr. SHERLEY. They state that then the $100,000,000 carried in this bill will be sufficient to meet all their obligations in connection with requistioned ships.

Mr. MANN. Including claims of foreign owners of foreign governments?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes, as to requisitioned ships.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know how much the foreign claims are?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; they were stated in the hearings. I think they claim the aggregate is about $80,000,000, but they did not think that amount would have to be paid, but the financial estimate was predicated on that amount as I recall.

Mr. MANN. That is included in the $100,000,000 item?

Mr. SHERLEY. In that and what has heretofore been appropriated under requisition. I am advised by my colleague that in the testimony Mr. Page, I think it was, stated that they thought the claims could be settled for about $65,000,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, while I think the gentleman has made a fair explanation, I do not think it will do any harm to go over it again, and I make the point of order on the proviso at the bottom of the page.

Mr. SHERLEY. I concede that it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CARAWAY). The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

For recruiting, instructing, and training officers, engineers, and crews for American vessels, and for all expenditures incidental thereto, $11,250,000, of which sum $3,750,000 shall be available immediately.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 46, line 2, after the word "immediately," insert "no part of the appropriations made in this act for the Shipping Board or Emergency Fleet Corporation shall be expended for the preparation, printing, or publication of any bulletin, newspaper, magazine, or periodical, or for service in connection with the same not including the preparation and printing of reports and documents required to be issued or made by law."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is indicated in the language in which it is submitted. It is rather difficult from the hearings and various tables inserted, furnished by the Shipping Board, to distinguish how much has been expended for publicity, printing of the various bulletins and documents for publicity by the board. They have issued a number of journals in various sections of the country which I think during the war emergency may have succeeded in arousing some interest.

I notice that the board has had an information bureau which costs $9,200 with four employees, an intelligence office costing $9,600 with three employees, a minute division costing $9,190, with an editorial clerk, and has expended some $6,397 for advertising and also has issued in connection with the Boston branch a publication known as the Merchant Mariner at a cost of some $7,000. Of course, these expenditures are insignificant in comparison with the total of the appropriations carried in this measure, but I think the rampant fever for publicity and self-laudation upon the part of many of the departments ought to receive some sort of a temporary check, in the interest of economy.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have not a word of complaint to say against all that the gentleman has said. As far as I am concerned I should be glad to see not only in this department but in all the others, a stoppage of all this publicity. It may have had a reason in time of war, though I am not sure of that, but certainly it has none now. I only caught the reading of the gentleman's limitation and I would inquire how far it might interfere with any necessary work in connection with these schools and the training of marine personnel, and the legitimate work of the Emergency Fleet Corporation. So far as all of this publicity is concerned, the gentleman and I are in accord, and I think it ought to be stopped overnight.

Mr. WALSH. I would state that the amendment is confined to bulletins, newspapers, magazines, or periodicals which have been issued, and, in my opinion, the language would not interfere at all with the issuance of the necessary documents for the instruction of these men attending the recruiting service schools or other branches of the service. I think, as the gentleman has so well said, that we ought to stop overnight the issuance of the Merchant Mariner, the Emergency Fleet News, the Shipping Corporation Daily, and these other publications and bulletins that are issued, containing complimentary references to officials and employees and flattering notices as to the accomplishment of some of the chiefs of the various divisions, with pictures of drug stores and other institutions that have assisted in some way in the service. The language that I have used in the amendment would stop this publicity rage that has prevailed, particularly in the Shipping Board. They are not the only branch of the Government service that have suffered from this fever, and some of the other branches have it in equally violent form. I trust that when opportunity presents the committee will adopt similar restrictions and limitations upon appropriations; but this language, in my judgment, would not prevent legitimate publications for the actual work of the Shipping Board.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have the amendment again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, I think if he would modify his amendment so as to exclude from its prohibition the necessary work in connection with matters required to be carried on, it would be satisfactory. The language, "not required by law," would, perhaps, restrict it to a particular thing for which you could not find definite authorization.

Mr. WALSH. Suppose I substitute the word "authorized" for "required"? I think that would correct it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Very well.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify the amendment by substituting the word "authorized" for the word "required."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment is a good one. It is a good, philosophical amendment, anyway. Will it accomplish anything? I hope so. I remember a few years ago when the House was in a state of hysteria over publications by one branch of the Agriculture Department. Gentlemen said they were seeking to advertise themselves and get enlarged appropriations, and a provision was inserted in the law forbidding money to be used for purposes of publication. Since that time I have watched with interest the course of these publications. A little while ago a gentleman came to me, in the Government service, and asked if I would write a little memorandum telling what a great thing it was to issue a new Government publication, stating that they would publish and give me the credit, advertise me, and showed me one where a lot of other Members of Congress had been advertised. I have not yet done it, and probably will not, though perhaps I need good advertising as much as anybody. There you have it. They have a fad—which seemingly can not be controlled—to advertise themselves.

The Reclamation Service publishes a bulletin which, so far as it has value in it, is merely telling about what some man employed in the Reclamation Service is doing in order to puff him up. Most of the material that is in it is pure stuff. The Agricultural Department issues a lot of bulletins; I do not mean the kind they call Farmers' Bulletins, but publications designed merely to advertise a man connected with that department. Various other departments of the Government do the same thing. I hope this will be effective, but——

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The unexpended balance of the appropriation "for observation of the total eclipse of the sun of June 8, 1918, etc.," is reappropriated and made available immediately for observation of the total eclipse of the sun of May 28, 1919, visible in Bolivia.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This item was referred to rather disparagingly by the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. I would like to ask how much of this appropriation is available to be reappropriated?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. There was a balance of between $1,300 and $1,400 available for this purpose, and it was stated the purpose of the language was that they have under this heading a station in Chile which the representative of the department has not been able to visit during the war and was anxious to visit on this occasion, not only to perform that duty, but also to look after the work that has been carried on in Argentina.

Mr. WALSH. Well, I am sure, Mr. Chairman, if the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi were here after the information has been given by the chairman of the subcommittee he would not seriously object to spending $1,300 or $1,400 for an opportunity for somebody to go to Chile or South America and exist in total darkness for a few seconds observing this important astronomical event.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. MONDELL. I understood the proposition of the gentleman from Mississippi was to restrain himself in regard to objecting to appropriations until he reached the item of nearly $7,000,000 for the Mississippi River, and possibly he may feel then that his insistence for economy would lead him to object and move to strike that out.

Mr. WALSH. I think very likely that may account for the brief absence of the gentleman from the floor. He is fortifying himself in that respect.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, it is quite a pleasant mental exercise to turn away from the consideration of the publications referred to awhile ago to the publications referred to here under the Smithsonian Institution under the head of International Exchanges, American Ethnology, International Catalogue of Scientific Literature, and so forth. I think our membership quite appreciates the great work that this scientific institution has done and is now doing. I believe I am within the field of certainty when I say that the American Ethnological Association has done, of its kind, the finest scientific work in the way of publications that has been accomplished in any country in the world. I believe also that these international exchanges of catalogues, as well as the other international exchanges, have been the largest accumulation of scientific knowledge with less expenditure of money of any institution of its kind in the world. It is really a source of great inspiration to our country; and when we recall that this institution was started back sometime before the Civil War with a small endowment, and it has now grown to the position of the finest accumulation of scientific authority that can be gathered in any scientific center anywhere in the world, and without a very large expenditure on the part of the Government—an endowment that started with about $500,000, as I now recall it—has reached at least close to $1,000,000 without any undue expenditure on the part of the Government itself. And so, while there has been a ground for rightful criticism of these cheap publications that are very largely self-advertisements, here is a very marked exception. It is one of the evidences that Washington is rapidly becoming the greatest center of scholarship and expert knowledge that to-day is found on the globe.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I will yield to my friend.

Mr. PLATT. I notice this appropriation for the International Catalogue of Scientific Literature is only $7,500. I would like to ask what can be done with so small an appropriation as that?

Mr. FESS. Nearly all of this is a matter of exchanges, and what we do is to publish something for ourselves and exchange it with other countries for like publications and in that way, with a small output, we get a great accumulation of scientific information. It to me is one remarkable educational scientific movement in the country.

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman's statement is very interesting, but I notice that this item says "including the preparation of a classified indexed catalogue of American scientific publications," and it includes clerk hire, purchase of necessary books and periodicals, and other necessary incidental expenses. It seems to me, even with the explanation of the gentleman, that that is a very small amount for the items which have to be provided.

Mr. FESS. I admit that in this time of great expenditures this small expenditure is rather disturbing to us, but the work is there nevertheless.

The Clerk read as follows:

National Zoological Park: For roads, walks, bridges, water supply, sewerage, and drainage; grading, planting, and otherwise improving the grounds; erecting and repairing buildings and inclosures; care, subsistence, purchase, and transportation of animals; necessary employees; incidental expenses not otherwise provided for, including purchase, maintenance, and driving of horses and vehicles required for official purposes, not exceeding $100 for the purchase of necessary books and periodicals, and exclusive of architect's fees or compensation, $115,000; one half of which sum shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What is the necessity for architect's fees in connection with the Smithsonian Institution? Are they carrying on alterations?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The language says "exclusive of architect's fees."

Mr. WALSH. I know; but I say are they carrying on some construction work?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. They were hiring architects to prepare plans, and under the provision here they now have to go to the municipal architect for the drawing of plans for buildings that may be constructed by them, or bridges, or anything else. This excludes them from hiring architects out of this.

Mr. WALSH. I understand the purpose of the language, but I wondered why they excluded it—what the activity was.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. They have been contracting architect's fees for the construction of bridges out in the Zoo.

The Clerk read as follows:

TARIFF COMMISSION.

For salaries and expenses of the United States Tariff Commission, including the purchase of professional and scientific books, law books, books of reference, and periodicals as may be necessary, as authorized under Title VII of the act entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," approved September 8, 1916, $300,000: Provided, That the disbursing clerk of the Treasury Department shall act in a similar capacity for the United States Tariff Commission.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. There is an increase of $100,000 in this appropriation. I wonder if that is predicated upon the renewed or increased activity in view of the approaching presidential election, when possibly and very likely the complexion of the political atmosphere in this section may be changed?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I can tell the gentleman the reason for that. Under the act creating the commission the sum of $300,000 was named as its annual expense. That amount was appropriated every year until last year, when the committee recommended that it be reduced to $200,000 in view of the fact that during the war there was additional reason for economy, and then, too, they could not be expected to have as much work to do. Now, with the ending of the war they undoubtedly will be called upon to make many investigations, and Congress, in the consideration of tariff legislation, will want all the information they can get from the commission. Certainly there is no reason why we should not appropriate the sum which has been appropriated for the Tariff Commission from its organization—$300,000—and which was intended to be appropriated by the organic act.

Mr. WALSH. If I understand the gentleman correctly, this is an instance where in getting back to normal we are increasing the appropriation?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is true. We are going back to prewar conditions—$300,000. During the war we went below normal, and it is one of the few instances where we did.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, the gentleman is aware that the Tariff Commission has not been dormant during the war. We have all received quite a voluminous and illuminating document on its activities during the past year or 18 months, and if they were able to pursue that inquiry and investigation with a $200,000 appropriation, it seems to me that it might be well to limit them to that amount for the ensuing year. Does not the gentleman think there is merit in the suggestion?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I am satisfied that the gentleman will conclude that the commission ought to know what force it can depend upon. As originally contemplated, the appropriation was $300,000, and certainly now when they will have more work than ever and when, as a matter of fact, the commission asked for $350,000 or $400,000, the committee's action in fixing this at the sum that was originally contemplated is justified.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out, in line 19, page 48, the figures "$300,000" and insert "$200,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WALSH moves to amend, on page 48, line 19, by striking out "$300,000" and inserting "$200,000."

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina why it is the salaries of the members of the commission are not put in this provision? Are they fixed by law?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. They are included in this appropriation.

Mr. DYER. They are not set out as they are in other appropriations.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. They are fixed by statute, and so it is unnecessary to set them out.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman does not follow that in the bill in all particulars. In the Shipping Board and in others the salaries are set out at so much each.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Certainly it would be a mere duplication to set them out here, inasmuch as the statute provides what the salary shall be.

Mr. DYER. Does the statute provide what salaries the employees shall receive, or does the Tariff Commission fix that?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It fixes the salary of the Secretary and the commission. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR TRADE BOARD.

The unexpended balance on June 30, 1919, of the appropriation of $3,500,000 for the War Trade Board for the fiscal year 1919 is reappropriated and made available for the same purposes until the President shall have proclaimed the termination of the war between the United States and the central powers of Europe.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. BRAND, Mr. HEFLIN, and Mr. SUMNERS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina moves to strike out the paragraph, and the gentleman from Massachusetts reserves a point of order.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph for this reason: This is the only one of the war boards for which an appropriation was carried, and the statement was made that they might need an appropriation to wind up their affairs. Upon consideration I see no good reason why an exception should be made in this case, and I therefore move that the paragraph be stricken out, so that they will have no funds that can be used after July 1.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves a point of order on the paragraph. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. What does the gentleman from South Carolina say about the point of order?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The paragraph certainly is not subject to a point of order, because it provides only for the reappropriation of funds. My motion is to strike out the paragraph, so that there will be no funds at the disposal of the board for its activities.

Mr. CRISP. It is not authorized by law.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It is authorized by law.

Mr. WALSH. It is a reappropriation. Of course, it makes the appropriation available until the President shall have proclaimed a termination of the war between the United States and the "central powers of Europe." While we have not declared war against the "central powers of Europe," yet it is apparent that that is the war between the United States and the Imperial German Government and the Royal Austrian and Hungarian Government. It makes it available, possibly, beyond the next fiscal year. If that is so, it is clearly subject to a point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I think the item should remain in the bill, because there may be some work for this board after the 1st of July, although I think it is doubtful. They are very anxious to close out their business. The committee thought we ought to extend their activities beyond the fiscal year, but beyond question the item is subject to a point of order. It is not definitely authorized by law.

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Wyoming yield for a question not directly on the point of order?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS. This War Trade Board is now requiring licenses?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; various licenses.

Mr. SUMNERS. Especially as to exportations to Mexico and to Cuba.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; to various places.

Mr. SUMNERS. They not only grant the licenses on every application, practically, but it takes days and sometimes weeks, and the only effect of the exercise of the power of this War Trade Board is to interfere with business.

Mr. MONDELL. To interfere with trade and business.

Mr. SUMNERS. Yes. The only effect is to establish interference in trade between our country and foreign countries.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes. In the event they find a consignee to be an alien enemy they do not grant the license. They are still maintaining an embargo on behalf of the allies, and the result is they are interfering very considerably with the transaction of our business.

Mr. SUMNERS. There is no doubt about it. I make the statement that they are interfering, and interference is practically the only effect of their activities.

Mr. MONDELL. But, Mr. Chairman, to come back to the point of order, while I should like to see this item remain in, because there may be some activities for this board beyond the fiscal year, if the treaty of peace should not be signed before that time—the probability is that the treaty of peace will be signed before that time—the item is not definitely provided for by law, and it is simply submitted to the House for its consideration.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I ask for a ruling, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was desiring to get a little bit of information to settle that question as to whether it was subject to a point of order or not.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from South Carolina will agree that there is no specific statute creating the War Trade Board; that they were formed as a part of the war activities, and were given an appropriation last year for the first time. The mere fact of giving a war activity an appropriation, that activity having been independently created by the Executive, does not warrant the continuance of that appropriation if the point of order is made against it. I may be in error, but as I understand this is an activity that was created by the President, and last year for the first time the Congress appropriated specifically for it. Apparently they have not used all of their funds, and it is attempted here not only to reappropriate the unexpended balance, but to make it available for a period of time which may go beyond the expiration of the next fiscal year. Therefore it seems to me the item is subject to a point of order. With reference to the point made by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] that the War Trade Board is not a product of a specific statute—and I think the gentleman is correct—it certainly is subject to a point of order to try to come in and reappropriate an unexpended balance. Now, I understand that this War Trade Board is about to give up the ghost voluntarily in the near future.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CARAWAY). The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question. Is there an authorization for this appropriation?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. There is no authorization specifically creating the War Trade Board. The War Trade Board was created by the President as a means for carrying out the duties devolving upon him under the trading-with-the-enemy act and the espionage act.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. May I ask the chairman of the committee a question?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The President did have authority under some act to create the War Trade Board, did he not?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. He did, under the trading-with-the-enemy act and the espionage act.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If he had some specific authority to create it, it would be the same as if it had been created by direct act of Congress, if that is the history of it.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is the history of it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina state that there was authority for its creation?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I am satisfied that there was authority for its creation, because those acts gave the President the power to enforce certain regulations by such agencies as he might devise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The motion is to strike out the paragraph, on the ground that there is no necessity for the board during the next fiscal year.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina: Page 48, line 23, strike out the paragraph beginning with line 23 and ending with line 4, page 49.

Mr. BRAND. Mr. Chairman, I submit an amendment to perfect the text.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia offers an amendment to perfect the text.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BRAND offers the following amendment: Page 49, line 4, after the word "Europe," strike out the period and insert a colon and add the following:

"Provided, That so long as the embargo on the exportation of American goods and farm products provided for in title 7 of the espionage act approved May 16, 1918, remains in force and effect, and the regulations and orders issued thereon remain effective, no part of the appropriation of said $3,500,000 for the War Trade Board shall be available for the purposes named in this bill."

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. CRISP. I ask that the point of order be made. I call for the regular order.

Mr. DYER. I make the point of order.

Mr. CRISP. We would like to know what the point of order is.

Mr. STEAGALL. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a point of order now to be determined.

Mr. WINGO. What is the point of order that the gentleman makes?

Mr. DYER. As I caught it, it provides for things not authorized by the act creating the War Trade Board, and this is offered as an amendment to the motion to strike out.

The CHAIRMAN. It is offered as an amendment to the amendment, to perfect the text.

Mr. WINGO. It is a limitation on the expenditure of a public fund, is it not?

Mr. DYER. Oh, yes; it does.

Mr. WINGO. Would it not be in order on that theory?

Mr. DYER. I think not.

Mr. WINGO. There is no question about the germaneness of the amendment in construing the expenditure.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order if the Chair has any doubt about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. CRISP. The parliamentary proposition pending before the House is the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina to strike out a section of the bill. The gentleman from Georgia has offered an amendment to perfect the text which it is proposed by the gentleman from South Carolina to strike out. The rules of the House are specific in this respect as to the motion to perfect the text being first in order.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will pause, the Chair has no doubt about that.

Mr. CRISP. Then, Mr. Chairman, as to the other proposition I think it is equally clear that it is a limitation. There is a provision in the bill appropriating money for the War Trade Board and the amendment simply provides that no part of the fund shall be expended as long as any embargo is maintained on the exportation of American goods and products.

Mr. DYER. Is not that legislation, indirectly?

Mr. CRISP. Absolutely not; it is a limitation pure and simple. There is no discretion whatever left with any executive department. They have nothing to determine except to see whether the embargo is enforced against American products and American goods. If any such embargo is in existence, then the limitation applies and says that this fund shall not be used. It is a clear limitation, pure and simple, and such limitations are always in order on an appropriation bill. It is always in order to offer a limitation on an appropriation contained in an appropriation bill, and whether the limitation is wise or unwise is not for the Chair to determine. It is for the committee to determine. The only province of the Chair is to determine whether it is purely and simply a limitation; and if it is, it is in order.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. It does not require that the embargo be raised, but requires that the money shall not be spent if it is not raised.

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman is right. If they raise the embargo the money is available, if they do not the money can not be spent. That is the whole effect of the amendment.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that it is limited to apply only to the expenditure of funds provided for in this bill for the next fiscal year.

Mr. CRISP. That is true.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Therefore if the amendment is offered to strike out the paragraph they will have no funds and they will have no fund that you will want to limit.

Mr. CRISP. I will not take issue with the gentleman on that proposition. I am arguing that this amendment is clearly in order under the rules of the House.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If the amendment to strike out is not adopted the War Trade Board would have the right to expend a part of this fund to enforce the blockade as to other commodities not included in the amendment, whereas if the fund is taken from them they could not enforce the blockade on anything.

Mr. CRISP. I am not familiar with the terms of the bill, but I agree with the gentleman that if the fund is taken away they could not use it for any purpose.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the point of order raised by the gentleman from Missouri, I wish to say that I am sure the gentleman from Missouri must have forgotten an amendment which he offered sometime ago to an appropriation bill, and which was sustained as a limitation. This amendment is interesting in this connection because it shows in the most emphatic fashion that the present amendment is a limitation. The gentleman from Missouri offered an amendment to the following effect that "no money appropriated herein shall be used unless all former Government employees who have been drafted or enlisted in the United States in the war with Germany shall be reinstated." After argument that was held out of order, but on appeal it was held that it was a limitation, although there was a direct compulsion on the part of officials to reinstate these men.

Mr. DYER. The law already provided for the reinstatement of these men.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes, but you provided that the appropriation should not be available unless the soldiers were reinstated. That was a clear case of compulsion upon the officials. That makes the difference between that amendment and this one.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. MONDELL. Before the Chair rules I would like to be heard.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, just a word. I am not going to detain the Chair, or the committee but for a moment. This amendment is a pure limitation, dealing exclusively with money. It is an indirect inhibition upon the use of the money. It does not compel directly any action whatever, it does not direct the officials to do anything. It merely says that under the conditions recited in the amendment the appropriations shall not be available. It is as pure a limitation as is possible to be constructed under the rules of the House.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, this is a change of existing law on an appropriation bill, which violates the rules, in the guise of a limitation. It is not a limitation; it is prohibition. It prohibits the use of this money unless certain acts which have been authorized by law are rescinded. It is not a limitation in any sense. It is a prohibition against the use of the money unless certain things occur. It is not on all fours with the amendment referred to by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER]. In that case there was an existing law which calls upon the executive officers to do certain things. They were not performing their duty under that law, and the gentleman's amendment called on them to perform their duty or not expend the money. That was clearly a limitation, but this is a very different proposition. This is an attempt to repeal a law, to make it inoperative, under the guise of a limitation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If this were a case of first impressions, it is doubtful what the opinion of the Chair might be with reference to the proposed amendment, but in line with repeated precedents handed down by the gentleman from Virginia, Judge SAUNDERS, the gentleman from Texas, Mr. GARNER, the gentleman from Missouri, Judge ALEXANDER, and others, the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STEAGALL: Amend the amendment by adding a comma after the word "products" and insert the words "including cottonseed and peanut oils."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair believes that this is an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. STEAGALL. I understood that this was a motion to strike out the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this would not be in order at this time.

Mr. STEAGALL. Then I withdraw the amendment for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, if one wants to start a flurry in this House on the Democratic side all that is necessary is to mention King Cotton, and immediately all the gentlemen are on their feet stampeding the House in their desire to get into the RECORD. I am one of those who are of the opinion that we ought to do away with embargoes as soon as possible and wherever possible. They hamper and restrict trade. There is no doubt about that. They do it even now under conditions where license is ordinarily issued. There is always some delay, although the gentlemen who appeared before our committee and with whom we discussed this matter at length assured us that there was comparatively little delay. They said that we are still under some obligations to the allies over on the other side. We are pledged, they said, to a certain extent to them to maintain an embargo, at least against alien enemies. You may or may not agree with the President about the league of nations, but I do not think the House ought to do anything, even in order that gentlemen may stand well with their cotton constituents, that will not be in keeping with the obligations we are under, whatever they may be, to the allies.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. I would like to know how there could be any obligation of the United States to our allies to keep an embargo on American products at any time.

Mr. MONDELL. I give the gentleman the word of the gentlemen who are responsible under the administration. I am not a member of it. I am not under any responsibility in regard to those things, but they do say that so far as trading with the enemy is concerned, they are still obligated to see that such trade is not carried on, and that trade with enemy sympathizers is not carried on.

I know that nothing that I can say will affect the vote upon this amendment, for gentlemen must always go on record as being alive and on the qui vive in defense of cotton, and that is all right; that is commendable.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Of course, I think they are getting excited over a very small and comparatively unimportant matter, but still it is well always to be on guard when cotton is in danger. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CRISP. I had not intended to say anything about cotton, and the amendment does not name cotton, but deals with cotton and shoes and wheat and any other American product or mineral that is affected by the embargo. Does the gentleman contend that it is the duty of this Government, since he has mentioned cotton, to do anything to enable the English spinners to get the cotton of the South below its value, when cotton in normal peace times has been the one American product that has kept the balance of trade in favor of this country?

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman kindly address his inquiry to the President and those in charge of this administration? They are the people who are handling this thing; I am not.

Mr. CRISP. The gentleman and others have addressed inquiries, written and verbal, to the President asking that all embargoes be lifted off exportation of American goods.

Mr. MONDELL. That was before the President came back.

Mr. CRISP. He will receive some more communications when he arrives.

Mr. MONDELL. But, Mr. Chairman, I did not rise for the purpose of discussing the cotton end of this controversy. I realize nothing I could say in regard to it would affect the votes of gentlemen from the cotton States. I do want to remind them, however, that their administration suggests that there is some obligation. I do not know. Personally, I think that we ought to remove all of these bars to trade, but while I am discussing this matter, if the House will bear with me I would like——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. May I have five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, last spring the woolgrowers of this country were called to Washington, and they were asked to agree to a maximum price for the American wool clip. They are patriotic folks. Wool was then worth about 65 cents a pound in the grease on the average. After a good deal of discussion the price was fixed for the entire American clip on a basis of the price of the year before. It developed, after the clip had been purchased by the Government and graded and classified, that the average price which the purchasers received was a little less than 50 cents—probably about 47 cents—a pound on the average.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. I would like to know what that same wool brought in 1914?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, it was selling almost as low in proportion as cotton was about that time.

Mr. CRISP. I would like to have an answer to the question how much it brought then. I do not know.

Mr. MONDELL. It brought at that time—1914—I think, about 30 to 35 cents.

Mr. CRISP. Wool in the grease, that same wool that is now 48 cents?

Mr. MONDELL. About 32 to 35 cents.

Mr. CRISP. Of course, I do not know.

Mr. MONDELL. There were times when wool was lower and times when it was higher. There were times when cotton was lower and when cotton was higher. The price fixed was 15 to 18 cents below the market price at the time the price was fixed or the agreement entered into, and the entire American clip was sold at that price. The woolgrower did not receive any benefit of war prices. After that clip had been sold the only possible protection to the Government and the woolgrower was an embargo on foreign shipments. I made inquiry about it, and I was assured by those in position to know that the embargo would not be lifted, and on that assurance I wired my people to that effect, but unfortunately my wire moved a little slow, as wires sometimes do now under Federal control, and another wire sent a few hours later got there ahead of mine and advised my people that the embargo had been lifted. By the lifting of the embargo woolgrowers were left at the mercy of importations from all the world. Now, there was a case where the embargo might properly have been retained. The Federal Government had 300,000,000 pounds of the American wool clip of last year, about 100,000,000 pounds of foreign wool, and stands to lose a great deal of money by reason of the Government taking off the embargo at the time when it was understood and stated by those in authority the Government would retain the embargo.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. One sentence more and I will. The only thing that stands between the American woolgrower to-day and a price that is absolutely confiscatory is the English issue price. If it were not for the English issue policy, which does maintain a price above what would probably be the price fixed by supply and demand, the woolgrowers of America, who were not allowed to secure any war benefits, would probably face bankruptcy.

Mr. RAGSDALE. In other words, as the gentleman now knows, the English are cooperating and guaranteeing a price in Australia, as the result of which the American grower is being benefited, and neither England nor the United States is doing anything to-day to protect the cotton grower, whom England is trying to destroy. And the gentleman well knows while the United States Government has an enormous quantity of wool on hand, on which it will lose an enormous sum of money, it has not a pound of cotton on hand on which it will lose a dollar of money.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know what the English attitude on cotton is, but I know the attitude of the English Government is the only thing that sustains the wool price.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Does not the gentleman know by reading the papers that the Manchester mills and the Liverpool market are daily selling the cotton market short here and that the American producer of cotton is absolutely without any benefit from anybody, while the American Government to-day denies the market of the world to him, and the markets of the world sell here and destroy the producer?

Mr. MONDELL. It seems the administration is neither protecting the woolgrower nor the cotton grower. Neither is the administration protecting the Government against loss on its wool holdings. Who is the administration protecting?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The vote is on the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia to the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STEAGALL: Amend the amendment by adding a comma after the word "products" and insert "including cottonseed and peanut oils."

The CHAIRMAN. The vote is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia want to be heard on his amendment?

Mr. BRAND. No. I have expressed my views on the merits of the question involved in my remarks submitted last Friday night.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words as to my amendment.

The situation is simply this: Gentlemen argue against maintaining a blockade on wool and cotton and on cotton seed and other commodities. The motion I have made to strike out the paragraph means that the War Trade Board will not be in existence after July 1 to maintain a blockade on anything. Now, a limitation upon it means simply this, that these funds which we seek to cover into the Treasury will continue to be at the disposal of the War Trade Board to conduct a blockade on some commodity if they see fit to do so after that time. The adoption of my amendment, which strikes out the paragraph, closes up the War Trade Board so that they can not maintain a blockade on anything, and at the same time covers this money into the Treasury instead of leaving it at the disposal of the War Trade Board.

How can anyone vote to continue an organization when they say they do not want that organization to function any longer.

Mr. BRAND. I would like to know the time when you say this War Trade Board will cease to function.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. July 1. If they have any balance then, it is covered back into the Treasury.

Mr. BRAND. They will not cover it back until then?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No, sir. As this bill only carries appropriations for the fiscal year beginning July 1, the amendments which are offered to this paragraph limiting appropriations in the bill can not have any effect before July 1.

Mr. BRAND. In the meantime can not the War Trade Board keep this embargo on cotton?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. They can; and nothing offered here in this bill can stop them from doing it. Your limitation is a limitation on the expenditure of funds after July 1.

Mr. BRAND. Why not stop them now entirely?

Mr. STEAGALL. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. STEAGALL. Suppose the motion of the gentleman obtains and the paragraph is stricken out, would not the President still have power under the law already in existence to issue an order by which some other board could reestablish the embargo?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. After July 1 the President will have no $50,000,000 fund. There is no provision in here to give him that fund for next year.

Mr. STEAGALL. I am not speaking of the funds. I am talking about the effect of striking out this paragraph included in the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina. Now, the President, so far as the law or authority conferred upon him is concerned, may issue an order putting this power in the hands of some other bureau.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Of course, he could. He could do that under your limitation, because you only limit this fund. If he had funds and gave them money, they could maintain a blockade, whether you limited the activities of the board, as you desire, or put them out of business entirely, as I desire.

Mr. STEAGALL. Then I want to ask one other question. Does not the gentleman believe that at this time, the war having closed last fall, this extraordinary power to deny the producers of America the right to ship their products to the world ought to be discontinued? And do you not believe that if the American Congress expresses its will upon the subject in favor of the removal of that embargo, the people of this country having gone to war in defense of their rights to ship their products to all corners of the earth, the President would respect the will of the American people as expressed by their Representatives in Congress?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman from Alabama asks about two things. I believe just what he believes, that this blockade should be raised. I believe it, but that does not change the situation, and the facts that he attempts to set forth have absolutely nothing to do with this fund. What I am endeavoring to do is to destroy the agency that the gentleman complains of, and the gentleman's motion aims at the continuation of that agency of which he complains. Why spend the money to continue an organization of which you complain? Why not destroy it?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. How would this board have any funds next year if this limitation were passed?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Because the funds are carried by this appropriation. It gives them that much money—the unexpended balance of their appropriations.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Well, yes——

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. They can use it to maintain a blockade on other commodities.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. They can not use it for other purposes as long as this embargo remains. They will not have any money to spend.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is a limitation only as to certain purposes, and the gentleman knows they can use that money.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It says no part of this appropriation can be used so long as the embargo remains.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If they have not got the money certainly they can not use it, can they?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is another matter.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Then why object to cutting out the paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded. The motion is to strike out the section.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 30, noes 35.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For bar-stock storage shed with necessary facilities, $50,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make an inquiry for the purpose of asking why they are using bar stock in the arsenals of the Federal Government?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is not the kind of bar the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. WALSH. This is not the stock of the legal fraternity? Does that mean some kind of material?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes; iron.

Mr. WALSH. There is so much prohibition in the air nowadays that I was misled.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Repairs of arsenals: For repairs and improvements of arsenals, and to meet such unforeseen expenditures as accidents or other contingencies during the year may render necessary, including machinery for manufacturing purposes in the arsenals, $1,550,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, here is an appropriation nearly as large as was made last year during the war for repair of arsenals.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No. If the gentleman will allow me, the appropriation last year was $2,750,000.

Mr. WALSH. Well, only $1,750,000 was carried in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. And $1,000,000 was carried in the deficiency bill. I will say to the gentleman that the estimate filed by the department is $6,200,000, and the committee made it $1,550,000.

Mr. WALSH. The committee runs true to form in the reduction?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes. The gentleman will agree that it is good form.

Mr. WALSH. I wondered what activities were being conducted in these arsenals with the cessation of the prosecution of the war which required $1,550,000 for repairs and improvements and unforeseen expenditures.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will state to the gentleman that by reason of the war we have increased our investment. Certainly we can not fail to provide for its maintenance during the next year.

Mr. WALSH. Of course.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. During the war there has been added to the arsenals material to the value of $66,000,000, and in the face of that, as the gentleman will see by looking at the bill there, we are really reverting to the prewar appropriations.

Mr. WALSH. It says "repairs and improvements."

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. But there is a good deal more material in those arsenals to-day than there was before. Some of the buildings have been enlarged. They will require some repairs during the year.

Mr. WALSH. If they have all been enlarged and fixed up so as to meet the emergency due to the prosecution of the war, what do you need that $1,550,000 for now when these activities have slowed down?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It includes repairs to machinery, and the machinery has been run 24 hours a day with three shifts of men. Certainly, in view of the estimate of $6,000,000—an estimate made by the gentlemen who are in charge of this work and who are presumably somewhat familiar with the conditions, and who urged these estimates with great earnestness—the action of the committee in recommending only $1,500,000 is conservative.

Mr. WALSH. The action of the committee is highly commendable. I am willing to grant that, but I can not understand what activities are being conducted there now, when we have ceased, in some measure at least, to turn out large guns.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The Government has an investment in those arsenals of $95,000,000. This item is a little over 1 per cent for the repair, maintenance, and preservation of $95,000,000 worth of property. That is what it amounts to.

Mr. WALSH. I think they can purchase machinery under this language. The gentleman said it included repairs to machinery.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It does. Money is spent out of this fund for repairs to machinery.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not know just how much my friend from Massachusetts would have the committee trim these estimates. Here was an estimate of $6,291,835 reduced to $1,550,000, and that would seem to be a pretty fair reduction even on this bill, which is a fair example of the way estimates can be trimmed. During the war we have very greatly enlarged our arsenals and armories. We are now engaged in the work of placing in some of the older arsenals and armories some of the machinery which has been used in the plants temporarily built up for war purposes. The cost of that transfer of machinery will not be borne in the main by this item, but a part of the cost of placing the machinery will be borne by this item. The original item was based on a 4 per cent estimate of cost of repairs on the old arsenals and a 1 per cent estimate on the new. It seems to me the item is as low as it could well be under the circumstances, if we are to appropriate anything at all for the ordinary upkeep of these great properties which have been so extensively added to during the war.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Disposition of remains of officers, soldiers, and civilian employees: For interment, or of preparation and transportation to their homes or to such national cemeteries as may be designated by proper authority, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, of the remains of officers, cadets, United States Military Academy, including acting assistant surgeons and enlisted men in active service; interment, or of preparation and transportation to their homes, of the remains of civil employees of the Army in the employ of the War Department who die abroad, in Alaska, in the Canal Zone, or on Army transports, or who die while on duty in the field or at military posts within the limits of the United States; interment of military prisoners who die at military posts; for the interment and shipment to their homes of remains of enlisted men who are discharged in hospitals in the United States and continue as inmates of said hospitals to the date of their death, and for interment of prisoners of war and interned alien enemies who die at prison camps in the United States; removal of remains from abandoned posts to permanent military posts or national cemeteries, including the remains of Federal soldiers, sailors, or marines, interred in fields or abandoned private and city cemeteries; and in any case where the expenses of burial or shipment of the remains of officers or enlisted men of the Army who die on the active list are borne by individuals, where such expenses would have been lawful claims against the Government, reimbursement to such individuals may be made of the amount allowed by the Government for such services out of this sum, but no reimbursement shall be made of such expenses incurred prior to July 1, 1910, $8,451,000: Provided, That during the continuance of the present war the above provisions shall be applicable in the cases of officers and enlisted men on the retired list of the Army who have died or may hereafter die while on active duty by proper assignment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. Can the chairman of the committee state what necessity exists for the interment of alien enemies who may die at military posts?

Mr. SHERLEY. Simply that they have to be buried.

Mr. WALSH. Are they going to be buried in the national cemeteries?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think not. I did not hear the testimony before the committee on this part of the bill. I have reread it hastily, but I do not recall whether anything was said directly on the subject of alien enemies. We really carry most all of this money for our own soldier dead.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but the language refers to alien enemies interned?

Mr. SHERLEY. We have had to intern quite a number of alien enemies, some of whom have died.

Mr. WALSH. Died at prison camps?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes. We have had to bury them. Certainly they are not going to be buried in national cemeteries, so far as I know.

Mr. WALSH. As I followed the reading of this section I understood that this was to cover the expenses of transporting from abroad those who may have been killed in action and those who may die in this country or at military posts.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is largely for the return of the dead officers and soldiers abroad to the United States.

Mr. WALSH. I was just wondering whether we were going to permit these alien enemies to be buried in our national cemeteries.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; I think it is for their burial where they die. We are not supposed to pay for their shipment to any particular place, so far as I know.

Mr. WALSH. If that is not the intention I will withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Gettysburg National Park: For continuing the establishment of the park; acquisition of lands, surveys, and maps; constructing, improving, and maintaining avenues, roads, and bridges thereon; fences and gates; marking the lines of battle with tablets and guns, each tablet bearing a brief legend giving historic facts and compiled without censure and without praise; preserving the features of the battle field and the monuments thereon; compensation of civilian commissioner, clerical and other services, expenses, and labor; purchase and preparation of tablets and gun carriages and placing them in position; maintenance, repair, and operation of a motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle, and all other expenses incident to the foregoing, $50,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. That is the same appropriation carried last year?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Just the same.

Mr. WALSH. It is not intended this year to authorize the purchase of motor-carrying vehicles?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; that was purposely left out.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Guilford Courthouse National Military Park: For continuing the establishment of a national military park at the battle field of Guilford Courthouse, in accordance with the act entitled "An act to establish a national military park at the battle field of Guilford Courthouse," approved March 2, 1917, $9,200.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, to ask the reason for the increase of this item of $1,100.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The appropriation last year was $8,100, and the estimate this year was for $15,700. The committee recommended the sum of $9,200. They requested an appropriation for the purchase of land and to do many other things. My recollection is that the purpose of the increase here was that there was one additional commissioner appointed this year, $100, and the balance of the appropriation was urged on the ground that they wanted to improve this new park.

Mr. WALSH. This is a new park recently authorized to commemorate that event?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes; and they have done a little work on it. If it is to be kept up at all they will have to make some slight improvements.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman know if they have purchased any land that is contemplated to be embraced within the confines of the park?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. They have not purchased any since the original act establishing it. If they received the $15,000 estimated, they would have purchased some land, but the Committee on Appropriations thought they could wait awhile longer for it.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For ordinary care of Lafayette Park, $2,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to direct the attention of the gentleman having the bill in charge as to the item just read providing for the ordinary care of Lafayette Park. Last Monday when a bill was up for the establishment of the Lafayette National Park, at Mount Desert Island, it was stated on the floor that the name of this park north of the White House was properly Jackson Park and not Lafayette Park. Has the gentleman any information as to the correct name of the park that sometimes bears the name of Jackson Park and sometimes Lafayette Park?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I can not inform the gentleman as I have never known of its being called Andrew Jackson Park. The gentleman has been a resident of Washington so much longer than I have and so much more industrious that if that were the fact I think he would have discovered it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I may say for the information of the gentleman that the predecessor of another illustrious gentleman who bears the same name as the gentleman from South Carolina, the Hon. JOSEPH BYRNS, to wit, John Wesley Gaines, who was a great admirer of Andrew Jackson, persisted in saying that the proper name of the park north of the White House was Jackson Park. The park contains in its center the equestrian statue of Andrew Jackson.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Was that due to the fact that the statue of Jackson is in the vicinity?

Mr. STAFFORD. It is in the center of the park.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman has no objection to this being carried as Lafayette Park for another year?

Mr. STAFFORD. There was serious protest on the floor of the House in allowing the name of Lafayette to be attached to any park where the President is burned in effigy.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I would like to stop the burning in effigy, but I do not know that the change in the name would do it.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman want the name of Old Hickory attached to that sort of a place?

Mr. STAFFORD. It might have some influence on the fighting qualities of the militant suffragettes who take advantage of that park in close proximity to the White House.

Mr. WALSH. I have been informed by distinguished and very authentic authority that the name of that place where these momentous events and ridiculous capers have taken place is Jackson Square, and that that could be verified by turning to the archives and finding the act establishing that park and granting it as a public place.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think it should bear the name of the illustrious President Andrew Jackson. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For improvement, care, and maintenance of Smithsonian Grounds, $4,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What has happened down at the Smithsonian Grounds that requires an increase in the appropriation?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman knows, during the past year or two they have constructed new Government buildings there, and in doing so they have torn up the ground surrounding the Smithsonian Institution, and that park, which is visited by nearly everyone who comes to the city of Washington, as a result of the construction of these buildings, is in worse state than almost any other part.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, yes; they have torn up the grounds, but they have covered over a lot of ground, and there is less ground to take care of.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman will remember, if he visited that section during the last year——

Mr. WALSH. I certainly have.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That the Government employees have been out in the park and that the soldiers have used it as a drill ground, and that they have destroyed the grounds. They have to resod the grounds, and they are asking for a much larger sum than the committee has recommended.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, I assume that is so, because that has been almost invariably the rule with reference to appropriations.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is true.

Mr. WALSH. And I have taken occasion to commend the committee heretofore; but are there any markers or guides by which you can distinguish the Smithsonian Grounds from the Mall or from East Potomac Park or from Henry Park?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes. I could not direct the gentleman to the exact points—I would not know how to do it—but I am satisfied that the gentleman knows that the park nearest the Botanic Gardens is known as Seaton Park and that the one in front of the Smithsonian Institution is known as the Smithsonian Grounds. There is a Henry Park; and I have no doubt that he really is better informed as to the divisions than I am.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was under the impression that the grounds immediately in front of the Smithsonian Institution and the old National Museum were under the charge of the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, whereas this item really applies to the grounds to the south of the Smithsonian Institution and immediate environs.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. This is under the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. STAFFORD. What part of the so-called Mall does this pertain to?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The ground right out in front of the Smithsonian Institution and the new National Museum. It has been carried here as the Smithsonian Grounds, right where the Smithsonian and the National Museum are.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there any provision for improving that part of the Mall just immediately west of the Botanic Gardens, which is in a very sorry condition?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. We will strike that in a few minutes. It is in the bill. It is the last item on page 61.

The Clerk read as follows:

For care and improvement of Rock Creek Park and the Piney Branch Parkway, exclusive of building for superintendent's residence, and including personal services in the District of Columbia, $23,200.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. What authority of law is there for Piney Branch Parkway and for including personal services in the District of Columbia?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. This item was carried in the District bill last year; therefore, it was not necessary to carry the authority for personal services in the District of Columbia. It is now carried in this bill, and it is necessary. Rock Creek Park and Piney Branch Parkway are both authorized by law. The only difference is the authorization for personal services in the District of Columbia. This involves no increase in the amount at all.

Mr. WALSH. Where does the gentleman say it was carried—in the District bill?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. In the District of Columbia appropriation bill last year.

Mr. WALSH. How was it transferred?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The information I have is that the jurisdiction was transferred under the sundry civil act of last year to the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, which necessitated its being carried here.

Mr. WALSH. That the jurisdiction of these two parks was transferred by the sundry civil appropriation act of last year to the Engineer Department from the District of Columbia?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. That is a sufficient reason for its being in this bill.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is the only reason.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For placing and maintaining special portions of the parks in condition for outdoor sports, $15,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In putting parks in condition for outdoor sports, does that apply to cleaning up Lafayette Square so the suffragettes can have bonfires there?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Certainly the gentleman does not refer to that as outdoor sport?

Mr. WALSH. They seem to think it is considerable of a sport to burn speeches of the Chief Executive of the land. It says, "For placing and maintaining special portions of the parks in condition for outdoor sports," and I take it that means all the parks within the jurisdiction of the Engineer Department.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. As a matter of fact, in the construction of buildings, quite a number of the parks heretofore used for out-of-door sports have been destroyed for this purpose, and it really would justify an increase in the appropriation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is that the reason for the action of the committee in reducing the amount from $20,000 to $15,000?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The action of the committee was merely in an effort to try and save some money.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the committee is attempting to save in the wrong place, because from my knowledge of the parks utilized for temporary buildings not one square foot of space was utilized for out-of-door sports.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Almost the only motion from gentlemen on that side of the House has been to reduce appropriations for parks.

Mr. STAFFORD. We are not seeking to reduce proper provisions that will promote health and are for the pastime of the denizens of the District. I am willing to provide places in our public parks to be used——

Mr. WALSH. I will yield to the gentleman, although I do not understand some of the phrases he is using.

Mr. STAFFORD. When a gentleman comes from Massachusetts I take him to be all wise and I am glad he admits he has not an acquaintance with some recognized phrases.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Did the gentleman say "wise" or "wild"?

Mr. WALSH. Of course, I do not yield for any abuse or anything of that sort.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman can not even take the encomiums of Members. But has not the committee made a mistake in reducing this estimate to this amount? I suppose this item is used for placing the Mall and the White House grounds in condition for tennis, baseball, and so forth.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman will be satisfied when I call to his attention the fact that, prior to last year, the appropriation was $10,000, and last year, in order to do definite, specific work, the appropriation was raised from $10,000 to $20,000, so as to provide some place for outdoor sports that were lost to the people by reason of building construction. Now we recommend $15,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. It may be that increase was due to my calling the attention to the then superintendent, Col. Harts, some years ago to the need of having ponds throughout the District here, where they could be frozen, so that people could enjoy skating, which I must say I enjoy and indulge in when I am home to a great extent.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I have no doubt that is true, and I hope the gentleman in the future——

Mr. STAFFORD. I will not have any more opportunity in Washington, but I am going to have plenty of opportunity when I return to my old Queen City, where we have skating four months in the year.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For operation, care, repair, and maintenance of the pumps which operate the three fountains on the Union Station Plaza, $4,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Last year when this appropriation of $4,000 was carried there was a report to be made to find out how they could reduce the expenditures of those fountains. Has that report been made to the Congress or to the department?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will tell the gentleman the situation. The report showed that by an investment of $10,000 they could possibly save $700 a year, which the committee thought to be entirely too high, and we were unwilling to recommend the expenditure, and therefore referred it back to the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds and requested that he furnish to the committee by the next session an estimate as to whether the change can not be made for less than $10,000.

Mr. WALSH. Why, the gentleman does not mean to say he referred it to the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, does he?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I did not understand the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. He did not refer it back to the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds? This is within the jurisdiction of the Engineer Department, or else it is erroneously set forth.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The proposed change is to connect with the Capitol power plant, and we asked the superintendent to take it up with the engineers. The cost at this time is $4,000 a year, and the estimate was that by making the change recommended the annual cost would be $3,264, and that to make that change it would cost $10,000. Gentlemen can figure the interest on the $10,000. And the belief that most of us had was that if the estimate was made at a time when the cost of material was not so high—possibly next year—it could be shown that it was a matter of economy to change it, and then we would do it; but as it stands now it would not be an economical thing to do.

The Clerk read as follows:

For soiling and seeding East and West Seaton Park, $5,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee how late he expects to continue to-night.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I hope we can continue for some time, because we have but seven days more of this session, and we have read to-day only about 25 pages of this bill. The best part of the day has been consumed, and I trust we can get along and make some headway now.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I shall not interrupt, but does the gentleman expect to run until half past 10?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I hope we can run until 10 o'clock, anyway.

Mr. MONDELL. I think the gentleman from South Carolina scarcely intends to run until 10 o'clock.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Why?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I hope we can do so, unless we can make some great headway, so that we can wind this bill up to-morrow.

Mr. MONDELL. If we run an hour or two longer we will be doing very well.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If we can make any headway in the bill, if the gentleman will call my attention to it possibly we can rise.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. On page 101 of the bill, "Territory of Alaska," there is an appropriation of $4,000,000 for the Alaskan Engineering Commission in charge of the completion of the railroad. I want a little time to discuss it. I am advised that there are more overhead employees up there than there are railroad men.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I am satisfied that the gentleman should have the opportunity, and we can arrange it when the item is reached.

The Clerk read as follows:

One half of the foregoing sums under "Buildings and grounds in and around Washington" shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. These items are scattered about here. How much is the total appropriation carried for the care and maintenance of the Executive Mansion?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It is $72,600. That includes the grounds.

Mr. WALSH. Does that include repairs?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It includes repairs, lighting, fuel, the maintenance of the greenhouse, and everything else.

Mr. WALSH. Includes the upkeep and maintenance when its occupants are away from here?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Or here.

Mr. WALSH. No reduction in the estimate on account of the contemplated absences?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; it is open to the public each day.

The Clerk read as follows:

Birthplace of George Washington, Wakefield, Va.: For repairs to fences and cleaning up and maintaining grounds about the monument, $100.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLAND of Virginia: Page 60, line 24, after the figures "$100," strike out the period and add a semicolon, and add the following: "for repairs to Government wharf in Potomac River, at Wakefield, Va., leading to the birthplace of George Washington, and for restoration of said wharf, $20,000."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the provision for the repair of this wharf has not been submitted to the committee, and my attention was not brought to it until a few days ago.

I understand that some years ago the wharf was constructed by the Government at Wakefield, costing something like $20,000. The ice of last winter carried away that wharf, and there is practically no wharf there now.

If I had received the information in time, I would have brought it to the attention of the committee, or I would have gotten the necessary information in Washington. The information I have is based entirely upon a letter received by me from a constituent, so that I am not in a position to say to the committee positively that the sum of $20,000 is a reasonable or an unreasonable sum, but I only state the amount suggested in the communication I have referred to.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, as to this amendment, I think the committee will be satisfied that no estimate having been brought to our attention we can not in the absence of an estimate consider making an appropriation. If it is necessary, and the gentleman will call it to the attention of the department, I am satisfied it will do something to remedy the situation.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. I will bring it to the attention of the War Department and bring it to the attention of the Senate committee.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WINGO). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment reads: "For repair to the Government wharf in Potomac River, at Wakefield, Va.," and the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the Chair will permit, there is no law authorizing the construction of a wharf at Wakefield, Va. There being no law authorizing the construction of a wharf at Wakefield, and therefore the mere fact that the amendment provides for the repair of a private wharf does not make it in order on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair makes his ruling, relying on the statement made by the gentleman from Virginia that the Government formerly had a wharf there and that the ice has destroyed that wharf.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, Mr. Chairman, I reserved a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. If it be true that that was a Government wharf, would not an amendment for the repair of it, although the repair might be in the nature of a restoration, be in order?

Mr. STAFFORD. I hardly think so; not on the sundry civil appropriation bill. I hardly think so. I question whether we have the right, under the circumstances, to provide for the restoration of something that years back was established by the Government. It is admitted by the gentleman that there is no wharf there at the present time.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. I did not admit that. The amendment itself says, "For the repair of a Government wharf at Wakefield, in the Potomac River, at Wakefield, Va."

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman any information that at any time it was erected by the Government?

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. Yes; but I can not put my hand on the legislation at this time. But looking over the Congressional Directory, particularly as to the work that was done by my predecessor here, I notice that in his earlier days he introduced a bill for the construction of a wharf at Wakefield, Va., and my general information is that the Government later did authorize the construction of a wharf at that place.

Mr. STAFFORD. When?

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. I could not say just now when it was done, but it was done in consequence of legislative enactment, and I am satisfied that I can put my hand upon the law authorizing the construction of the wharf. My recollection is that it was about $20,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The pending item is for repairing and maintaining fences and cleaning up grounds about the monument at the birthplace of George Washington, at Wakefield, Va. The amendment of the gentleman from Virginia provides for the repair of the Government wharf at that place. If there be no Government wharf there, of course the amendment is absolutely void; but the language of the amendment provides for the repair of Government property, and the Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 11, noes 7.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina demands tellers. Those in favor of ordering tellers will please rise and stand until they are counted. Evidently not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused. The amendment is agreed to——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, how many Members rose in response to the call for tellers?

The CHAIRMAN. On the division there were 11 in the affirmative and 7 in the negative. On the call for tellers only four Members rose.

Mr. WALSH. There is a point of no quorum pending, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Is it too late to put the question on the demand for tellers?

The CHAIRMAN. No; not if there is any doubt about the count; but the point of no quorum has been made.

Mr. WALSH. We are not going to have any jockeying around on the question of tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. On the division there were—ayes 11, noes 7, or 18 Members voting. Evidently there were not enough Members to sustain the call for tellers; but in view of the suggestion of the chairman of the committee, the Chair is perfectly willing to submit the question again.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I renew the call for tellers.

Mr. WALSH. And I renew the point of no quorum.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will ask the gentleman to let us have the call for tellers submitted again. I want the membership of the committee to have an opportunity to vote on the question.

Mr. MONDELL. If the House has reached a point where amendments are to be agreed to for which no estimates have been submitted and for work that as far as we know the Government never undertook, it seems to me that we should have a quorum here, so that we can legislate intelligently.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the point of no quorum withdrawn?

Mr. WALSH. In view of the statement of the gentleman in charge of the bill that he desires to have the question submitted again, I will withdraw the point, but will not agree not to renew it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina demands tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina and Mr. BLAND of Virginia.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 8, noes 17.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WALSH. In view of the multitude who are present I will not renew the point of no quorum. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Flood control: For prosecuting work of flood control in accordance with the provisions of the flood-control act approved March 1, 1917, as follows:

Mississippi River, $6,670,000, to remain available until expended.

Mr. WALSH. I make a point of order on that paragraph. The provision that this item shall remain available until expended is clearly subject to a point of order.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It is not subject to a point of order, because there is a statute which says that river and harbor appropriations shall be available until expended.

Mr. WALSH. But this particular item is for flood control.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. What is the point of order?

Mr. WALSH. My point of order is against the words "to remain available until expended."

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts state his point of order again?

Mr. WALSH. This item is for prosecuting the work of flood control under the flood-control act approved March 1, 1917. There is an appropriation of $6,670,000, and the item contains the following language:

To remain available until expended.

Now, there is no authorization in the flood-control act of March 1, 1917, that appropriations made shall remain available until expended. If there is any such provision in that act, then certainly there is no need for carrying this language in the sundry civil bill.

My point of order to the provision is that it shall remain available until expended. That is legislation.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The statute provides this:

That from and after the 1st day of July, 1874, and of each year thereafter, the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause all unexpended balances of appropriations which shall have remained upon the books of the Treasury for two fiscal years to be carried to the surplus fund and covered into the Treasury: Provided, That this provision shall not apply to permanent specific appropriations, appropriations for rivers and harbors, lighthouses, fortifications, public buildings, or the pay of the Navy and Marine Corps; but the appropriations named in this proviso shall continue available until otherwise ordered by Congress.

This, by its language, is for the Mississippi River and an appropriation for a river.

Mr. WALSH. I know, but this is the same appropriation, the same sum that was appropriated last year, $6,670,000. The appropriation made last year was not to remain available until expended. It was a flat appropriation to be expended within the limits of the fiscal year. Here is an appropriation for $6,670,000, and you want to spread it out.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It has always been ruled that it is available as a part of the appropriation provided, but if the gentleman wants to change it I am willing that he should do so.

Mr. WALSH. This is not a river and harbor appropriation.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The statute says for rivers and public buildings.

Mr. WALSH. That does not include the statute of March 1, 1917. It names rivers and harbors and public buildings, but the act which the gentleman read was passed long prior to the act of March 1, 1917.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. There is nothing in the law that says that it shall be appropriations in the river and harbor bill—it says that money expended on rivers and harbors. This is a part of the river which has been authorized for continuous improvement. The Secretary of War has been authorized and directed to make certain improvements for navigation, for flood control, the only limitation being that he could not expend more on the Mississippi River—or the Mississippi River Commission could not expend more than $10,000,000 annually. It is for the improvement of the river nevertheless; the law does not say that it applies to items carried in the river and harbor bill.

Mr. WALSH. I know; but that act was passed long before the act of 1917. My contention is, Mr. Chairman, that this appropriation is the result of a specific and particular act, approved by the President March 1, 1917, for flood-control work.

We have thrashed out on the floor on one or two occasions the question whether this was river and harbor work. It is the work of another character that does not bring it within the terms of the existing law. This is a subsequent statute and you are attempting to make an appropriation available until it is expended.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. If the gentleman will pardon me, the Mississippi River Commission was created and the project was adopted by Congress and the commission authorized to do the work thirty-odd years ago.

Mr. WALSH. And this appropriation is not made by legislative authority of 30 years ago.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. What Congress did in the flood-control act of March 1, 1917, was simply to authorize the Secretary of War to take this particular stream and complete the project theretofore adopted within the limits prescribed of $45,000,000 provided that the commission did not expend more than $10,000,000 in one year. Under that they have gone along, except in rare instances when there was any money left on the 1st of July, and carried it over into the next year. That has happened ever since the commission was created in 1881, I think, therefore, that the gentleman's point is untenable. This law was passed subsequent to the general statute which the gentleman from South Carolina just read.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Massachusetts realizes that there will be no difficulty in carrying an amendment with this sum should this go out on a point of order which is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. MONDELL. Then I did not catch the trend of the gentleman's purpose.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I understand the gentleman makes the point of order against the language "available until expended."

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. I understand the only gentleman opposed to the item was the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], who was criticizing the commission on account of the extravagance. Was this the item?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. This is one of the good items. Mr. Chairman, can I say a word on the point of order? I merely want to state, Mr. Chairman, that this point of order was made to the item of the Mississippi River, $6,700,000 and the provision that it be available until expended. This provision in the law that gives authority to that appropriation does not say for improvement of rivers and maintenance of rivers, but it says that it shall not apply to a permanent specific appropriation for rivers and harbors.

This is an appropriation for the Mississippi River, $6,607,000 to remain available until expended. It could not come any more clearly under that proviso. It has always been carried that way. It is a continuous appropriation. You do not have to expend it within the fiscal year.

Mr. WALSH. Then what is the necessity for the language?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. It is not necessary at all; but it is there, and because it is there does not invalidate the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman to state that the words "to remain available until expended" are not necessary?

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I do not think they are necessary, because it is not one of those appropriations that go back to the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman send up the statute?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, of course at the time the statute of 1874 was passed the language used, "appropriations for rivers and harbors," was applicable to river and harbor appropriation bills, which, although sometimes never become a law, we have always with us. This is an entirely new activity and a new class of appropriation. It was not necessary in passing the flood-control act of 1917 to put a clause in there specifically taking it out of the statute of 1874. Last year they appropriated $6,670,000 in the sundry civil appropriation bill, and that appropriation was not to remain available until expended. Nobody ever dreams that an appropriation of $6,000,000 for the Mississippi River will not be expended within the 12 months. Of course it will.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Of course it will and ought to be.

Mr. WALSH. Then why make this available until expended? Why, if there should be but $1,000,000 expended, should the balance not properly go to increasing the appropriation for vocational rehabilitation of soldiers? If they can not expend this amount within 12 months, it ought to go back into the Treasury so it can be used for that worthy purpose, as the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the distinguished Senator, soon to be, was urging earlier in the day.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], I was under the impression, wanted the item to go out. I gained that impression from his discussion this afternoon, when he called attention to a lot of other things he thought ought not to be in this bill. He has not seen fit so far to advise the gentleman from Massachusetts that there is a most excellent reason for this provision in connection with this appropriation. There is always a very considerable "hang over," if I may use that term, in an appropriation of this kind. It is impossible to expend this sort of appropriation on the kind of work it is used to carry on, without having contracts that extend beyond the fiscal year and without overlapping work. There is, or will be at the end of the present fiscal year, some moneys from the year before which will be used next year. There has always been upon the Mississippi River overlapping funds. The moneys can be best expended and most advantageously expended when the funds are used in that way. It is impossible to stop short at the end of the fiscal year a work of this kind and have it done economically.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubts that as to the merits of the proposition the gentleman from Wyoming has given very sound reasons, but I submit that this language in this appropriation is not authorized by law and that it is legislation, and I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The point of order is made to the following paragraph:

Flood control: For prosecuting work of flood control in accordance with the provisions of the flood-control act approved March 1, 1917, as follows:

"Mississippi River, $5,670,000, to remain available until expended."

The act of 1874 is as follows:

That from and after the 1st day of July, 1874, and of each year thereafter, the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause all unexpended balances of appropriations which shall have remained upon the books of the Treasury for two fiscal years to be carried to the surplus fund and covered into the Treasury: Provided, That this provision shall not apply to permanent specific appropriations, appropriations for rivers and harbors, lighthouses, fortifications, public buildings, or the pay of the Navy and Marine Corps; but the appropriations named in this proviso shall continue available until otherwise ordered by Congress.

It is contended that inasmuch as Congress has seen fit to create a separate committee, known as the Flood Control Committee, and given that committee jurisdiction of all appropriations for the control of flood waters, that the exception in favor of appropriations for rivers and harbors contained in the proviso of the act of 1874 only goes to appropriations made by the Rivers and Harbors Committee and not to appropriations within the jurisdiction of the Flood Control Committee.

In order to determine this question it is necessary to analyze the purpose that Congress had in enacting the statute of 1874. It is evident that Congress at that time realized that there are certain classes of public work that can be prosecuted more economically by continuous work, and that in the very nature of things the work must be uninterrupted, and for that reason it covered the appropriations for that class of work by the proviso in the act of 1874, which provided that appropriations made for that class of public work shall continue available until otherwise ordered by Congress.

This proviso does not undertake to say that appropriations of a certain character for rivers and harbors shall continue available, but it specifically provides for "appropriations for rivers." This language covers all appropriations for rivers of whatever character and proposed by any committee of Congress. The test is not what committee reports the appropriation; but is the appropriation for rivers? If the appropriation is for rivers or for a river, then the proviso of the act of 1874 covers the appropriation regardless of whether it is reported by the Rivers and Harbors Committee, by the Flood Control Committee, or by any other committee to which the Congress by its rules and for its own convenience and for the purpose of intelligent consideration may have assigned jurisdiction.

The act of March, 1917, under which the pending item is provided for, specifically provides for a continuing work on the Mississippi River, with a limit of $45,000,000, with a proviso that not more than $10,000,000 of the total shall be expended in any one year. This appropriation is certainly an "appropriation for rivers," and is further an appropriation for a project of the class that was evidently in the mind of Congress when it enacted the act of 1874, and therefore falls clearly within that class of appropriations which by the proviso of that act shall continue available.

For these reasons the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I offer to amend on line 13, page 66, by striking out the figures "$6,670,000" and inserting "$3,250,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 66, line 13, strike out "$6,670,000" and insert "$3,250,000."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment in view of the fact that it is admitted apparently they will be unable to expend this sum of money in the work on the Mississippi flood control during the coming year, and apparently they have not been able to expend this vast appropriation during the past year. I do not know whether it is due to the work that has already been done under this activity of the Government, but certainly this past year or 18 months that section of the country has not suffered unduly from floods and there has been no great loss of life or damage to property by reason of this river overflowing its banks or breaking through the levee. Now, it seems to me when we get to appropriating money for this work in sums of $6,670,000, when we have a bill containing items for placing headstones and monuments to the soldiers of the Republic who have died either in the service or after they have been discharged, and that the gentleman from Mississippi criticizes these appropriations and contrasts them with the lack of enthusiasm on the part of the majority of this committee to increase the appropriation for rehabilitation purposes, that here is a chance for his magnanimous soul to indicate his generosity and be willing to cut in half the appropriation for the great river which empties into the Gulf not far from his district and leave in the Treasury $3,000,000 which may be available, perhaps, if his motion to recommit should prevail, for the worthy object for which he plead so eloquently and ably earlier in the session of the committee. Now, I think the gentleman will admit that $3,000,000 in that section will do a vast amount of work apparently as there has been no serious damage done to the banks or levees of the river during the last winter or fall or spring or summer or whatever time of the year the river usually undertakes to go on a rampage, I believe it is usually in the spring, and I trust the gentleman will not assume that I am offering this amendment in any spirit of opposition to the work but purely with the idea of economizing on some of these larger appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. WALSH) there were—ayes 6, noes 10.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Survey of northern and northwestern lakes: For survey of northern and northwestern lakes, Lake of the Woods, and other boundary and connecting waters between said lake and Lake Superior, Lake Champlain, and the natural navigable waters embraced in the navigation system of the New York canals, including all necessary expenses for preparing, correcting, extending, printing, binding, and issuing charts and bulletins, and of investigating lake levels with a view to their regulation, $125,000.

Mr. WALSH and Mr. GARD rose.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, if I may be recognized, I desire to ask some information of the chairman of the Committee on Flood Control concerning this item about a survey of the northern and northwestern lakes. I am led to make the inquiry because I think this Congress, in establishing the Committee on Flood Control, had in mind a very useful thing, and I am interested to know whether the question of flood control is being intelligently pursued, and I note from this item—survey of northern and northwestern lakes—that certain surveys are attempted. I therefore ask the chairman of the Committee on Flood Control, now that he has returned, whether this item of survey of northern lakes, Lake of the Woods, and so forth, are embraced under the activities of his committee?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. They are not.

Mr. GARD. Do I understand that the only item that has to do with flood control is the item of the Mississippi River?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The only two projects in the United States, according to the report of the engineers, which were ready for congressional action were the Mississippi River and the Sacramento River in California.

Mr. GARD. In all seriousness, does not the gentleman think in the length of time this Committee on Flood Control has been in existence that they should intelligently have sought to develop some form of flood control, not to pick out two rivers that happen to flow in the territory, and that is my understanding, of members of the Committee on Flood Control, but to get down to a basis of a system of flood control where flood control should be operated? I assume, of course, that it could best be done under the Corps of Engineers. What I am leading up to is to ask the gentleman, now that he is here, does he understand the report of the engineers to call for a yearly expenditure of $6,670,000 on the Mississippi River?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The report of the engineers of the Mississippi River Commission called for an expenditure of $10,000,000 as authorized by the act of Congress. But the committee saw fit to cut that to $6,670,000, which, I think, in view of the emergency, is reasonable.

Mr. GARD. You mean the lack of emergency. There is no emergency at the present time, nor was there one last year caused by a flood in any of the reaches of the Mississippi River. What I want to get at is whether the flood-control system such as the committee has developed, and I am critical in what it has developed, and honestly critical, is embraced only in this sum of $6,670,000 which yearly must be appropriated for the Mississippi River? Is there anything else to be done? Has the committee anything else in mind?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Of course, if the gentleman does not understand there is any emergency facing this country, I think it hopeless for me to give him any information.

Mr. GARD. I think there is an emergency. There is a country-wide emergency, and the Committee on Flood Control was created, and I would be glad to have the plan of action and I am sure the country would.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman that the committee should go about this matter intelligently, and I think the committee did go about it intelligently. The gentleman from Ohio did not think that, and made a very vigorous protest at the time to the House, but was not able to get enough gentlemen to agree to his view, even to the extent of calling for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GARD. That is not convincing at all.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It was not at all convincing, inasmuch as the gentleman, as I said, could not get enough to agree to his views to even have the roll called. It was thoroughly unconvincing. But the position which the Flood Control Committee took, having been submitted to the House, after three days of very illuminating debate, was thoroughly convincing to the House, so much so that the bill was passed, as I recall it, by a vote of 186 to 19. So much for the intelligent manner in which the committee treated the subject over the protests and suggestions of the gentleman from Ohio.

Now, Mr. Chairman, on the 6th of April, 1917, what the rest of us have since then considered a great emergency arose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman be given five additional minutes.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I object. Let us get down to the bill.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. This is not relevant to this particular section that provides for the charting of the lakes. They are discussing the flood control and their positions relative to the same. I would be glad if they would let us go on, because the time is getting short.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I have no desire to delay. I will withdraw the request. The gentleman from Ohio called upon me to enlighten the House and the country, and I assumed he spoke for both, and therefore I wanted to accommodate him.

Mr. GARD. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be permitted one minute so that I can ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. HAYES. I object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. For a number of years I have been receiving—and I suppose in company with other Members—charts showing surveys of the northwestern lakes. I rise to inquire what is meant by continuing in this bill the $125,000 appropriation every year?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The appropriation is carried for the purpose of enabling these people to chart the lakes, which the maritime interests on the lakes say is more absolutely essential at this time than ever before, and the estimate asked for is far in excess of the appropriation.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was under the impression that this work was performed by the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It is performed by these people, and the appropriation has been made $125,000 for a number of years. Nevertheless they are urging that the condition of the lakes, and they urged it in a very forcible manner, demanded additional charting of area.

Mr. STAFFORD. Am I in error in assuming that the Coast and Geodetic Survey has not made a survey of the Great Lakes?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The survey is conducted under this item here.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of crews and maintenance of patrol fleet, six steam tugs and one launch, $90,000;
In all, $100,260.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from South Carolina what fleet is this? What patrol fleet is that in New York Harbor?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It is under the Chief of Engineers, to prevent dumping of refuse in New York Harbor.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is in the Engineer Department?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Appliances for disabled soldiers: For furnishing surgical appliances to persons disabled in the military or naval service of the United States prior to October 6, 1917, and not entitled to artificial limbs or trusses for the same disabilities, $500.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman having charge of the bill explain the reason for inserting in this paragraph the limitation as to those who would be entitled to receive this aid to those who were injured prior to October 6, 1917?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Because the insurance act provides for those who were injured after that. During this war they are provided for under the war insurance act. This provides only for those who were injured in the Civil War and in the Spanish-American War.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For farm, including the same objects specified under this head for the Central Branch, $9,000; in all, $441,000.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARD: Page 72, line 25, after the period, insert:

"Provided, That jurisdiction and control over said Southern Branch shall be reinvested in the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers on or about May 1, 1920."

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I reserve a point of order on that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina and the gentleman from Missouri reserve points of order on the amendment.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I am led to offer this amendment by the receipt of a petition from certain members of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers who are now resident at the Central Branch at Dayton, Ohio. The petition is worded in such a direct, simple, and beautiful way as I think must carry a very pertinent appeal to all persons here, and therefore as part of my statement I will read the petition:

CENTRAL BRANCH, N. H. D. V. S.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, greeting:

Subject: To be returned to the Southern Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers at Hampton, Va.

We concede the fact, that as veteran soldiers of the Civil War and other wars, our prayer should be answered in the affirmative by the honorable Members of the Congress, inasmuch as many of your petitioners have wife, children, and grandchildren residing in and about Hampton, Phoebus, and Newport News, Va.

Indigent circumstances deprive us from bringing these dear ones to Dayton, Ohio (our present abode), and all we ask is simple justice and that you put yourself in our place for the nonce and act accordingly.

We urgently wish to return to Virginia. Of the nearly 500 ex-members of the Southern Branch now here, a vast majority come directly from Pennsylvania, New York, and Maryland, with our loved ones distant only 12 hours by rail away.

The Congress saved the South Dakota Sanitarium to the veterans; we ask simple justice of you to restore our old home to the undersigned, who gave their all to save our country from disruption.

We are aware that the Southern Branch has fulfilled its mission and is now almost vacated.

Individually and collectively we haven't a word derogatory to express against the Central Branch or its conduct. It is simply a longing to be nearer to those we love and cherish.

The petition is signed by some 500 veterans of the Civil War, of the Spanish-American War, and of other wars. When the act of October 4, 1918, was carried into effect these members were transferred from the Hampton Home to the Central Branch Home at Dayton, Ohio. Now, I am strongly in accord with their wish, and I entertain rather an advanced idea of the utility of these soldiers' homes, because I think they should be used in the best possible way. I did not offer any objection, and I do not offer any objection now, to the use of the Hampton Branch Home as a hospital. I think it is aiding in a great purpose, and I would not for a moment wish that it be deterred from continuing its great purpose. It is used as a branch hospital where our soldier boys returning from foreign shores are temporarily placed until they can be sent to other and more permanent hospitals or to their homes. I would not think of offering this amendment if I had not first communicated with the office of the Surgeon General, and Col. Smith, in charge of the office, advises me that, so far as his best information goes—it is impossible to be definite—they will not need for hospital purposes the soldiers' home at Hampton any longer than a year from this time. Now, in order to afford the fullest opportunity for its use, the amendment I present provides that it shall not be transferred back or revested, in the language of the old bill, until on or before May 1, 1920, my idea being that in that length of time its use as a hospital will be fully terminated.

The language of the act of October 4, 1918, provides that it shall be returned to the board of managers. The transfer was but a temporary one, and that which the amendment seeks to carry into effect is the fixing of a date when, after the conclusion of the hospital work, the soldiers' home at Hampton, Va., may be returned to the board of managers.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. DYER. How many are included in this petition whom the gentleman would have sent back to the Southern Branch?

Mr. GARD. I do not have them sent back. I am simply presenting their petition.

Mr. DYER. How many are there that the gentleman's amendment is intended to send back?

Mr. GARD. The petition, which I read, states:

Of the nearly 500 ex-members of the Southern Branch now here a vast majority come directly from Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Maryland, with our loved ones distant only 12 hours by rail away.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman is speaking of the Central Branch. They are now at the Central Branch?

Mr. GARD. They are now at the Central Branch.

Mr. DYER. Can the gentleman tell us how many soldiers there are at the Central Branch at this time?

Mr. GARD. I think there are in the neighborhood of 3,000.

Mr. DYER. And the facilities there are for how many?

Mr. GARD. With the 500 there may be more than 3,000 there now. There may be possibly between 3,500 and 4,000. There have been as many as 4,000 or 4,500 members there.

Mr. DYER. The place is not crowded at all?

Mr. GARD. Oh, no. These people are being well cared for. There is no question about that. This is the situation: The gentleman probably knows it as well as I do, since he has given very intelligent attention to the subject. The gentleman has visited Dayton, and they were very proud to have him there when he was commander in chief of the Spanish War Veterans.

The situation regarding these homes is that the older men, men who have some little means and who have families, who wish to be with their wives or families, desire to live outside the home. They rent little cottages. They utilize such money as they get for the rental of small cottages, and seek to live with their wives just outside the reservation of the home. This is the situation more particularly with regard to the home at Hampton, Va., than it is at Dayton, even. The mildness of the climate down there appeals to the older members of the home at Dayton who formerly lived at Hampton, Va. The two controlling things in their minds, as I can advise the members of the committee, are that they want to get back there, because it is near their homes. They want to get back and be as near their families as they can, and they want also to enjoy the mild, pleasant climate down at Hampton.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Did not the act transferring the home for hospital purposes transfer it only for the period of the war?

Mr. GARD. Section 2 of the act provides that upon the close of the war, or as soon thereafter as may be practicable, the Secretary of War shall cause said home to be vacated by the medical department of the Army, and thereupon jurisdiction and control over said home shall revert to said Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

The only thing which the amendment seeks to carry into effect is to fix an outside date, a far limit, by which the time may be established when this return can be made, and that date I have fixed after consultation with the Surgeon General's office.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I must insist on the point of order, because, as the gentleman has read, the law now provides that this home shall be turned over to the Army for the use of a hospital, to receive wounded soldiers as they return and shall so continue until the close of the war, or as soon thereafter as practicable. This amendment would change existing law, and would be legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For farm, including the same objects specified under this head for the Central Branch, $5,000.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 76, after line 17, insert the following as a new paragraph:

"For increase of present water supply, including the purchase of land and pipe line, $10,000."

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered seeks to appropriate $10,000 for additional water supply for the Battle Mountain Sanitarium at Hot Springs. The present water supply was donated by two Hot Springs ladies, Mrs. Martin and Mrs. Miner, her mother, at the time the institution was established.

My remembrance is they donated half of what is known as the Mammoth Spring, and that amounts to a flow of about 500 gallons per minute. The institution has grown to be a larger one than was then contemplated. The grounds have become more spacious and the gardens are larger, and they have need of more water. Last year and the year before the water supply was not sufficient through the summer season.

The reason this item did not come regularly was due to the fact that at the time the estimates were being prepared there was prospect that the institution would be temporarily transferred to the War Department for hospital purposes.

The matter of additional water supply had been considered by the chief engineer and by the governor of the institution, by a representative of the board of managers, and by the committee of the Surgeon General's office who inspected the sanitarium.

In discussing the matter the Surgeon General's office was of the opinion that if the institution be transferred to the War Department, they could take care of the increased water supply out of existing lump-sum appropriations. At that time it was thought that there was no doubt the transfer would be made, and so the board of managers did not include the item in their estimates, thinking that when the transfer was made the War Department would take care of the item.

The transfer was not made to the War Department and apparently will not be made. We are confronted with a shortage of water and we know, too, that there has passed the Senate an item in a general hospital bill which seeks to make available all unused space in this institution for the care of these discharged soldiers and sailors of the present war for whom the War Risk Bureau is obligated to care. I hope we will not come to next summer season without provision for additional water supply.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GANDY. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Of whom is it intended to buy the water rights, from the same people who made the gift of the water?

Mr. GANDY. Yes; I was just coming to that.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is the objection to these gifts. They always come around afterwards and want to sell it. I am not criticizing these splendid ladies in this instance, but every time we come to a gift we run up against this proposition.

Mr. GANDY. I may say that the donation was 15 or 18 years ago, and there was no thought at that time that an additional water supply would be needed. This is a gravity water supply, water from the hot springs flowing down to the institution, and there is still available in the same canyon additional springs that can be purchased.

Mr. DYER. How many soldiers are there at the home now?

Mr. GANDY. Three hundred and thirty at this time.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman is proposing to transfer this branch to the War Department for use as a hospital.

Mr. GANDY. Not now. The bill authorizing the transfer failed of passage.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GANDY. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I dislike to object, and I would not do so if the amendment is in order. But if it is not I must insist on the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman withhold it for just one moment?

Mr. GANDY. I do not concede the point of order.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I make the point of order that there is no authority for it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard on this. There is a water system at this institution. It is a Government institution. Every step of the way this institution has been authorized by law. I maintain that the same authority that established the institution, that appropriated the money for the building of the pipe lines and everything incident to the completion of the institution, is authority now for the increasing of the water supply when it is found to be deficient.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman contend that an amendment seeking to purchase land would be in order on an appropriation bill?

Mr. GANDY. The amendment seeking to purchase land is only in connection with the springs.

Mr. WELLING. It is a right of way.

Mr. GANDY. It is a right of way. You can not purchase the springs without purchasing the land, unless you have a bucket to carry the water away with. I desire now to yield to the gentleman from Wyoming, who is acquainted with the situation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina withhold his point of order?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, on an appropriation bill we certainly can not appropriate to purchase lands not authorized by law.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to argue the point of order with my colleague on the committee. As this matter has been raised, and as I have some information on the subject, I would like to make a brief statement.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I withhold the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. I am fairly well acquainted with the condition at Battle Mountain Sanitarium. It is quite near my home. The water supply is somewhat deficient. There has never been as liberal a water supply as there should be. The present supply was, I think, a gift from some relatives of ex-Congressman Martin. It is now proposed to add to that water supply by purchasing some small springs in the same locality.

Mr. GANDY. Mr. Chairman, let me interrupt the gentleman to say that they are not small springs. The springs proposed to be purchased have a capacity of around 800 gallons per minute.

Mr. MONDELL. I did not mean that they were small springs in the sense that they were not entirely adequate, because they are, but they are not as large as some of the very large springs that furnish the water at Hot Springs. An additional water supply is needed. There is no question about that. Word came to me in regard to the matter after we had considered the items of the bill, and this is the first opportunity I have had of expressing an opinion in regard to it. If the way were open to provide for the purchase, I think it would be well to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina insist upon his point of order?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I find myself compelled to do so. No information from anyone connected with the home was given to the committee. I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, $4,716,850.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, do I understand the gentleman is about to move to rise?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. As soon as we finish this particular portion of the bill.

Mr. DYER. I wanted to ask the gentleman a question in regard to this item. The amount carried here is $4,716,850. That is more than was carried in the last appropriation bill.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. There is an increase for the reason that the increased cost of all supplies necessitated a slight increase for subsistence at every one of these homes.

Mr. DYER. But the number of soldiers in the homes has decreased.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is true, but you have got to have just as much coal to heat the buildings, and they have had to spend more money this year for that.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, that is one of the reasons why the National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers are not in my judgment all that we would like to have them in this respect. Of course we want to give the best we have in this country to these old soldiers, but here we have in the soldiers' homes an expenditure going on to $5,000,000, a substantial increase over the last year, and yet we know that many of these old soldiers died since the last appropriation bill. How they are able to increase the expenditures, with the number of soldiers decreasing, is explained by only one thing, and that is that the soldiers' homes are to-day filled up and honeycombed with civilian employees, whose jobs are the result in many respects of political patronage and appointments.

And instead of the old soldiers getting the benefit of this home the money is going largely to pay salaries of men outside, officers of the board and hundreds and hundreds of civilian employees. In fact, Mr. Chairman, I know it as a matter of fact in the past, and I believe it is so to-day, that where there is opportunity to give employment and pay some of these small wages to the soldiers themselves who are able to do some work very little opportunity is given them, but civilians are brought in and paid this money and we go on appropriating and voting for it believing that we are doing it for the benefit of the soldiers, and Members of the House, if we rise in our places and call attention to it, oftentimes have criticisms made that we are not trying to help these unfortunate veterans of the war when as a matter of fact I believe that the country has not anything too good for these old soldiers and for their dependents, too.

But, Mr. Chairman, we ought to see that the money goes for the benefit of the soldiers, and not for the benefit of civilians who are feeding and fattening upon the money appropriated for carrying on the work of taking care of these old veterans. And an effort is being made, I think largely by the board of managers of these homes, to try to find some way of taking in now some boys of the present war. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that in my judgment they are violating the law when they are doing so, and I hope that this Congress will not permit the enlarging of the powers of these homes to take in soldiers from this war in order that these jobs may be continued for the benefit of a lot of politicians.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no part of the foregoing appropriations shall be expended for any purpose at any branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers that maintains or permits to be maintained on its premises a bar, canteen, or other place where beer, wine, or other intoxicating liquors are sold.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. Mr. Chairman, this section will not become effective under this bill until the 1st of July. Now, we know there is a law on the statute books that provides not only that there shall not be any saloons or bars in the soldiers' homes, but there shall not be any anywhere in the United States; so I do not see the necessity for expending the money of the people in printing something that is of no use and no meaning. I move to strike it out.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman is not in earnest at all. The war prohibition act provides several exceptions, and one of these is a governmental exception. It might be possible that the governors of the soldiers' homes would attempt to reestablish the canteen on the basis that it was a governmental exception from the war prohibition act.

Mr. DYER. Does the gentleman think that after the 1st of July we will be able to continue barrooms or create barrooms on Government property?

Mr. RANDALL. Hardly, except that under that theory they might call it a governmental use.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman thinks the House Office Building will be dry?

Mr. RANDALL. I hardly think the gentleman from Missouri is in accord with the sentiment of his own State, which ratified the prohibition amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on striking out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. DYER) there were—ayes 6, noes 15.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I very seriously differ from the gentleman from Missouri, who lately spoke regarding the use of these governmental homes for disabled soldiers, by the soldiers of the present war, the war in which the United States of America has been engaged. I think it is the highest duty of every American citizen, whether he be here in this Congress or anywhere else, to afford every opportunity which can be afforded for the care and betterment of the returned soldiers who in foreign fields have borne American arms. These soldiers' homes were created for disabled American soldiers; they have been used for the purpose of sheltering and caring for veterans of every American war, and there is no reason why they can not now be used to take care of men who come back from our foreign fighting fronts. The gentleman from Missouri the other day made an objection to a bill which had for its purpose the clarifying of the atmosphere relative to the admission to the National Military Home.

But I say that under the present law it is my opinion that men of the American Army to-day and of the American Army at any time during this present war emergency are entitled to admission to national military homes if they are disabled and if they are indigent, and for one I will see that every opportunity for their care in national military homes is afforded.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Would the gentleman prefer to have them in these homes as objects of charity than to giving them proper pensions so that they can live decently?

Mr. GARD. No, sir; I would have no American soldier an object of charity.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, just a moment. I think the soldiers' homes are well conducted. I think they are economically managed. There are no men carrying on Government activities and who appear before the Committee on Appropriations who present as clear and definite and understandable statements with regard to their expenditures as the managers of the soldiers' homes. They know exactly where they have spent their money, how they have spent it, and what they have spent it for. They give the committee full and complete information with regard to their expenditures.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. There is every evidence that they carefully consider their expenditures.

Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman tell the committee approximately how much of this $4,716,850 is to be used for the feeding and housing of the veterans and how much of it is to be used for paying salaries and for feeding and other things for the employees?

Mr. MONDELL. My friend has the appropriations before him and he can go through the different items and foot them up. He is as good a mathematician as I am, I am sure.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman is a member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MONDELL. It is no part of the business of the Appropriations Committee to separate those items. The soldiers' homes are, in my opinion, well managed and the soldiers are well cared for.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Does the gentleman know that the soldiers, the old veterans who have fought and who saved the Union, are not given the same quality and variety of food as civilian employees are given in these homes?

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman can, on his responsibility as a Member, say that that is so——

Mr. DYER. That is so.

Mr. MONDELL. I have not visited the homes, and so I shall not challenge his statement to that effect. But I nevertheless believe the soldiers are well cared for.

Now, with regard to the opening of the soldiers' homes to the soldiers of the present war, I agree with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] that under the law they are entitled to admission to these homes. Furthermore they are being admitted to the homes. And the estimates in this bill are allowed with the fact in view that the soldiers of the present war are being admitted to the homes in considerable number.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman one question in his time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. DYER. I move to strike out the last two words. I simply wanted to do that, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of calling the gentleman's attention to what I believe is a fact, and that is, that the law creating the soldiers' homes was specifically created, and it was so stated in the original act, for the benefit of the Union veterans of the Civil War. Those who served in the Spanish War were later added. No amendment has ever been added to that act by this Congress to include the veterans of this present war.

Mr. MONDELL. An amendment to the act includes the veterans of the Spanish War—and I do not know whether there are any later campaigns specifically referred to or not—and other wars in which the United States has been engaged.

Mr. DYER. Yes; wars in which this Nation has been engaged; but that was passed before this war was declared.

Mr. MONDELL. Has not the United States been engaged in this war? Of course it has and the law applies.

The Clerk read as follows:

For arrears of pay and allowances on account of service of officers and men of the Army during the War with Spain and in the Philippine Islands that may be certified to be due by the accounting officer of the Treasury during the fiscal year 1920 and that are chargeable to the appropriations that has been carried to the surplus fund, $500.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. GARD having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. CARAWAY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 16104) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 5999. An act for the establishment of Gulfport, Miss., as a port of entry and delivery for immediate transportation without appraisement of dutiable merchandise; and

H. R. 171. An act to repeal the last proviso of section 4 of an act to establish the Rocky Mountain National Park, in the State of Colorado, and for other purposes, approved January 26, 1915.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW—11 O'CLOCK A. M.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, do I understand that it is the intention to go on to-morrow with the sundry civil bill?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No; the bond bill comes up to-morrow.

Mr. STAFFORD. They are to take up the bond bill at 4 o'clock.

Mr. WALSH. Has that been stated to the House?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It was stated to the House before.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would state that the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. KITCHIN] announced that he would call up the bond bill at 4 o'clock to-morrow afternoon. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 8 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned, pursuant to the order previously agreed to, until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 25, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m.
